NIGHT LIFE OF THE GODS: Alan Mowbray—This is not as bad as I thought it would be. Read several very bad reports on it. Advertised it as the silliest and craziest picture of the year (after reading reports in this column on it). I felt that if people came they would know what to expect. Many said they really liked it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

NIGHT LIFE OF THE GODS: Alan Mowbray—Guess this picture is over the heads of yours truly and his customers. Many walkouts, no business second night, and we were almost ashamed to face the patrons as they came out. "Crime Without Passion" was a "winner" compared to this one.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

NOTORIOUS GENTLEMAN, A: Charles Bickford, Helen Vinson—Did not stand up on a double bill. Played June 28-29.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

PRINCESS O'HARA: Chester Morris, Jean Parker—One of the greatest surprises of the year. This picture seems to have everything that it takes to make a good picture. It went over with a bang here. I call it way above the average. Chester Morris and Jean Parker give excellent performances as do the rest of the cast. Three of the best comedians in Hollywood are in the cast.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

PRINCESS O'HARA: Jean Parker, Chester Morris—This is an extra good program picture; better than some of the socalled specials. Story fine; acting of stars and all the cast great. Clean and entertaining. Played July 5-6.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

STONE OF SILVER CREEK: Buck Jones, Noel Francis—Believe it or not, this picture holds our this year house record. I couldn't say any more. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 7-8.—J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—Everybody likes Joe E. Brown and this is one of his better pictures. Played to excellent business.—Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 16-17.—R. D. Ashman, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—Best Joe E. Brown picture we have played. Did extra business and pleased everyone. Played July 7-8-9.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—A fair picture and not so good at the box-office. I guess the public is fed up on Cagney and O'Brien. Why can't Warners give these boys a good story with their pictures. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 4-5-6.—E. W. Sokolowsky, New Rialto Theatre, New Britain, Conn. Small town patronage.

DINKY: Jackie Cooper, Mary Astor—Nice little picture. Drew fairly well.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

FLORENTINE DAGGER, THE: Donald Woods, Margaret Lindsay—This picture proved to be a disappointment and did not draw. Lowest weekend receipts in months. People here don't like foreign settings. Not up to Warner standard, whose product we found always dependable. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 12-13.—J. F. Sehlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

GOING HIGHBROW: Guy Kibbee, Zasu Pitts—A good comedy team in a picture that more than satisfied our weekend trade. Running time, 67 minutes. Played July 12-13.—R. D. Ashman, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. General patronage.

NIGHT AT THE RITZ, A: William Gargan, Patricia Ellis—The poorest picture made by Warner this year. Positively nothing to it. And what a roasting did we get. The same applies to "Maybe It's Love." By all means cancel them if you can. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 6.—J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, N. C. Small town and rural patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—Did please Vallee fans. Even made a few fans for him. Business above average. Running time, 95 minutes. Played June 30-July 2.—W. M. Allison, Mission Theatre, Clayton, N. M. General patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—This picture was well liked and we did very well. Running time, 95 minutes. Played July 1-2.—J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, N. C. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

BRAND OF HATE (William Steiner): Bob Steele, Lucille Brown—Good western. Bob Steele didn't do so much until the last reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

TERROR OF THE PLAINS (William Steiner): Tom Tyler, Roberta Gale—Not so good. Would have been a nice little western had it not been for the way the he-man fighting was carried on. After this picture all the western fans said that Tom Tyler was the world's sorriest fighter. Don't think I'll try any more Tyler for a while. Give him time to learn how to fight. (All the press sheets say that he is only twenty-one years old. Wonder where they get that? Or maybe I'm wrong!)—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

THOSE WE LOVE: Kenneth MacKenna, Lilyan Tashman—This picture is old, but it is a good show and the print I received was in good condition.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

TRAILING THE KILLER: Special—This was a big surprise for me. Drew the children and the old folks. too. And it seemed to please. Picture is pretty good and print was in good shape. Played it on Saturday as part of a double feature and business was O. K.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SUGAR PLUM PAPA: Clyde-Gribbon—Another of the old reissued comedies that was a howl. Plenty of laughs. There's only one way that the average movie-goer can tell these are old comedies and that's by the short dresses worn in them, but most of the audience thinks that the short dresses were intended for an added laugh, so that makes it O. K. Running time, 2 reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

MGM

ANNIVERSARY TROUBLE: Our Gang Series—Spanky carries the entire load in this "Gang" comedy and he was equal to the occasion. Plenty of chuckles.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

BEGINNER'S LUCK: Our Gang—Do not pass this Gang comedy. It is a peach.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

BURIED LOOT: The first of the "Crime Doesn't Pay" Series. Comment of one patron: "Worth the price of admission." Held the audience spellbound. Buy it, is our advice. Running time, 2 reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

ZION, CANYON OF COLOR: Fitzpatrick Travel Talks—This is one of the most beautiful travel pictures I have seen. The coloring is beautiful, the views are all very natural, and the songs "Home on the Range" and "When It's Springtime in the Rockies" add a great deal to the entertainment value of this short. Advertise it like a feature. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

WHY INVITE DISASTER?

With the tieup discussions still current in these pages, it is decidedly timely to call for immediate action against the deplorable tendency of theatremen who, even though unwillingly, are going much farther than half way in consummating cooperations with their local merchants and newspapers. Particularly do we refer to such dangerous practices as contributing to the cost of co-op ads, running credit trailers and accepting comprehensive lobby merchandise exhibits as part of run-of-the-mill promotions.

The major companies have spent fortunes to make star names household words. Years of patient effort and ingenuity have been expended to surround screen personalities with glamour, to envelop them with fairylike magic that makes their every movement important to millions everywhere in the world. Heads of great corporations aware of this profitable star-worship are willing to and do lay down fabulous amounts, make any concessions to tie these stars to their products.

Why should local merchants be allowed to get away with proportionately less?

We do not choose to judge the worth or weakness of any individual exploitation. Circumstances of operation or overly-keen competition may tempt an otherwise practical showman to go for hookups he ordinarily would pass up. But whatever the reason, there is little excuse for permitting so deplorable a condition to continue.

The use of internationally publicized star names, their photos and tieup stills in bartering for window displays, newspaper displays and other invaluable cooperations, are largely the exploiteer's stock-in-trade. The showman who allows himself to be tempted to trade for less than even is inviting disaster. He is setting a precedent which if not kept within reasonable bounds will strike hard at his very means of livelihood and engulf him eventually in a veritable cloudburst of destruction.

McCORMICK KNOWS

Coming from S. Barret McCormick, we bend an attentive ear to what the RKO Radio advertising and publicity head told the assembled conventioneers at the annual meeting in Chicago of that company. "It is the obligation of salesmen to team with the ad men and press agents," he said, according to Motion Picture Daily.

Barret knows whereof he speaks. As a former theatre manager of long and successful experience, he appreciates what these cooperations mean to the showman in the field and how successfully they react on receipts.

CLEARING HOUSE FOR IDEAS

The recent letter from Bernie Bernfield on slacker-members, published on this page in the issue of July 6, as was to be expected, has brought campaigns from some of the long silent who have promised in the future to take more seriously their obligations of membership.

May we say again that your Round Table acts mainly as a clearing house for ideas from the field and presents them so that all members may benefit.

But, in order to do so successfully week after week, there must be a representative showing from all parts. This cannot be had entirely unless the silent brothers we do not hear from sit down and tell us every now and then what they are doing to stimulate box-office grosses in return for the ideas they are obtaining from the contributions of other members appearing regularly in these pages.

ROADS AND MOTORS

On the back page of advertising manager Nick Carl's excellent four-page "Movie News" circulated in the theatres operated by Hall Industries, of Texas, appears a directory of the current week's attractions at all houses of the circuit which cover quite a large area.

Nick reasons today's roads and powerful motors bring the Hall theatres in the various towns within easy reaching distance of the picture-minded motorist who may head for a certain spot because of some particular feature he has seen advertised in the circuit's house organ.

A New York pastor, speaking at the church's final service before the summer's recess, we learn from the New York Herald Tribune, urged vacations for janitors and apartment house superintendents whom he classed among "the most neglected of all individuals in this respect." The speaker suggested that his scheme be brought about by petitions to the landlords, signed by as many tenants as possible, urging consideration for these hard-working employees.

Excellent suggestion, Reverend, and while you're at it, would it be asking too much to have you slip in the names of a few theatre managers.

Laby Beats Circus Day By Organizing Parade

That the coming of the "big tops" does not necessarily mean local theatre men must resign themselves to poor business is indicated in George Laby's excellent drive on "Goin' to Town" at the Victory, Holyoke, Mass. For George went right into the enemy's territory by organizing his own parade of bannered marchers and cars, following the route of the circus parade and showing his sales copy to the thousands along the line of march.

Favorite gag of our British brothers, the sandwich man, was also employed by Laby to good effect, he planting a number of these in the circus grounds (see photo) where they distributed heralds. These men were further used throughout the city, starting from the suburbs and walking back to town through the traffic sections.

Furniture store placed an elaborate living room in lobby with cutout of star reclining on chaise longue, cutout draped with smart costume and jewelry. Background had real curtains, windows, walls, floor lamps and a picture frame on the wall carried "come up and see me" copy. Then next to the box office was placed a frame with copy "follow the red line" and a red ribbon stretched from this point through the lobby with arrows and ending at the display.

Special applique shadowbox caught attention, grill work set piece of beaver board covered with marvellum paper, with room for ten stills illuminated from rear, as was central shadowbox. Front was of metal paper over beaver board, art work of cutout letters and cutout figures of West and the five leading men. All lobby and front displays were decorated further through florist supplying plants, ferns, etc.

Newspaper went for "famous figures contest" with page one announcement and followed this with banner spread. For ten passes, George got plenty of publicity in advance and follow-up with over 200 entries reported. Other newspaper stuff included breaks in foreign language papers.

Insurance Company Ties in With Lamm on "G Men"

Through a tieup with local insurance company on "G Men" Louie Lamm at the Palace in Lorain distributed folders with red "you're on the spot" copy imprinted on silhouette of gangster. Inside carried information on residence liability policy with theatre sticker attached. Leaflet was mailed to entire mailing list of insurance company.

A cooperative ad page was secured on a "G Men Puzzle contest," each ad containing description of world famous personalities or things. To those presenting correct list of answers guest tickets were awarded.

Booth's Color Week Sells "Becky Sharp"

What he terms an "Uptown Color Week" put over with the cooperation of all merchants on the theatre block has just been completed by Manager Billings Booth, of the Winter Garden, Jamestown, N. Y., and here is the story:

Bill had a color campaign plotted way ahead on "Becky Sharp" and to get cooperation of the stores, tied them into a double-truck on "Stranded" played two weeks before from the angle of "Stranded on North Main Street," the theatre thoroughfare, the idea being that if the folks found themselves stranded on that street, the merchants could take care of all wants.

This was put over by Booth at a morning meeting of the retailers at the theatre, and after the successful debut of the co-op pages, Bill called them in again and formed the Uptown Merchants' Association to promote business, with the Round Tabler of course appointed chairman.

He then pointed out the opportunity for a block sale to be called "Uptown Color Week" on the assumption that folks are attracted by bright colors (catch on) and suggested a sales drive to start with his next attraction "Paris In Spring" using such lines: "as colorful as Paris in Spring,—colorful values, colorful streets—our buyers went to Paris in Spring to secure these styles."

Every merchant went for the idea offering special values, decorating windows and fronts and putting out flags. Then came the job of getting permission to decorate the streets but this was finally overcome for with the new association behind him, Booth had a resolution passed that the stunt was aces if bond was put up. Insurance company on the block did so at cost which the merchants prorated.

The street and stores were blanketed with all manner of decoration and lights and four days before "Sharp" opened, Booth put on his big drive and sold the color all over the place including another co-op page, talk before Kiwanis Club on the new technicolor, lots of stories and a merchants' night a few days ahead when he put on a dressed-up country store party with $150 worth of merchandise as prizes.

The color activities covered a period of 17 days with the decorations up nine days and all concerned pleased with results.

STILL NINE DAYS TO QUIGLEY JULY DEADLINE

There remains sufficient time to put over plenty of plaque-winning entries for the Quigley July Awards as theatremen who would like to get in on this month's competitions still have nine big days to complete and and report their campaigns before the July deadline, midnight of Monday, August 5. Entries must be at this office, 1790 Broadway, by that time.

Judges for July are Neil F. Agnew, Paramount Pictures; Edward A. Finney, Republic Pictures, and Louis Frisch, Randforce Circuit.

Powell Voice Double Stunt on "Gondolier"

To find a male voice most closely resembling that of Dick Powell, Irv Windisch, the New York Strand's exploiteer-bridegroom, arranged a radio hookup with this in view for the premiere of "Broadway Gondolier" at that theatre. Contestants were asked to appear on the opening nite where they broadcast their efforts from a lobby microphone and in advance the station played up this tiein, plugs including the picture tune hits. Winner selected by listeners was to be known as the "Broadway Gondolier" and given a spot on the air.

Tying in with Powell's radio popularity other air gags were preview for radio columnists and reviewers and the playing of the songs on such hours as Powell's, Jolson's and Vallee's.

Smartly handled was the newspaper campaign in the form of telegrams from Jack Warner to Major Albert Warner, each ad marked "from the private files of Warner Brothers Pictures," subject of the wires being a discussion whether or not to play the picture or wait for cooler weather.

Quite a number of window tieups were made with leading piano and musical instrument stores, florists, department stores, and Postal Telegraph inserted heralds in all outgoing messages three days ahead in addition to planting posters in all local branch offices.

Summer colors were featured in the front with the title in five foot letters in electric studded colored lights. The arch was constructed on different levels in the center of which were enlargements of the stars. Highlights of the picture were placed at both ends of the arch and set in front of illuminated recessed frames. (See photo.)

Junior Police Hosted by Elliott for "Let 'Em Have It"

As a reward for their services in school zones, Doc Elliott, Alhambra, Canton, Ohio, invited junior police to a Saturday afternoon showing of "Let 'Em Have It," papers giving story front page spread.

Local jeweler tied in featuring cut of Virginia Bruce in their ads and copy "if it's a gift for the June bride, let 'em have it with a gift from"— Other merchants cooperated using cuts and picture title in their ads. Special announcements were made over public address system at wrestling matches and local ballrooms.

PARIS FRONT. Theatremen and artists on this side will no doubt be interested in the above shot of the front at the Madeleine Cinema, Paris, on "Sequoia" which overcomes the display difficulties occasioned by the steps down to the boxoffice. JEAN MOUNIER, ad manager, MGM French Branch, and M. LAPINERE, publicity director cooperated on the campaign.

And Now Mae Sponsors June Stage Wedding

Plenty of goin' in Ed Hart's "Goin' to Town" campaign at the Strand, Plainfield, N. J., one of the toppers being a stage wedding with all the fixin's. Wedding party paraded down the main aisle under spots with soprano and quartet giving that good ole "Oh, promise me." Flower girls, ring bearer and what have you were all on hand.

Cost of entire gag was laid off on the cooperating merchants, who also kicked in for cash for the honeymoon trip and gave a complete lineup of presents, such as house furniture, lingerie, luggage and all the accessories for bridesmaids, ushers, etc.

Many West Contests

Mae West impersonator street bally gathered a lot of giggles, the participants parading round town with wolf-hounds, goats and other animules, all bannered. Three-year-old, the master of ceremonies, led the parade attired in high hat and tuxedo.

Other West contests included a personality gag on the stage for cash prizes, winners chosen by audience applause. For the newspapers, other West-ers were wisecrack contest and a smile contest. North Plainfield, adjoining Ed's town, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary and Hart promoted congrat. wires from West for that and for his own bride and groom, both wires landing in the local dailies.

Outstanding for his lobby puller was a West fortune teller who told fortune free (see photo) to women patrons, with winner of impersonation contest standing by. Front featured a special cutout of the star outlined completely in neon. This was planted in downtown window ahead and on the marquee during run.

In addition to these pullers, Hart put on a lotta other nifties such as West official straw hat day, merchants' "Mae Day" and a flock of window tieups topped by newsboys' parade to theatre headed by Legion Band and Boy Scouts, and led by a 1910 model electric suitably bannered.

Any one wishing to purchase tickets as gifts or for bridge prizes were invited to avail themselves of the offer at regular admission prices. Walter reports he sent his cashier out contacting various parties and the stunt has proved successful.

Department store was tied in with stage show of girls modeling latest fashions in hosiery (see photo), store ads plugging show and picture date. Store awarded gift hose packages to four persons each show holding lucky number tickets.

On "Bride of Frankenstein" Walter held a special midnight showing with nurse in attendance. Placed at either end of marquee were cutouts of the "bride" in flowing veils and eight-foot cutouts of Karloff planted on both sides of entrance.

Barron Stages Amateur Star Contest Hunt

Bill Barron, Kenyon, Pittsburgh, Pa., has local music store and broadcasting station tied in on 12-week amateur contest, staged at his theatre. Store furnishes merchandise orders to the weekly winners and grand prize, choice of any musical instrument with one year's free instruction. Winners are decided by applause.

Three weekly winners appear on broadcast the following week and arrangements have been made for the grand prize winner to receive a regular spot on the air. Music store receives credits in all theatre advertising, stage and station auditions.

Guess the Time And Win the Bed

Hooking in with furniture store for his "Mark of the Vampire" date, H. C. Burkhardt, Loew's State, Providence, R. I., planted sleeping girl in window and invited passersby to guess time she would awaken. As grand prize store donated couch on which the gal slept, with theatre awarding guest tickets as subsequent prize.

For street bally, man in grotesque makeup paraded the town and appeared on stage during amateur night broadcast, announcer introducing character and mentioning title and playdates. Telephone company also cooperated by plugging playdays when giving correct time. Uniformed nurse was on duty in lobby with cot and table containing smelling salts and other first aiders.

Bassin's Artist Paints West Poster in Lobby

The lure that gathers crowds around street sign painters was counted on by Charley Bassin, at the Oriental, Mattapan, Mass., to do likewise in his lobby where a week ahead (see photo) an artist was planted before a poster to paint pictures of the star for the entertainment of patrons each night during the date.

Colored autographed star stills were sold to nearby beauty parlor which had reverse side printed with tiein copy. These were distributed at theatre at matinees in advance. Other tieins with local shops for effective windows were arranged.

As the Oriental is located within reaching distance of numerous surrounding communities, Bassin planted sufficient publicity in all the local papers, topping this with a co-op page in one of the leading weeklies.

Teaser Ads Highlight Irwin's "G Men" Campaign

"Wanted by G Men, last seen leaving State Bank with $20,000 in currency" and similar teaser ads were used by George Irwin, Lyceum Theatre, Duluth, for that date. Through cooperation of local police, apparatus was set up in lobby with officer in attendance fingerprinting patrons.

George contacted head of school police and arrangements were made for special Saturday morning screening, rookies marching to theatre with banners, stories breaking in dailies. Lobby contained blowups of recent G men activities in the form of photos and other publicists.

Gates Uses Wrecked Car For "Reckless" Display

For his lobby display on "Reckless" Arnold Gates, Loew's Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, used a wrecked car alongside of which was a three-gallon bowl filled with bolts, screws, steel shavings, etc., with shovel and broom, copy reading, "The driver of this car was reckless." Upside down trailer used week ahead with apology for error blamed on excitement over picture.

Music counters in leading store carried counter card, girls plugging tune hits. "Reckless" arrows pointing to theatre were planted on police stanchions and safety cards signed by commissioner of traffic, carrying title, cast and playdates, were distributed.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Steinbuch Issues Checks

Everett Steinbuch, Loew's State, Cleveland mailed out bona fide two-cent checks drawn against the "Sanders of the River" account. Letter accompanying the check explained that it was to partly repay the recipient for the few seconds required to read the message about the world premiere of the picture and some of its highlights.

Couple Street Bally "Saleslady" for Gow

For his "Travelling Saleslady" date, J. M. Gow, Capitol Theatre, Nanaimo, B. C., had a couple of men parade through town, one dressed in woman's garb (see photo), both carrying lettered suitcases. Very conveniently (?) the grip would open and contents spill out as the onlookers watched the embarrassed pair gather up their belongings and move on.

For "G Men" Gow used the oral chain letter gag in which recipients were to tell or phone five friends about the picture.

Impersonation Contest Staged by Wilson

Cash prizes were awarded in a Shirley Temple impersonation contest put on by W. P. Wilson, Capitol, Edmonton, Canada, for "Little Colonel" at a Saturday morning show. To soothe the ruffled spirits of nonwinning youngsters strings of pearls were presented to all contestants with autographed photos of the starlet.

Special front was constructed with cutout of Shirley and Dunn (see photo) and cooperating merchants devoted window displays to Temple dresses, and picture copy.

Tieing in the New With the Old

Smart Drive Sells New Cooling Plants

To publicize the recently installed cooling plants at the Tivoli and Ambassador Theatres, in Washington, D. C., Frank La Falce, Warner Theatres zone manager broke out with a series of two column type newspaper ads bordered with cool stuff to sell the new installations and also those previously installed at the Earle and Metropolitan.

Copy in the three displays reproduced on this page are all pointed to sell the comfort of the four ace houses, standing out in reverse slugs with catch copy heading each blast. La Falce ties them together by reminder copy that the Earle and Metropolitan have had the cool plants for many years and that the same kind of comfort is now available in the other spots.

The campaigns for the new installations at the Tivoli and Ambassador included billing, heralds, trailers and program copy in addition to the newspapers. During the installation period, special copy was planted in the lobbies and on the screen. When the job was done, following trailer was run:

"To Our Patrons:

You are now enjoying our modern air-conditioning system which we have just installed. We desire to thank you for your indulgence during the period of installation and trust you will have occasion to come often and relax in our always comfortably cool atmosphere as you enjoy our entertainment. No draughts, colds or chills. Come often and forget the weather."

The herald makeup and copy were very snappy, the art being in keeping, with such illustrations as four seals, each supporting one letter of the word "cool," trick polar bears and other attractors.

DOES YOUR POSTER ART SELL?

Another Floridian Sets Down His Observations in the Third Article Of the Round Table Series on Art

by PAUL ANDREWS

Artist, Halifax Theatres, Daytona, Fla.

PAUL ANDREWS

A theatre without art is as cheap-looking as a cracker box without crackers. Anyone knows that the ace house or houses in a city are usually the ones that are most artistically designed and are thought of by the beauty and comfort which they afford. Thus art from design in construction of the theatre has made an introduction to the subject that I am devoted to—theatre art and its advertising ability.

Some artists take a one-sheet, three-sheet or whatever size frame they are confronted with, and use the entire background to paint their picture, usually a big head of the star. Away down at the bottom or some other spot that they find then use only approximately a fifth of the entire background space for their lettering, which does not sell but only about twenty-five per cent of the public. Then there are those that paint an awful picture, which reminds me of a statement an artist friend of mine in Atlanta, Georgia, recently made in reference to another artist—"Yes, Zilch is doing pastels now, and every once in a while you can actually recognize the star." Therefore this type of work has no box office attraction at all.

My idea of a good selling poster is one that is handled in design as well as possible toward the atmosphere of the title, or if the star means more than the title, there is where a nice head of the star comes into its own, but still staying in correlation with the title. A still or two on the background is very seldom out of place.

Lettering Important in Posters

The main thing to consider in completing a successful poster is the lettering. On my work I usually make my lettering as strong and as plain as possible and never use less than 40 per cent of my space for that purpose, and sometimes as much as 60. I try to make both my lettering and picture balance each other so that the two will have the same value. One of the worst things to see is an attractive poster of a star, the lettering done so poorly that it is hard to read.

To be a successful artist in the theatre, one has to continuously be on his toes and know how a picture has been intended to be sold by the producer, what the story is about and what good catch line would aid in selling the story. An important factor to consider is being able to give them variety. Nothing looks more like a cemetery than a theatre without any color or contrast in advertisements throughout the lobby. Truly an artist must have the theatre in mind at all times during his work, and be blessed with worlds of talent to ever be first class in solving this vast problem for the theatre.

I have always an ideal in mind—to try to do as good as Elmer Burp—maybe I will and maybe I don't. If only some of these fellows that think they cannot be told anything, and probably will not ever learn anything about the position they hold until they stop being "long haired," would awaken to the fact that there are things to be done, and that the world is moving much faster than they are, then there would be more sales of tickets at their theatre. This would strengthen the belief in the art shop, would give them a stronger grip on their positions and aid a number of others who are upholding the only trade most of us know.

Some theatres are so packed with art work, that when the patron comes to view the lobby he or she does not leave the place with a complete thought about anything that the theatre is playing, but instead a conglomeration of pictures. This is most assuredly unwise. However, some theatres have too little in their lobbies. Set pieces aid a great deal, but no more than two pictures should be sold in advance.

For poster artists who have not already tried this particular medium in the construction of a poster, I use white kalsomine filled with beach sand to coat the surface where my picture is to be painted, which gives a nice, unique effect. I then blend around this and paint out the rest of the background where the lettering is to be done with plain paint. This gives me a lettering surface which otherwise I would not have. This treatment can be done on any old piece of scrap board. Crayon or oils can be used to paint the picture—both give a nice effect with this method. For variety I work in a few charcoals on regular charcoal or pastel paper. I use plain opaque water colors, pastel on velour, oil on velour and wash drawings. My idea with lettering and heads is the same with both; if it is worth doing then it is worth doing big enough to see and read.

NEWSPAPER ADS FROM LONDON

Included in John Armstrong's campaign on "Bengal Lancer" at the Carlton, London—winner of the Quigley June Silver Plaque—was an effective variety of newspaper ads, some of which are shown on this page. Reproduced are advance displays as well as others that kept up box-office interest during the run.

To be noted is the use of the Gary Cooper head in almost every instance as a trademark, so to speak, and the emphasis on the title. Campaign was localized to tie in with the Jubilee Celebration, school holiday, sporting contests and other events.

CHAIRS BY HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD

THE EVOLUTION OF THE MODERN THEATRE CHAIR

HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD INSTALLATION, HARBOR THEATRE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

AN EXPERIMENT IN OPERATION AND CONSTRUCTION

Examining the Pix Theatre idea, the theory of motion picture exhibition on which it is based, and the standardized theatre plan in which it is realized

IN AN ANNOUNCEMENT sent to a selected group of New Yorkers, it was stated that "Pix Theatres, Inc., has developed and patented in practical form a revolutionary design of motion picture theatre which differs radically both in concept and structure from existing theatres."

The announcement, in its preamble, continued:

"The Pix theatre is of striking appearance and scientifically correct design, which will satisfy the public demand for comfort and technical perfection. The Pix Theatres, Inc.'s plan of standardized unit theatres and their operation offers a new approach to the business of motion picture exhibition."

This "new approach to the business of motion picture exhibition," as it has thus been called, was developing in the mind of John S. Clark, Jr., president of the present company, something like two years ago. He envisioned the development of a motion picture theatre that could be built cheaply enough, with a proportionate rate of write-off, to be operated profitably in specific types of neighborhood with an extremely small seating capacity and a moderate price of admission. This conception has since undergone substantial revision, but the original idea of motion picture merchandising has persisted. And in October, if schedules are kept, a 299-seat theatre, representing this idea, will be opened in White Plains, a suburb of New York located in Westchester County.

This will be the first of a group to be operated by Pix Theatres, Inc., a New York corporation with offices in New York City. It is planned, however, to make Pix theatres of standardized type available to individual exhibitors.

"The prospective market for Pix theatres," declared Mr. Clarke when questioned about this phase of his company's operations, "includes thousands of individuals well trained for business and possessing a few thousand dollars of capital, who definitely prefer to have a business of their own. Such individuals will have the assistance of the central organization. We will rely mainly on local partnership management. Experience has proved that chain or what you might call remote control methods of theatre operation, are not desirable beyond a territorial zone small enough to make all directly operated units accessible for daily observation. A theatre must be operated on a policy built to meet the taste and character of its community. Only a permanent local management can qualify to meet such demands."

The Pix organization, he stated, would operate directly only those theatres located nearest to the home office or divisional headquarters of the company. In other situations individual operators would be licensed on a royalty or participation plan. All Pix-type theatres would be unified organically, however, under some system of national identity, for the purpose of securing film product and purchasing equipment on a large-scale basis.

"The company proposes to extend its sales efforts," said Mr. Clarke, "through franchise sales organizations, nationally."

PLACE OF SMALL THEATRE

The Pix Idea, if it may be so called, is an answer, albeit a radical one, to the question raised since hysterical boom era, asking just what is the place of the motion picture in the recreational habits of people today. Mr. Clarke sees the trend of patronage as toward the neighborhood house and away from the glorified "deluxe" downtown theatre.

"The neighborhood theatres have the best experience from the standpoint of return on investment of any of the theatres —although," he added, "if judged by modern standards of construction, acoustics, comfort and accessibility, the vast majority of them are obsolete."

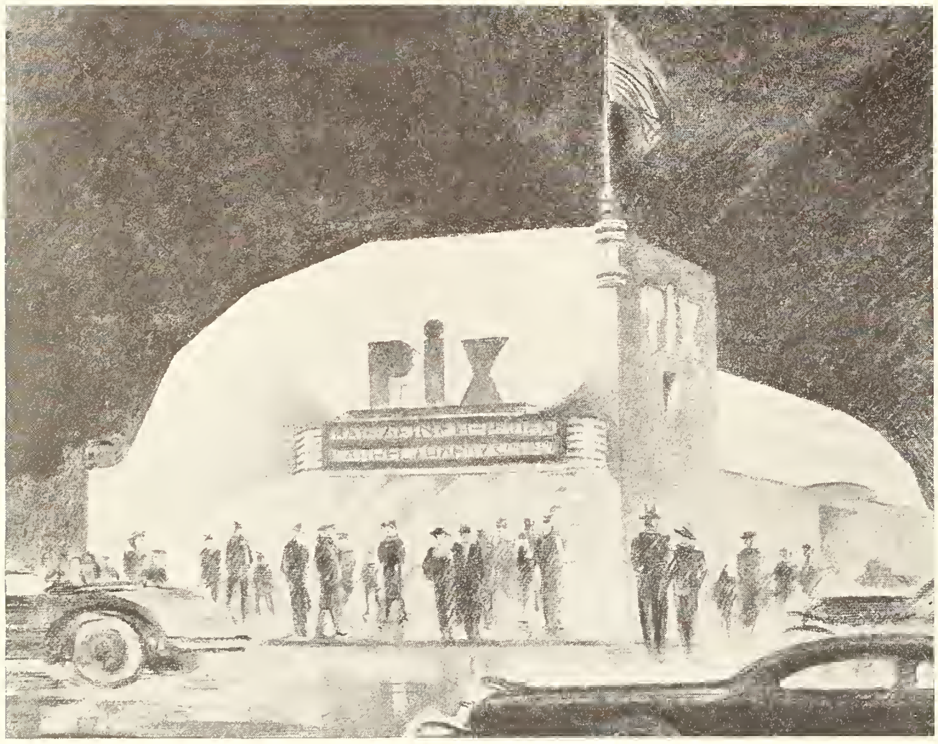
Small, modern, technically perfect, and intelligently managed neighborhood theatres, readily accessible in price and location to the great majority of families, represents Mr. Clarke's appraisal of the motion picture in today's social scheme. If one may interpret his point of view a little, one might say that he sees in this technically perfect, readily accessible theatre a "settling down" of the motion picture industry to its ultimate, permanent business.

"Investments in the field of theatricals and the motion picture have been considered highly speculative in the past," he pointed out. "And past records of such investments have proved this to be true. The speculative aspect of motion picture theatre operation has been characteristic of the past because of very definite reasons and circumstances.

"For example, one may cite the enormous sums spent in building movie palaces with their over-elaborate appointments.

COMFORTABLY SEATING THE THEATRE TODAY

● In the pictures on the opposite page the camera has attempted to catch some of the significance of the engineering that has gone into the development of the modern theatre chair. Reading between the highlights and shadows we see more than the evolution of modern theatre seating — we see the evolution of our present-day demand for comfort. In the circle of chairs are models representing various periods of the past. One of them was a beauty in 1910. It made many a show a pain in the neck, but going to the theatre then was too much of an event for the customers to complain about a mere twisted spine. Today millions of people attend the theatre often — the motion picture theatre. This theatre taught them to expect comfort. Now they exact it. Chairs like the husky, scientifically engineered chair of 1935 in the center of the circle, like those pictured in a recent installation, are simply more effective responses to an established demand. Theatregoers can't take it anymore—and don't have to.



Perspective sketch of the Pix theatre under construction at White Plains, N. Y., made by the architects, Bianculli & Ghiani. The form is functional, which accounts for the eccentric roof line of the forward section.

And it is to be remembered that the movie palace is strictly a one-purpose building.

"Then the seating capacities and also the initial cost demanded that these palaces be located in congested business districts, with resulting high land values and long-term rentals. These commitments were made without consideration of future economic, population or habit trends.

"It should also be remembered that the overhead involved in operating such theatres is so great that the number of days running time of any attraction is materially reduced, requiring more pictures and prior runs with increase in cost.

"To these points I would add that the large theatre must depend upon a picture policy planned to appeal to a large cross-section of society, and as a result its policy cannot be flexible enough to meet the conditions demanded by minority groups."

If he discerns truly, Mr. Clarke has learned about the motion picture theatre quickly. He was remotely connected with the industry from 1930 to 1932. But previously he was associated with motor truck manufacture.

Obviously, Mr. Clarke's appraisal of the small neighborhood theatre in its adaptation to the continued, profitable merchandising of the motion picture, included all small houses of modern design and excellent technical facilities, for the Pix-type theatre represents a special group within this class, having but 300 seats and employing a standardized plan that imposes certain apparent limitations.

As the first of this type, the theatre now being erected in White Plains will function, at least at the beginning, as an experiment—a sort of laboratory theatre in which standards and methods of operation and construction may be established for a group of houses having a restricted and special place within the great body of motion picture theatres.

"We do not regard the Pix theatre as being essentially in competition with the usual type of existing theatre," said Mr. Clarke.

THE STANDARD PLAN

The Pix theatre plan calls for an overall width of 35 feet, and a depth of 95 feet. Construction is largely of concrete blocks, and the architecture is functional—that is to say, the form of the building, and it architectural provisions, follow severely the requirements represented in seating, acoustics, projection, air-conditioning, vision, traffic, operating routine and so on. The architects are Bianculli & Ghiani, with Ben Schlanger as associate.

To a depth of 16 feet from the sidewalk, the construction is entirely of concrete blocks, which are faced with stucco. The remainder of the building is constructed of concrete piles supporting steel roof trusses, and between the piles, of concrete blocks laid to the cornice, which form the walls.

This main section houses the auditorium. The forward stuccoed section houses the box office, entrance vestibule, lobby, a manager's office, toilet rooms and, on a mezzanine level over the lobby, the projection room.

THE FRONT

The front is without ornament—a plain white stucco surface relieved only by a small marquee, a theatre name sign, and a shallow indentation along the lower part where the entrance and two sets of double doors are located. This forward section takes on an eccentric form (as will be noted in the accompanying picture) owing to strict adherence to a functional design. No space is needed on the left side of the forward section, so the roof here curves inward in line with the rounded roof of the main section. On the right side of the forward section continues vertically, to provide space for the projection facilities, ventilating ducts and an auxiliary blower.

The sign is of metal, spelling in modern stylized type form the name Pix. The letters are outlined with gas-tube lighting, which alternates with white light from incandescent sources behind the sign. When the latter light is on, the letters are silhoutted against the white stucco. A similar sign is located just around the corner from the entrance.

The entranceway is to the right of the front, leading past the box office, and with a turn to the left, into the lobby. The patron there turns right to enter the auditorium. Exit traffic is directly through the lobby to the two sets of double doors located (as they would be on walking out) to the right of the entrance.

Seating occupies all but a minor portion of the main section. A shallow traffic lane runs behind the last row of chairs, leading to the aisles, one on each side, and to the men's and women's toilet rooms, which adjoin each other at the rear of the left aisle. A standee rail divides this traffic lane from the seating area.

Seating is arranged in a single bank of 14 chairs to the row. All chairs are to be 22 inches wide and fully upholstered, with spring backs and seats. Spacing between rows is 34 inches. Although the auditorium is rectangular and less than 35 feet wide, seating is on a radial plan, with chair centers staggered. The floor curvature represents an adaptation of the Schlanger reversed slope.

LIGHTING

Auditorium walls are of plaster, without decoration. The ceiling, which follows the arc of the roof in six planes, is also of plaster. The only decorative effects are derived from a lighting trough at the juncture of the two central ceiling planes, the trough running the length of the auditorium, and from three bracket luminous elements on each side wall. Both trough and bracket sources will be equipped with two circuits, one for low wattage lamps (lighted during performances) and one for high wattages.

Cutting the two forward corners of the auditorium are metallic panels stepped in three vertical planes and painted a dark neutral color. These panels flank the screen platform, which provides for a screen approximately 12 feet wide.

AIR-CONDITIONING

The screen platform is located over the only excavated portion. This excavated area houses the heating and cooling plants.

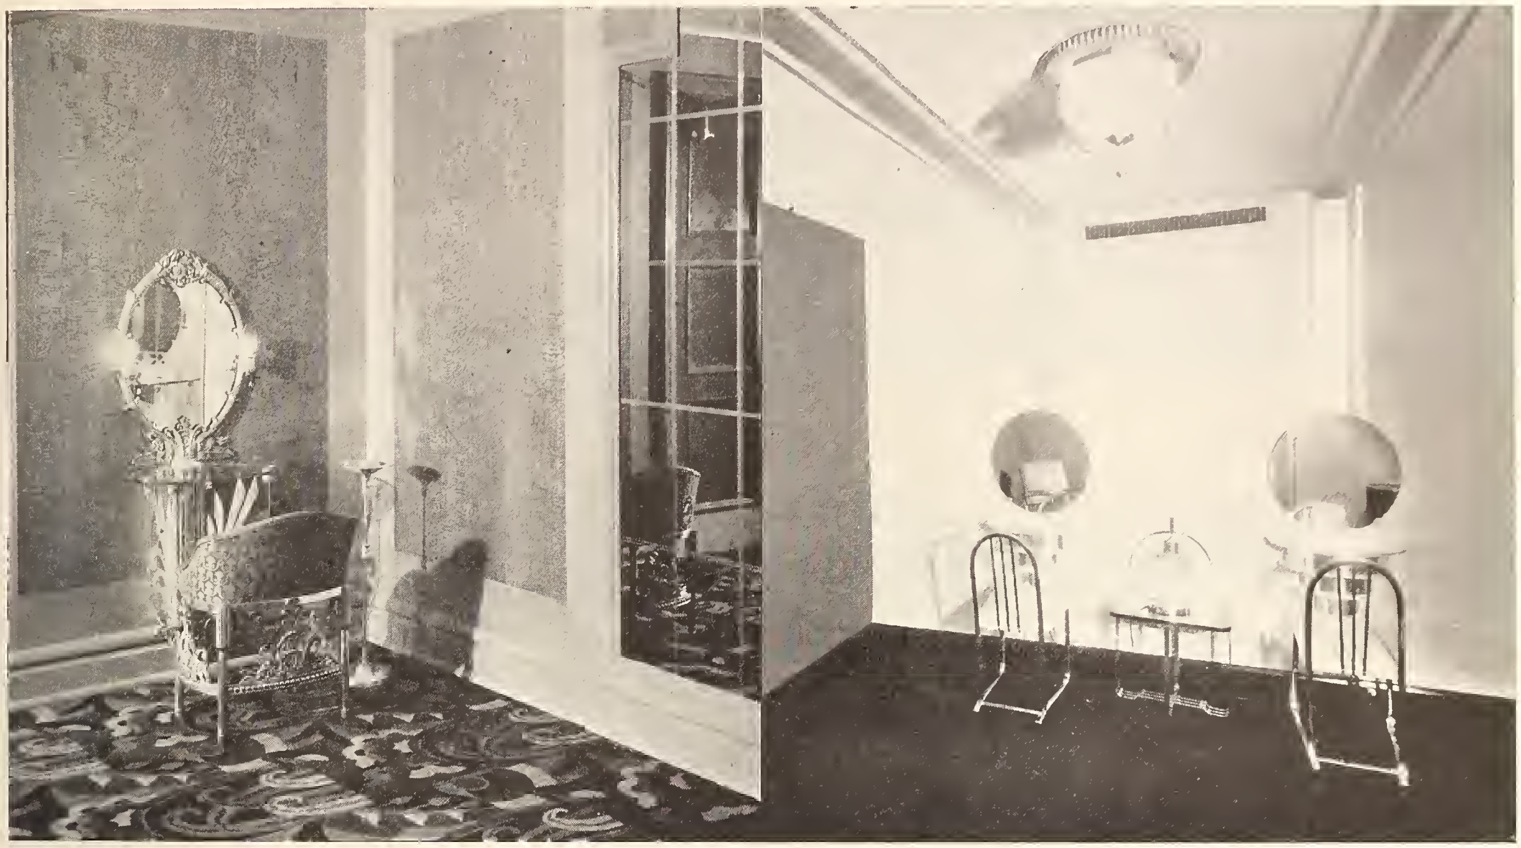
NEW THEATRES FROM OLD: THE LOUNGE

THE SIXTH OF A SERIES ON REMODELING, CONSIDERING IN SUCCESSIVE ISSUES: FRONTS, LOBBIES AND FOYERS, THE AUDITORIUM, AND LOUNGES



The pictures above show women's lounge areas done in modern patterns. The cosmetic room (lefthand view) is in the Southtown theatre in Chicago, of which Rapp & Rapp were the architects. The walls are of sheer paneling in lacewood and prima vera Flexwood. The other view is of the powder room in the Flatbush Avenue Trans-Lux theatre in Brooklyn, of which Thomas W. Lamb was the architect. Two walls are painted lemon yellow, the other two are stippled in cobalt blue. The ceiling is lemon yellow. Bands on walls and ceiling are painted silver. The carpet is a plain blue, and furniture is of chromium.

I.—METHODS and MATERIALS

By EUGENE CLUTE

A LOUNGE that is dingy and run-down is no credit to a motion picture theatre, but that is the kind of lounge that many houses have, if they have any lounge at all, with a carpet that is deeply scarred this way and that with cigarette burns to give the finishing touch to a general down-at-the-heel effect.

The lounges even of some of the newer theatres are no better than those in the older theatres, for their gaudy "modernistic" decorations, badly designed and cheaply executed, have aged with astonishing rapidity.

This condition emphasizes the fact that durability of materials and ease of maintenance should be prime considerations in the decoration and furnishing of lounges. Also, it brings out clearly the fact that decorations that have no virtue but novelty are a bad investment.

The best kind of modern style design is something very different from the freak decoration that too often passes for modernism. It makes use of materials that are good, though they may be inexpensive, employing them honestly for what they are, and developing their possibilities. It depends upon the division of wall surfaces, materials of good texture and the skillful use of color for much of its effectiveness. Ornament is used sparingly,—sometimes not at all—in the best treatments, and accent is given by means of straight lines inlaid, painted or formed by flat strips. The excessive use of mouldings, however, is avoided.

In decorating and furnishing a lounge or powder room, it is a good idea to adapt to this purpose the type of modern design which the motion pictures have taught people to regard as smart—the kind they see in so many of the interior settings representing the homes of the wealthy and ultra-sophisticated. Fortunately, this kind of modern decoration does not need to cost much, for it depends upon ideas rather than elaborateness for its smart character.

Since a lounge or powder room contains but little furniture, the walls must be depended upon to furnish most of the character. Consequently, they need to be treated somewhat more fully than in a residence or studio interior. They should be painted or be covered with material that wears well and is easy to take care of. Also, since the walls are seen at close range, and are well lighted, and because people do not merely pass through the room, but often remain for some minutes, interesting and beautiful materials may well be used.

FORMICA

One of the best materials for such walls is Formica which can be had in good colors, and in a dull finish as well as the polished finish. It can be inlaid in colors or metals, preferably in straight lines and simple abstract motifs, though elaborate ornamental forms can also be made in it. Stencil-like designs should be avoided, as a rule. Snap-on metal mouldings can be used over the joints. A black Formica base can be used to advantage with most wall coverings. There are flat Formica mouldings with nails embedded in them, so that no nail heads show. They are convenient for use over the joints of various wall coverings, or for forming decorative lines.

WALL-PAINT PAPER

Plain Salubra, which is flat wall paint on a paper backing, is hung like wall paper. It comes in clear, soft, plain tints, and in good modern style patterns. Some of the plain colors can be had in three different tones for use in combination, as in banding a wall horizontally. Salubra is easily kept clean.

WALL FABRIC

A material that has good texture, is washable and is hung like wall paper, is Fabrikona woven wall covering. It comes in various weaves, of which one of the most suitable for lounges is the homespun in medium brown. There are two especially suitable designs in the patterned Fabrikona. One shows modern style motifs of moderate scale, the other a foliage-and-bird design in a block-print effect. The gold Fabrikona has a rough texture that gives sparkle to the metal and is a rich material for the frieze.

PAINTED PATTERNS

Painted walls are excellent for the lounge and powder room, and may be had at moderate cost. They can be made interesting by banding them with colors and metal stripes, using a deeper tone on some sections or graded tones on some portions. Stenciling, hand-painted decorations and graining should be avoided, as a rule. Stippling, when well done, is often suitable.

Painting the two longer walls and the ceiling in one color, and the end walls in a different color, tends to take away the box-like effect of a small plain room, and is good for a powder room.

A long, narrow room can be made to seem of better proportions by dividing each long wall into three sections, treating the two end sections alike, and the longer middle section differently. The middle can be in a plain color and the ends in a patterned hanging or in a contrasting plain color, or they can be banded horizontally or vertically with flat mouldings. Pilasters can be used to separate the sections.

Horizontal banding in different tones of a single color, darkest at the bottom, can be carried out in Salubra or paint. Horizontal or vertical banding can be done on a solid color in Formica, structural glass

II.—LIGHTING IN TODAY'S TREND

By FRANCIS M. FALGE

THE ENTERPRISING theatre manager exerts every effort to make a pleasant and lasting impression on his patrons, regardless of the picture itself. He knows this to be good business because patrons do not like to feel that at the conclusion of the picture their welcome has expired, and that they are being herded to the nearest exit because the theatre has fulfilled its primary obligation. Attractive, softly-lighted foyers, comfortable rest rooms and sparkling spic-and-span lavatories send the patron off with a satisfied feeling which in itself is insurance of continued patronage.

In planning the lighting of these parts of the theatre it is well to study them from the standpoint of the services they are to render. By doing this it is possible to provide satisfactory lighting with a minimum of cost.

First, however, I should like to point out the desirability of using a modern treatment and modern materials for foyer and lounge areas. The reason for doing this is the fact that these parts of the theatre find their counterparts in the homes of the patrons. Too often "hominess" is the by-word in decorating these rooms, and this tends to suggest "sameness" and even "drabness" to the patrons. The housewife, always anxious to see how the other half of the world lives, is constantly on the lookout for new ideas that she can bring into her home. She often finds these in the scenes shown in the picture. Why shouldn't she find them in the theatre itself? It represents another world to her and by the logical and functional use of modern materials (not the over-decorated or awe-inspiring modernistic or futuristic) the theatre can play an important part in the everyday lives of its patrons. [In Figures 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 on pages 10 and 11, Mr. Falge submits examples of modern lounge illumination in a sketch and photographs supplied through courtesy of the Nela Park Engineering Department of General Electric.—Ed.]

FOYER-LOUNGE

The term foyer is somewhat loosely applied to different parts of the theatre, depending upon its physical arrangement, and the illumination varies accordingly. If, for example, the foyer adjoins the auditorium and is merely a stopping-place en route to it, the illumination should be such that the eyes are gradually accommodated to the darkened interior. In this case a graded intensity ranging from 3 foot-candles on the outer side, to 1 foot-candle on the inner side, is satisfactory. If the foyer is spacious, and provision is made for seats and possibly for the serving of refreshments, an intensity of light of from 2 to 5 foot-candles is desirable. Soft, indirect lighting or direct lighting from large luminous forms of low brightness are well adapted for this location. Warm colors, such as yellow, amber and rose are desirable.

Where the foyer is lounge-like in character as in those theatres where long ramps carry into the auditorium or balcony, the foyer's uses are multiplied and it can serve to advantage as an informal meeting place. Figure 1 illustrates such a foyer, in which the new Mazda Lumiline lamps are featured. Ceiling plaques utilize the Lumiline lamps between strips of plate glass. Side-wall brackets are similar in character. Lumiline lamps have been applied in lines of light to outline the photo-mural. If their light is to be used for the seats also, white lamps are preferable. Two Lumiline lamps have been used for the drinking fountain, thereby attracting attention to it. The luminous areas on the right are windows that are lighted at night.

LOUNGES

The basic principles that should be followed in lighting lounges are in some respects similar to those for living rooms of homes. First of all, they should be livable. General lighting of a level of 3 to 5 foot-candles is desirable. Often it is best to use a light tint rather than unmodified white light. The general lighting should be supplemented by local lighting at the chairs, at the mirrors, for pictures, and at any other points of interest.

Adequate lighting at chairs and sofas is sure to meet with favorable comment. Here is a good opportunity to tie in with the "Better Light-Better Sight" activity which is creating so much interest and making people eye and light conscious. The use of the new efficient certified I.E.S. study and reading lamps, suitably identified, is sure to create a favorable impression. Why not tie in with department stores and other electrical stores or the local central station in the movement for better seeing through better lighting?

Another innovation is to use one or more of the new types of lamps that are equipped to carry potted plants. Certain plants thrive under incandescent light, and their use in the theatre adds interest to many locations.

Pictures and paintings are frequently displayed in foyers and lounges, and usually under lighting conditions that are unsatisfactory for this purpose. Special lighting adds greatly to their attractiveness. In general, these pictures have a glossy surface and it is necessary to direct the light so that reflections are away from, rather than toward, the eyes of the observer.

Light from below will do this, as will light from above. If a unit is located above a picture, it should be at such an angle that people will not get a reflected view of the lamp. Reflectors suspended above the picture must be carefully arranged to avoid spots. The new parabolic trough reflectors are useful in getting coverage over the entire picture. Spotlights, too, can often be concealed so as to light the picture smoothly and effectively.

LAVATORIES

Lavatories are purely utilitarian and it should be obvious that they are clean. There is no substitute for pure white light to express and encourage cleanliness. Colored light is concealing and people may feel a lack of cleanliness.

The mirrors should be well lighted, for they are of valuable assistance in helping milady with her makeup. Tubular sources, such as the Lumiline lamps, placed on the sides or above and below the mirror, do an excellent job. For a softer effect the light may be further diffused by placing flashed-opal glass tubes over the Lumiline or tubular lamps. Another method is to place luminous panels of flashed-opal glass at the sides or around the mirror. A new idea is to provide luminous panels with two circuits, one with Mazda daylight lamps, the other with inside-frosted Mazda lamps, the switches being appropriately labeled. Then when milady looks in the mirror she may make up her appearance either for daylight or artificial light at the snap of a switch.

III.—ECONOMY IN FLOORING

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

CERAMIC TILE floors are so frequently found in toilet rooms that we might consider it the standard flooring. Though there are many other vitreous and semi-vitreous tiles that are equally as satisfactory as the ceramic tile, and lend themselves to more colorful and hence more unusual floors.

The ceramic mosaic tile so frequently used is pressed into regular geometric shapes, usually one-quarter-inch thick, in plain colors. The appearance and low maintenance of a tile floor depends a great deal upon the care during installation. After the tiles have set a day or two some times a white scum appears—this is caused by the cement. Generally this white scum can be removed with soap and water, but frequently it is necessary to wash the floor with a 15% solution of muriatic acid and water. This acid solution should be allowed to remain on the floor for only a few minutes, then it should be carefully washed off with fresh water.

CLEANING TILE

It is characteristic of ceramic tile floors to be less affected by acids or alkalis than most any other flooring. In cleaning, soap and water followed by a thorough rinsing is recommended, with the use of a detergent only when necessary. Scouring powders are not harmful to tile, but it is not generally necessary to use it every day.

If the tile floor becomes stained around fixtures, don't try to remove the stains by using strong acid solutions, because over a period of time the acid will distintegrate the cement that holds the tile and the tile will become loose. Tile floors occasionally show cracks—this is caused by the expansion and contraction of the base flooring on which the tile is laid. Sometimes the cracks are caused by vibration or a settlement of the building. The actual job of repairing a tile floor is easy, but sometimes it is difficult to match exactly the color of the old tiles with new tile. This is often the case even when repairing a white tile floor.

CORK FLOORING

Cork tiles make a most beautiful flooring for lounge rooms. With cork tile floors carpet can be dispensed with, which reduces maintenance. Cork tile is composed of new, clean, clear cork shavings. The cork, after careful screening, is then compressed into tiles under tremendous pressure and then baked. In the best tiles there is no other bonding material used othen than the natural gum of the cork.

Cork floors may be dry cleaned, washed or wax finished. When cleaning dry, the floor is first swept with a hair broom or brush. Then the floor is polished with soft felt fastened to the back of a push broom, or some similar floor polishing implement. Every spot or part of the floor must be rubbed vigorously, for spots that are skipped can be easily detected by the eye. In time this treatment will develop a soft, rich luster on the surface of the floor. Of course, very dirty spots may have to be washed in order to remove them.

Before washing a cork floor it must be brushed clean of all loose dirt. The water for cleaning must never be hot, but just lukewarm, with a very small amount of neutral soap dissolved in it. It is best to use two buckets of water, the first with luke warm soapy water and the second with clear lukewarm water. Continually change the water in the second bucket so that the floor will always be rinsed with clean water. Clean only a small area at a time, then rinse clean and take up as much moisture as possible.

The less water left to soak into a cork floor, the better it is for the floor. Drying the floor is so important that a perfectly dry mop or rag should be used to remove the last bit of moisture.

When a cork floor is waxed, the wax forms a protective coating against stains, dirt and to some extent wear, and helps very much in retaining its natural rich color. Liquid wax applied in a thin coat and rubbed in well is very satisfactory. Frequently two coats of wax are applied if the floor is new or just been washed. The second coat is applied only after the first is thoroughly dry. After this waxing is necessary only at very infrequent intervals. In between waxings the floor should be brushed free of all dirt each day and polished with a 20-pound polisher. Electric machines have successfully been used in polishing cork floors.

All furniture standing on cork floors should be fitted with the protective glide casters to prevent permanent disfigurement of the floor. As a matter of fact glass or metal gliders should be used on carpet, linoleum, cork and rubber tile floors. They save a great amount of wear and tear.

HOW INTERIORS CAN BE MADE MODERN

By ROBERT O. BOLLER

Suggestions from a leading theatre architect on the decorative treatment of the theatre in today's styles and materials

FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT, famous American architect, who for many years has been a leading exponent of what he terms "organic architecture," once remarked that some interior decoration could only be termed "inferior desecration." With this statement I heartily agree, for even though good structural design is attained, and honest use is made of genuine materials in our moderne motion picture theatres, if the decorator fails to grasp the architect's vision, if fabrics and painted detail enriched with color are entirely omitted, or if the furnishings do not harmonize with the general scheme of the structure, the result is disappointing.

USE OF COLOR

Because of the very simplicity of moderne, the decoration of the theatre interior is particularly important. Plain wall surfaces, shaded and tinted to produce new and un-thought-of effects pleasing to the eye and esthetically satisfying, can make unnecessary the use of other ornamentation.

From bold colors and striking designs the moderne color scheme can be toned to a fastidious choice in pastels and the most delicate tracery. The early notion that this new type of design could only be carried out in black and silver or other bright metals is fast fading out of the decorator's mind.

Low ceilings gain the appearance of height when, in the hands of a capable decorator, they give the illusion of ascending in waves of lightening color toward the center of the room. Pigment mixed into acoustical plaster has become fundamental in the use of this acoustical material in auditorium treatment.

DECORATION COSTS

Before the moderne type of architecture made its appearance, owners were all too prone to spend thousands on technically correct construction, and to limit their decorating allowance to a few hundred dollars, which were turned over to the town painter with the admonition to do the best he could with the amount given him. But the advent of moderne, bringing with it the elimination of heavy plaster ornament and other features of embellishment, has thrown an additional responsibility on to the shoulders of the decorator. Rather than to skimp this portion of the work, it is better to choose less expensive materials for the interior finishes. Marble, tile, and ornamental iron work are a few of the items which can be reduced, or entirely done away with, with little harm to the general attractiveness of the building. Millwork may be "pine to paint," rather than costly woods for stained and waxed finishes. But good interior decoration can be replaced by no adequate substitute, and having built a theatre of which he is justly proud, the exhibitor should realize that this item is not the point for too rigid economy.

SIMPLICITY DESIRABLE

It is a generally accepted fact among the better designers of the past few years that the trend has been consistently away from ornate ornamentation or decoration of the auditorium proper. This section of the house remains dark for extended periods of time, while the foyer and lounges are seen constantly by passing patrons under brighter light. The auditorium still needs skillful treatment with paint and fabrics, but here we have learned to create effects which are simpler, less full of distractions, and which leave to the screen the dominant position.

FOYER AND LOUNGE

In foyer and lounge, the interior decorator finds the true field for his most artistic effort. Soft lights may fall on delicately tinted walls and ceilings treated with painted designs in keeping with the general atmosphere of the building.

Mirrors—both on side walls and used for unusual ceiling effects—are a never failing source of interest. A multitude of entirely new stenciled patterns may be used for panel and beam treatments, and these need not be the early form of "zig-zag" designs now scoffed at by the "intellectuals." The full scope of moderne interior decoration has as yet hardly been envisaged, and who can prophesy where the fertile and imaginative minds of contemporary artists and decorators can and will lead us?

Draperies, paintings, statuary and comfortable furniture in the moderne manner help to make these rooms inviting and homelike. These appeals to the beauty-loving side of human nature will always be in good taste so long as the theatre represents an escape from prosaic everyday life.

LIGHTING EFFECTS

More refined forms of light mediums and unusual lighting fixtures have replaced the earlier and more crude attempts at moderne design in this field. Neon lighting has proved to be particularly in harmony with the new style of architecture, since it lends itself to fixtures, ornament, and outlines which form an integral part of the building. General Electric has a new luminous element which makes available soft pastel shades of great beauty, furnished in tubes of varying lengths which clip into place with minimum effort. Strip lighting, concealed from the public gaze by metal, opaque material, or translucent glass, is being used in lighting cornices or central lighting features through the center of theatre rooms. Often these lighting strips, running the full length of the room near the ceiling line, may be used as baffles for conditioned air entering the room, as the unusual fixture effectually conceals the air inlet.

Other forms of strip lighting are also employed for wall treatments, in single lines, or in series of varied colors. These suggestions are equally applicable to auditorium, foyer, or lounge. The hanging chandelier in metals and glass is still used instead of strip lighting in cases where the owner prefers this type of illumination, and there are various modifications in wall and ceiling fixtures of the two styles of lighting, for use where the exhibitor does not wish to go to either extreme.

PHOTOCELL FOUNTAIN

In foyer or lounge, even the humble drinking fountain can be made an architectural feature. Terra cotta fountains, furnished in a variety of pleasing and colorful designs in stock patterns, ready to be built into the theatre structure, are now on the market at moderate cost. If bright metals or bronze are largely employed in other portions of the theatre interior, the fountain may be tastefully worked out in the same material. The addition of the photoelectric cell, which automatically causes a flow of water when a patron's shadow intercepts the beam of light above the fountain, is an interesting novelty of which the public will not soon tire.

The photoelectric cell has also been used to open and close doors in a manner interesting and highly mystifying to most patrons. A new use for the cell was recently found in a Colorado theatre in which an old wishing well was the central feature of the main lounge. It so happened that this theatre was executed in the Southwestern or Pueblo manner, rather than moderne. As the patron approaches the wishing well and leans to look into its depths, he intercepts a radio beam controlling a concealed sound effect machine, with the result that

BETTER HEATING AT LOWERED COSTS

Whether you heat your theatre efficiently or not depends on system design and operating methods. Here is seasonal advice

HEAT IS A form of energy Perhaps the most universally accepted theory of the nature of heat is that it is the accelerated agitation of the molecules of which the substance is composed—the more violent the agitation the more intense the heat.

Part of the theory of molecular motion is that every substance contains some heat, and the terms hot or cold are simply relative, indicating that the molecules of one substance are in more violent agitation than those of another substance.

In comparing the heat content of two bodies, the heat intensity as well as the quantity of heat must be considered. Heat intensity is measured in degrees of temperature, usually on the Fahrenheit scale, while quantity of heat is measured by the British Thermal Unit, B.T.U. (heat required to raise the temperature of 1 lb. of water to 1° Fahrenheit). Heat flows from a body of higher temperature to another body or to the surrounding air that is at a lower temperature.

When the interior of any building is maintained at a high temperature than the air surrounding the building, there is a continual loss of heat from the building. It is the accurate determination of heat losses that is the most important factor in determining the proper size heating plant of any particular building. Heat losses are affected by the materials of construction, general design, exposure, amount of glass, such as windows, number of doors or other openings, and the temperature range (the difference between outside and inside temperature).

A truly properly designed heating plant will only be operated at its maximum capacity from 4% to 10% of the heating season. After the temperature of a theatre has been raised to the desired 70° or 72°, it can readily be seen that the heating plant has only to replace the heat losses in order to maintain uniform temperature. Mechanically exhausting air from a theatre and replacing it by introducing air from the outside, either by another fan or infiltration, is a special form of heat loss which represents a substantial portion of the heating load of any theatre.

It is easily understandable that, to maintain a theatre at a comfortable temperature, it is necessary to supply continuously a definite amount of heat equal to the amount lost, adjusted by the amount of heat thrown off by each person in the theatre—(a person gives off from 400 to 440 B.T.U.'s per hour). The boiler of a heating plant extracts the heat from the fuel by combustion, transfers it to air or water, or converts water to steam, and the heated air, water, or steam in turn (through various systems for the transfer of heat) warms the air in the theatre.

In previous discussions various general types of heating systems have been described. [Readers with files of past issues are referred to "Heating the Theatre Economically," July 28, 1934; and to "Preparing the Theatre for Winter," August 26, 1933.—THE EDITOR.] In theatres, because of the large number of people assembled in a rather small enclosure, the problems of heating and ventilating are so closely related that they must be considered jointly. Due to the necessity of introducing cold air from the outside, most theatre heating systems are a combination of direct radiation (radiators set along the walls of the auditorium) and indirect radiation (coils or pipes or some special form of radiators located in the fresh air duct).

In designing heating plants for theatres, the heat losses from the building, through walls, exit doors, etc., are carefully calculated. This heat loss is taken care of by the direct radiation, while the heat requirements for ventilating purposes are taken care of by the indirect radiation.

There are some theatres in which no direct radiation is installed, the entire heating job being indirect. With this type of system the air must be introduced at a substantially higher temperature in order to compensate for the heat losses from the building. Also, with this type of system, recirculation of air from the auditorium is absolutely mandatory, otherwise the cost of operating such a plant is prohibitive.

REDUCING FUEL WASTE

THEATRE HEATING systems are commonly inefficiently operated. The scope for improvement, and hence the possibility of creating substantial savings, is very large.

The economic operation of any heating system depends upon the completeness with which the heat in the fuel is effectively utilized in heating the theatre. The sources of greatest waste in theatre heating may be blamed on one or more of the following conditions:

(1) Imperfect combustion; (2) too-high temperature of the gases going up the chimney; (3) coal falling through grate before it is burned; (4) radiation in the boiler room of a large percentage of heat because the boiler is uncovered; (5) radiation from uncovered pipes and risers, in boiler room, grid iron, attic spaces and inside furred walls; (6) losses because of excessive temperatures maintained in certain parts of the theatre; (7) failure to utilize the full heating value of steam due to faulty traps and valves; (8) obstructions to the free and easy circulating of steam through the system, due to old design, pipes pitching in the wrong direction where condensation forms water pockets, air pockets in the system, or a pipe system where pipes have become closed by rust or sediment or scale; (9) conditions causing improper firing of the boiler.

COMBUSTION

Combustion is defined as the chemical combination of a substance with oxygen proceeding at such a rate that high temperature is produced. Carbon is the principle combustible in coal. When the combustion of coal is complete it forms carbon dioxide (CO_2). When it is incomplete it forms carbon monoxide (CO). As the oxygen to form the chemical compound CO_2 is obtained from air, it is evident that there must be ample air supply, and the air must be supplied to all parts of the fuel bed. In order to be sure that air is reaching all parts of the fuel bed it is usually necessary to supply about 200% more air than is needed for combustion purposes. Of course, the excess air passes through the fire box and the breeching into the stack, mixes with the flue gases, and is heated to the temperature of these gases.

The excess air performs no useful service, and consequently represents a waste of heat. Hence for the sake of economy the proper firing of the boiler will hold the excess quantity of air down to a minimum. The best measure of the excess air is the percentage of CO_2 in the flue gases. Tests have shown that exactly the right amount of air produces about 21% of carbon dioxide by volume in the flue gases. With hand firing, the percentage of carbon dioxide should run between 10% and 15%, and such percentages represent excess air from 50% to about 200%. In most every community there is some engineer with instruments who can give you a carbon dioxide reading of your boiler. This is very much worth while and is heartily recommended.

Incomplete combustion, which generally means a deficiency of air, is usually accompanied by smoke. This is especially true of soft or bituminous coal. Smoke consists of unburned, finely divided carbon particles set free by the splitting up of unburned hydrocarbon gases. Smoke is an indication of fuel waste. Boiler design has a great deal to do with complete combustion and, consequently, smoke. Combustion must take place in the fire box before the gases come in contact with the colder boiler surfaces. Some of the older types of boilers frequently found in theatres present real problems in firing, but the fact that the boiler is old is all the more reason for extraordinary care in firing, as under the very best conditions the efficiencies of the older types are far below more modernly designed and installed boilers.

ASH

Ash is foreign or non-combustible matter in coal. More often it is just dirt or slate. Ash is objectionable because, first, it has been paid for as coal and therefore it represents a direct loss; second, it reduces the heat value of coal; and third, it causes no end of trouble and extra dirt. All coal will of course have some ash, but the lower the percentage the better. Ashes in the fire pit obstruct the passage of air, which, we have seen, is vitally important for combustion. Ash fuses, forming clinkers, and in removing ashes and clinkers from the fire box much unburned or partially burned coal is carried with it.

Every theatre manager is entitled to get a copy of the coal analysis of the coal that he is burning. The coal company or dealer should furnish this upon request, with the name of the firm that made the analysis. In this way the manager can check the information if he should have reason to suspect an error.

Here are the most vital things to look for in every coal analysis: low moisture content, low percentage of volatile matter, high fixed carbon content, low ash content, high B.T.U. value, low sulphur content, and high fusion point of ash content.

MECHANICAL STOKERS

Properly selected mechanical stokers will, nine times out of ten, effect savings in boiler room operations that are substantially worth while. Do not make a decision on a stoker until all of the sizes proper for the particular theatre have been investigated. There are many items to be considered before finally deciding upon the right stoker. Technically and mechanically here are some of the considerations:

1. Kind of fuel to be burned.
2. Method of draft—(a) forced, (b) natural, (c) combination of natural and forced.
3. Method of feed—(a) inclined feed: from front or from side; (b) underfeed; (c) chain grate (this is only practical on very large boilers).
4. Resulting fuel bed—thickness, accessibility, clinker condition.
5. Ash removal—automatic or manual.

In order that the benefits from a stoker can be appraised in advance, be very sure that the following points are determined:

1. Can it carry a 200% overload for short periods?
2. Can it maintain boiler conditions during mild weather when the maximum is not required?
3. How quickly can it get up steam?
4. How will it respond to changing load conditions, either up or down?
5. How does it affect boiler room labor?
6. How much electric power is required to drive the stoker and forced draft.
7. What is the initial investment required, and what will it cost to install?
8. What does the stoker company guarantee as to performance, savings, labor, maintenance and mechanical life?
9. Are any of the guarantees based upon other alterations or changes, which if not done will invalidate the guarantees?

The foregoing, combined with reasonable judgment plus a little inquisitiveness, should enable a manager to determine whether a stoker is justified for his theatre.

OIL AND OIL BURNERS

Oil and oil burners is an excellent primary source of heat for theatres. From experience I find there is not much in favor of oil over coal when the cost of operation is compared. Oil is very much more convenient, much cleaner, requires less attention, and can be controlled more easily by various types of electrically controlled instruments on the market today. Oil is primarily a hydrocarbon compound, and the actual combustion takes place only after the oil has become gasified.

Gasification is speeded up and more perfectly accomplished by mechanically breaking up the oil into a fine mist or spray. This process is called atomization. After oil has become gasified it requires heat to ignite it and oxygen (air) to carry on the combustion. When the combustion is not complete, due to an insufficiency of air, or a chilling of the gas, soot is formed, and TEMPERATURE READINGS: Letters from the field indicate that there are still some exhibitors and managers who are confused and do not clearly understand wet bulb temperatures and the dew point. I am therefore giving here a brief explanation of them.

The dry bulb temperature measures the intensity in degrees Fahrenheit of the heat (sensible heat that would burn us if it were at a sufficiently high temperature) of the air. The wet bulb measures the degree of moisture in the air. Technically the air and the moisture (water vapor) occupy the space together: the air is the medium that supports or carries the water vapor.

The dew point temperature is the temperature at which the air becomes saturated—that is, the temperature when the air is supporting or carrying all the moisture it can hold.

Air, unless artificially treated, is seldom completely saturated. By being cooled, air is contracted and its ability to carry moisture is lessened. Consequently, if the process of cooling continues, a point on the thermometer scale will be reached where the air, unable to hold the moisture in it, will begin to drop it in the form of condensation. This point on the thermometer scale is the dew point.

AIR PRESSURE: The pressure in an inclosed space filled with air or gas is generally measured or referred to in atmospheres, inches of water or inches of mercury.

One atmosphere equals: 14.7 pounds per square inch—30 inches of mercury at 62 degrees F.—29.921 inches of mercury at 32 degrees F.—33.974 feet of water at 62 degrees F.

One inch of water at 62 degrees F. equals: 0.03609 pounds per square inch—5.196 pounds per square foot—0.5774 ounces per square inch.

PROPELLER FANS: Propeller type fans can be used where there are short ducts, or where there are no ducts at all. The comparatively low speed of the blades at the hub, compared with the high speed of the blade tips, makes this type of fan very inefficient when used in an attempt to push air against the resistance in long duct runs. The air, driven by the effective blade areas toward the tips, finds it easier to pass back through the less effective blade area near the hub of the fan than to push against the duct resistance.

There is a highly developed line of propeller fans being introduced on the market. They are well built and well designed for use as indicated above.

LONG-RUN WISDOM: Misguided shrewdness and greed have been responsible for millions of dollars in the profit and loss columns of the motion picture industry—profit for some and loss for others; a new lease on life for some, the death warrant for others! A continuation of the dual policy of shrewdness and greed within the industry would ultimately result in extermination. But before this could happen the government would step in and run the picture buisness. However, brains, integrity, foresighted policies, combined with the spirit of live-and-let-live, will revive the industry and rebuild it on a sound foundation.

smoking results. The size of the fire box to a very large extent determines the quantity of oil that may be properly burned in any particular boiler. This in turn establishes limitations for the oil burner and the possibility of overloading the boiler.

The amount of excess air is best determined by a carbon dioxide analysis of the flue gas, just as for coal. Oil, however, permits of much more accurate control of the excess air than with coal firing. The character or color of the flame in oil burning is a rough indication of the quantity of air furnished: When a large amount of excess air is present, the flame approaches a white color; as the quantity of air is reduced, the color changes from white to yellow to orange to red. A red oil flame indicates too little air, which results in smoke and soot. In adjusting the air, a shade between yellow and orange (say, bright orange) is usually the color to seek. This shade generally represents about 25% to 35% excess air.

Bluish flames are caused by certain types of oil burners. This usually results when the oil is vaporized and mixed with air in a mixing chamber before being discharged into the combustion chamber.

Selecting the right oil burner for a particular boiler is a job requiring the best of unbiased counsel. The flame of the burner should be the approximate shape of the fire chamber in the boiler. The flame should never play directly against the cold boiler surfaces or unprotected parts of the boiler. Metal baffle plates are very often installed with some types of burners and such baffles require frequent replacing. Fire chamber linings and baffles of some refractory material should always be provided when necessary.

SYSTEM CONTROL WITH INSTRUMENTS

INSTRUMENT CONTROL of all heating and ventilating systems for theatres is extremely important from the standpoint of both comfort of occupants and economy of operation.

Many old plants could be made very much more satisfactory by a complete overhauling and the installation of carefully thought-out systems of control. An interesting thing is that control equipment of the electric type is not really so expensive, and frequently the economies such instruments bring about will pay for their cost in two seasons, and of course those economies, as well as greater patron comfort, will continue on.

Unfortunately there is no rule of thumb that can be given here and applied to all cases where automatic controls are being considered. There are some lobby radiators that should be on individual thermostatic controls; in other places it has proved very satisfactory to divide the direct radiation in the auditorium into four zones—(1) right side, and (2) left side of the main floor, and (3) the right side and (4) the left side of the balcony, with a set of controls for each zone.

However, the present arrangement of steam risers and the radiators which they feed will, to a large extent, determine the zone divisions. The large amount of wall hung radiation back stage certainly should be on a separate set of controls. There are many types of automatic controls that can be applied to boilers or furnaces, and such controls cannot be selected at random. Manual control of heating and ventilating plants is just as far out-of-date as the model T Ford is in automotive transportation. Automatic controls save fuel, save labor, and bring about more comfortable and uniform conditions.

SEASONAL OVERHAULING

DON'T APPROACH overhauling by saying, "We had plenty of heat last winter, my plant's all right." The cost of theatre heating throughout the country is from 15% to 25% too much. Savings of this nature cannot be realized by the mere statement that the plant is all right. Nor can one person at a distance in a general discussion of the subject put his finger right on the point of waste and inefficiency. An intelligent study of each system must be made to determine the things that must be done in order to cut operating costs and increase comfort and efficiency. Every plant should be thoroughly gone over every year. We all know that this does not happen, nevertheless it should be done.

Broadly speaking, there are four divisions of any theatre heating plant: first, the boiler; second, the piping system; third, the heat transfer units (radiators, valves, traps); fourth, the piping system for returning the condensate back to the boiler. Each of these divisions must be put into the best possible condition, otherwise don't expect efficiency and lower costs. It seems foolish to fix up a boiler and install an oil burner and expect outstanding results when the horizontal runs of pipe are clogged up to half their size with scale or rust, or when pipe lines have sagged and the lowered sections form water pockets. Yet this is exactly what happens each year, and time and again theatre managers are heard damning the new oil burner, when the piping or radiator traps are the causes of the trouble.—J. T. K.

Reports on developments in products used by theatres

IN THE HEATING EQUIPMENT MARKET

• Those who may be sweltering in midsummer's heat when they read these lines will probably not be inclined to appreciate the urgency of this message, for it is about the theatre heating plant and accessories. Nevertheless, like the matters brought forward in the opening article of this department, the heating equipment market deserves attention now, despite the fact that cooling may be the immediate operating interest.

The notes below on various items in heating apparatus on the market are scarcely exhaustive, but they at least represent important lines of product. Specifically, they are reports in response to inquiries for data on some of the newer developments.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

The equipment marketed by General Electric embraces most of the major components of an air-conditioning system, and many of the accessories. One of the most interesting of those representing recent developments in design is the General Electric vertical boiler.

The boiler is arranged for supporting the burner on top and is designed and constructed in accordance with the ASME code for low-pressure heating boilers. It is built of heavy steel boiler plate, arc welded. This boiler uses the down-draft, counterflow principle applied to the design of high-pressure boilers in which oil, gas or pulverized coal fuel is injected into the top of a water-backed combustion chamber.

SARCO HEAT CONTROL

The Sarco Company of New York has developed a mechanical system of heat control for steam and vapor systems, designed to combine the advantages of an inside thermostat for maintaining proper indoor temperatures, with an outside thermostat for proportioning the heat supply in accordance with the heat losses of the building. In addition to automatic regulation of the general heat supply, the supply to each heating unit is controlled by graduators, which are automatic heat-proportioning devices serving to balance the heating system as a whole and supplying the proper amount of heat to each unit to meet the heat losses in its particular location. The system can be applied to the distribution of heat according to sectional needs of the building—that is, to a zoning scheme.

AUTOMATIC STOKERS

Two types of stokers are put out by the Iron Fireman Manufacturing Company of Cleveland—one for bituminous coal, and one for anthracite. Each of these, of course, are marketed in several models. The anthracite stoker is available in ash-removing and non-ash-removing types. The design of these stokers provides for banking of the fire when the required temperature is reached, and when additional fuel is needed, controls flash the signal to the feed mechanism. Controls are made for every type of plant. The controls operate a motor-driven relay switch, which starts and stops the stoker automatically.

NATIONAL BOILERS

The boilers produced by the National Radiator Corporation of Johnstown, Pa., in a line of equipment including radiators and other heating units, are of a half-dozen types adapted to a variety of requirements. Of interest to theatres is the Novus sectional boiler, which has bonded outputs of from 480 to 7,000 square feet of steam, and from 790 to 11,500 square feet of hot water. It has an especially large area of over-hanging direct fire surface in the crown sheet. Of slightly larger capacity is this company's Super-Smokeless boiler.

COMPLETE SYSTEM FOR HARD-OF-HEARING

• The line of devices for the hard-of-hearing manufactured by the Trimm Radio Manufacturing Company of Chicago, now includes both air-conduction and bone-conduction earphones. Microphones, amplifiers, outlet boxes and volume controls for installation in theatres are available in the system.

The amplifier is built especially for this class of service and is entirely self-contained. The outlet boxes are mounted on the frame of the chair and are made as entirely enclosed metal box finished in glossy ivory enamel. This contains both a jack into which the phone is plugged, and the individual volume control.

veloped by the Wood Conversion Company of Cloquet, Minn., merits reporting. The trade name is Nu-Wood.

The material is made smooth on one side, and with a rough mat surface on the other. It can be applied with either surface, or with a combination of the two surfaces. The surface exposure to be used must be specified, since the tile is beveled.

The tile comes in a soft brown color, or can be obtained in a range of five variations of brown from light to dark. An ivory-color tile is also made, for application where light reflection is a factor. The material is sized in manufacture.

These tiles are obtainable in a variety of standard sizes. The plank comes in 8-foot lengths and widths of 6, 8, 10, 12 and 16 inches. It is delivered in mixed color selections unless otherwise specified. For use in acoustical treatment as well as for decoration it may be applied directly to plastered surfaces, although application to furring strips increases the absorption efficiency.

D. C. EXCITER LAMP SUPPLY SYSTEM

● A direct current exciter lamp current supply system has been developed by the S. O. S. Corporation of New York, for installation as a permanent part of the sound system, or as an auxiliary unit for emergency use. It is designed for wall or rack mounting.

This rectifier, which is of tube type, converts the current for exciter lamps only and is designed to operate where it is believed that the 120-cycle cut-off has dissipated the lower frequencies.

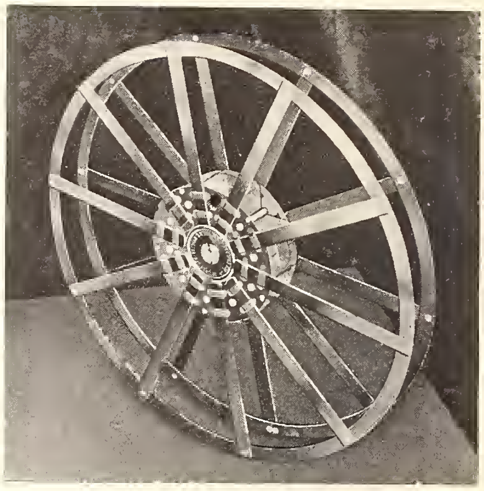
A d. c. exciter lamp ammeter is included as standard equipment, together with a heavy-duty rheostat, on-and-off switch, and an exciter lamp a. c. filament transformer to be used in an emergency. A large changeover switch is also provided. The tubes are regular 49-type as used in arc rectifiers.

RCA MARKETING HEARING DEVICE

● Arrangements are completed between the Sonotone Corporation of New York and the RCA Manufacturing Company whereby the latter company will act as exclusive distributor for the sale of the Sonotone bone-conduction oscillator device for the hard-of-hearing. It will be known as the RCA-Sonotone in all commercial fields, according to Edwin M. Hartley, manager of the RCA Photophone sales division. The Sonotone Corporation will continue to market their device in the non-commercial field—to private individuals with impaired hearing.



The 35-millimeter reel brought out by Herman A. DeVry, Inc., somewhat in the likeness of a previous 16-millimeter reel. The professional model is of similar design, made of clock-spring steel with automatic clip. It is much more rugged, however.

Under the new agreement, RCA Photophone will sell and install the RCA-Sonotone oscillator in all theatres regardless of the make of the sound reproducing apparatus in use. In theatres equipped with RCA Photophone apparatus, addition of the new hearing aids entails the use of a special amplifier, connected with the main reproducing amplifier, and double plug-in boxes placed beneath the arm of the seat-chair. In competitively equipped theatres a microphone, to be placed directly in front of the loud-speaker, is also specified as necessary.

SIMPLER CONTROL OF LIGHTING BY NEW TYPE BOARD

UNTIL A FEW years ago stage switchboards were located in the wings and operated by an electrician who, at best, could obtain but a distorted view of the performance from this location. In recent years remote control switchboards have been developed of such small size that they can be located in front of the stage where the electrician can obtain a clear and undistorted view of the performance.

Up to the present time practically all of these remote control switchboards have comprised five or more control levers per circuit whereby five scenes may be preset in advance. An improvement has now been developed in this type of switchboard whereby a much greater number of presets can be obtained in less than one-half of the space.

Cutler-Hammer Flex-O-Lite Control Board.

This improvement consists in providing only two control levers per circuit, one set of control levers for all the circuits being located in one group, and another duplicate set being located in another group. Both of these groups are housed in one very small switchboard, and templates (or program plates) are provided whereon any desired combination of illumination intensities for any and all circuits can be set up in a few minutes during rehearsal. These program plates are then numbered and conveniently located in a rack beside the switchboard.

The duplicate boards above referred to are used alternately, template for Scene 1 being mounted on board No. 1 at opening of performance, template for Scene 2 being mounted on board No. 2. A fader is used to fade from Scene 1 to Scene 2 as fast or as slow as may be desired. Program plate for Scene 3 is then substituted for Scene 1 plate on board No. 1. Pressing of a button shifts all of the levers on board No. 1 to position determined by this template, and then, at the proper time, the fader is used to transfer from Scene 2 to Scene 3, and so on, alternately, throughout the entire performance.

SUPREX ARC OPERATING COSTS

By HARRY RUBIN

Concluding with a comparative cost analysis a series by a prominent figure in projection on the Suprex light source

OPERATING characteristics, carbons characteristics, lamp characteristics and comparisons of the several types of arcs have been pretty thoroughly outlined in the preceding articles in this series. Comparative costs of operation, the subject of this article, are the result of data obtained by the writer from a number of theatres in widely separated sections of the country. The reported costs have been averaged and the average results are as given herein. The average given match very closely with my own personal tests and observations made in a number of theatres and projection rooms.

There are two types of projection arcs besides the Suprex that are in general and practical use in theatres (except the larger ones) and using direct current as a source of arc supply, either derived from a motor-generator, a rectifier or direct current from the power house. These two types of arcs are Low-Intensity and Hi-Lo. Upon these two and Suprex the operating costs are given.

There is of course another type of arc, High Intensity, but this type is not considered in this article for the Suprex arc cannot be used in place of High-Intensity.

In considering comparative costs of operation there are two main items of cost—first, carbon; second, current. In carbon cost figures the prices used are net prices to the theatre in unit packages of 50 carbons and allowance made for stub.

In current cost figures the cost of current is taken at 5c per kilowatt hour, which may be high for some localities and low for others, but as long as the same cost is used in each case the comparative result will be the same. Comparative cost tables are as follows:

Cost per hour of 30 amperes Low-Intensity arc—

Carbons	4.9c
Current cost with M. G.	19.5c
Total	24.4c

Cost per hour 75 amperes Hi-Lo arc—

Current, with Suprex Gen.		29.5
Current, with rectifier			19.0
Total	50.0	44.0	33.5

By reference to the above cost tables it can readily be seen that Low-Intensity operation costs approximately 25c per hour, while at the same approximate cost (25c per hour) a 45-ampere Suprex arc can be operated from a rectifier.

While the change involves the purchase of new equipment, the investment is often well worth making because of the enormous increase in screen illumination, as well as the great improvement in color of the light, reflecting itself in increased box office receipts.

A matter of vital importance to every business is cost of operation, and it should be noted from the above cost figures that if the theatre is now burning the Suprex arc from its old generator or from a d.c. supply from the power company, it is throwing away from 13c to 14c per hour. Operating 4,380 hours per year, one would be throwing away $569 per year.

From the standpoint of the theatre using Hi-Low lamps, there is much to be gained in cost of operation by changing to Suprex operation, for in most cases the Suprex arc operating at 50 amperes will give as good or better light at a cost of 32c per hour (if a rectifier is used) as against the present cost of Hi-Lo of 64c per hour, or exactly half the cost. In operating one year 4,380 hours the amount saved would be $1,400, or enough to pay for the new equipment in one year.

The Suprex arc at from 60 to 65 amperes will give sufficient light to replace any Hi-Lo lamp, and the saving is $700 to $800, using the most inefficient source of power.

The accompanying graph shows the operating costs per hour in cents for the

The system provides for complete air-conditioning with circulation of either heated or mechanically refrigerated air under automatic control. The air intake is at the upper part of the rear wall, and after being washed, heated or cooled, is passed, under heavy pressure, to grilles located at near the ceiling on either side of the forward auditorium wall. Blown into the auditorium, the fresh air settles to the breathing zone and is drawn off at the rear of the auditorium at the floor line (and also through auxiliary exhausts on either side of the screen platform).

The projection room, located on this level, is of prefabricated type, of asbestos construction, merely installed in place. It is hidden, however, by the rear auditorium wall.

Projection and sound equipment will be unified in an adaptation of the simplified DeVry projection-sound system. Unique in this projection room will be 16-millimeter as well as standard equipment. This might be looking toward a time when reductions of standard product may be available. At present its installation contemplates the possible use of educational subjects.

Theatre operations will be in charge of E. S. C. Coppock, general manager.

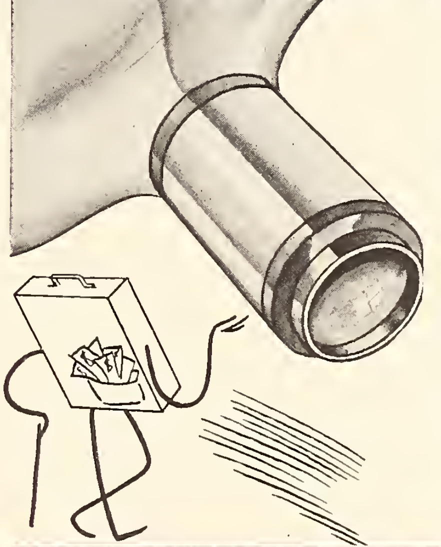
THE NECK OF THE BOTTLE



The projection lens is the neck of the bottle through which all of the qualities of a film must pass. The art of the camera man, the acting of the cast, the skill of the director, in fact, all of the qualities of a film are aided or retarded by the projection lens.

That is why so many of the leading theatres use the Super-Cinephor—the projection lens which keeps company with a full till box.

F H Richardson

EQUIPMENT NEEDED TO ASSURE SHARPNESS OF IMAGE DEFINITION

MAXIMUM SHARPNESS of definition (focus) is of high importance from the viewpoint of the box office. It therefore would seem that exhibitors should want to take every possible means of securing it. Yet we find theatres having projection distances as high as 150 feet, with projectionists depending wholly upon the unaided eye to judge picture sharpness, or at best equipped with nothing better than a cheap opera glass that is not even mounted in a fixed position and which therefore may be laid down anywhere or carried away, hence is seldom, if ever, used.

It is utterly impossible for the unaided eye to judge sharpness of definition accurately, even at so short a distance as 50 feet. In proof of that assertion, select any three objects having considerable detail, such as the leaves or bark on a tree. Let one of them be 50, one 100, and the third 150 feet away. The one 50 feet away will probably seem perfectly clear, but pull down on it with a really good opera glass, observing what an amount of additional detail becomes visible. Do the same at 100 and 150 feet. Upon such small details the projectionist must depend for real, critical sharpness of focus. True, up to a certain point sharpness of focus may be judged at distances that eliminate all small details, but for real, critical sharpness the small detail is vitally necessary. The more critically sharp definition is, the more beautiful the picture will be. The critically sharp picture will also be easier on the eyes of patrons. These considerations make definition a box office matter.

Recently I had an extended conference with an engineer of the Technicolor organization. He remarked upon the necessity for projectionists to use a good opera glass, saying that in the Technicolor screening room projectionists were required to use a glass, and that they did so with highly beneficial results.

It seems to me the very best kind of policy to have the projection room equipped with a really good opera glass, mounted permanently in place, trained on the screen, in such manner that it cannot be removed. As a matter of fact, in new projection rooms I would suggest the provision of a small, separate port immediately beside the lefthand observation port, with a glass so mounted therein that nothing but its focusing screw is movable. In this position, either lens focusing screw could be reached as the projectionist looked through the glass. I repeat, however, the glass must be of very good quality. The cheap variety would be only a snare.

Lens manufacturers might well make such equipment available, with a mount as suggested. The Society of Motion Picture Engineers has approved the installation of such equipment. Were good, moderately priced equipment of this sort made available, I believe it would in due time be installed in a very large number of our theatres, if not in them all. I certainly would urge this, and I am sure the SMPE and The Academy would do the same.

AFFIRMS VIEW ON EYESIGHT IN PROJECTION

I HAVE A letter from Mr. William H. Palmanteer, field assistant of the Tuberculosis Health Association, Rochester, N. Y., in which he says, "I read with especial interest your article, 'Good Eyesight a Necessity in Projection,' in the June 29th issue of BETTER THEATRES. Being a projectionist (member of Local Union 253) as well as a field worker for the Rochester Eye Conservation Committee, I am particularly concerned with perfection in vision among projectionists.

"A goodly percentage of the profession have suffered severe eyestrain over a period of years in the endeavor to produce good results with inadequate equipment. Recently my attention was called to an incident in which a projectionist was accused of being asleep on the job. Investigation disclosed the fact that the man occasionally closed his eyes to rest them from the strain due to conditions under which he was working. This resulted in an occasional missed cue. Very likely this same condition exists in many places. It could be wholly avoided did the men consult compentent eye physicians.

"Much has been done in the matter of equipping projectionists with better machinery, better lenses, added illumination, etc., but do projectionists occasionally check their own system with regard to good health and normal eyesight? Eyes are the lenses of the human camera, the perfection of the picture produced in the brain depending upon good vision. May I thank you for your interest in the welfare of the projectionist, as evidenced by the article in question."

THE PROJECTIONIST AND REPAIR WORK

FROM A LARGE city in the Northwest comes a letter inquiring where a projectionist may find a school in which he may learn to repair projector mechanisms. The complaint in this case is that the chief projectionist makes all the repairs and refuses to permit the men under him to watch him at the work, or to permit them to learn anything about it. In part the correspondent says:

"Our chief projectionist is of the type who regards a vacuum tube as merely something to illuminate the interior of the amplifier. He is not either anxious or willing to permit the men under him to learn anything about repair work. When we are permitted to help him at such work, about all we do is take the parts of a disassembled projector mechanism into another room and clean them, he making any needed repairs and reassembling the projector mechanism by himself.

"I have the Bluebook of Projection, which has taught me a great deal, but what I want now is some real, actual repair work on Simplex and Powers projector mechanisms. I would like you to recommend some school not too far away from here in which I can learn by taking a one or two weeks' course instead of spending my vacation this summer fishing."

What, may I ask, do you expect to learn about such work in one or two weeks. In one or two years you might learn a great deal about it, though men who work on repair work in projector factories are invariably highly skilled mechanics, some of whom have been working on projector mechanism repair work for as much as 20 years. Not only that, but they have access to tools and machines of marvelous accuracy, costing tens of thousands of dollars. I do not like to see projectionists without proper training and with perhaps three dollars worth of tools, attempting to duplicate the work of these highly skilled men

As to this chief projectionist, or any other man holding such a position, if he does not seek to impart to the men under him every possible bit of knowledge that will be helpful to them, and make them better and more efficient in their work, then he has no more conception of his duty as chief projectionist than a porcupine has of evolution.

In repairing projector mechanisms, however, save for very minor repairs, it is not the duty of projectionists to attempt that sort of work, and it is extremely poor policy from any and every viewpoint for them to do so. Time spent that way might far, far better be devoted to better purposes.

What do I mean by minor repairs? Well, for example, it is quite possible for a projectionist to install an upper or lower sprocket, a new aperture plate, tension spring or tension shoe, provided he is careful to adjust the tension at its minimum. He may install a number of parts where no very fine adjustments or wide range of knowledge or special tools are necessary. However, to attempt to monkey with (except for adjustment) an intermittent movement or a gear train—well, it just cannot possibly be done with any reasonable assurance of accuracy, and poor projection results, which may be due to a combination of several small faults that cannot be discerned individually by anyone but an expert.

As to a school, I know of none where the kind of information desired could be obtained. It would be necessary to learn the machinist trade, and learn it very well indeed, as you would be working with exceedingly fine measurements.

SPRING SUSPENSION FOR MOTOR-GENERATOR

JOHN T. SEILER — he failed to add his address—has sent a drawing with these remarks:

"On opposite side find sketch of what I have found to be, in two installations, an excellent method of spring suspension for an 80-ampere, 10-h.p., motor-generator set.

The plan is an adaptation of the spring suspension I have many times recommended for absorbing motor-generator set vibration, and in so doing, deadening any hum or other noise. It seems to be a very practical adaptation too, the only caution necessary being to select just the right strength of spring.

In the drawing, AA are iron bolts 15 inches long. I would suggest ¾-inch as the proper diameter. Under the top nuts is a heavy iron washer. BB are truck valve springs. C represents the set base. FF are discarded Hassler springs from a junked Model T Ford. D is a square wooden base frame of 4x6-inch timbers, resting on 2-inch corp pad E.

I thank Friend Seiler—though he might have attached his address.

GIVING LECTURE ON SIMPLEX

NOT LONG AGO I commended the work of Mr. John Krulisch of the International Projector Corporation, in the delivery of a most excellent, helpful lecture on the Simplex projector mechanism before the American Projection Society. I suggested that International reduce the lecture in length for publication, but it was the opinion that it could not be done effectively, in which opinion I am forced, upon further consideration, to concur.

The lecture is so excellent and was found to be so effective that the company now is having it given in various places where a sufficient number of men can be got together to justify the considerable expense. I strongly recommend that wherever there is a large local or a combination of several smaller ones, the International be asked to send Mr. Krulisch.

Recently the lecture was delivered before the Buffalo, N. Y., projectionists at a meeting arranged by George H. Signor, projectionist of Buffalo. P. A. McGuire of International, also spoke.

POTENTIAL AND E.M.F. DEFINED

JOHN L. JEFFERSON of Sedalia, Mo., asks, "Will you explain just what, if any, difference there is between E.M.F. and potential difference. Seems to me they are the same thing, but I was told they are not. Also, will you be good enough to tell me just what the term 'reactance' stands for?"

Voltage (E.M.F.) is not potential difference. It is the force or pressure with which an electric circuit is charged. It is frequently spoken of as potential difference, but it is not.

Potential difference is a difference of potential as between two different points in an electric circuit, by virtue of which current is made to flow. For example, there is a "difference of potential" between the positive and negative side of a d.c. motor; between the positive and negative end of an incandescent lamp filament; between the positive and negative of an arc lamp. It is measured in volts, but it is not E.M.F.

Reactance represents the opposition offered to the flow of any except true continuous current, by reason of inductance. It is offered in proportion to the lack of continuity. It would be slight where a current only slightly pulsating, but large were it a.c. The term is defined by text books as follows:

"In an electric circuit, a resistance having self induction. It is equal to the component of the impressed E.M.F. at right angles to the current, divided by the current, measured in ohms."

QUESTIONS FROM AN AMBITIOUS BEGINNER

T. L. DANIELS of Ashland, Wis., writes, "I am just a beginner in projection, though I hope some day to be one of those many men who have been helped and encouraged to make good by your writings in BETTER THEATRES. And, Mr. Richardson, I do so want to make good. I want to be one who can feel he has done his whole duty to himself, to his employer and to those whose pictured forms he recreates before the public. For the few months I have been in a projection room have convinced me that, as you say, projection really is a profession—that is, if a man cares to make that out of it. Otherwise it, of course, is more or less a matter of 'grinding them out.' But is that not true of almost any line of human endeavor. Is it not very largely a matter of what the man puts into his work that counts?

"And now may I ask a few questions that doubtless will seem to you very simple. But to me they are not. First, just how closely should an intermittent movement be adjusted? My instructor (the projectionist in the theatre where I am serving as usher part of the time and helping—or is it bothering?—the projectionist when the usher work is over) tells me there should be just a little lost motion in the intermittent sprocket when adjustment is finished.

"Second, is it advisable to remove the amplifier tubes and exciter lamp and scrub the prong-ends with fine sandpaper every day? Third and last, what is the best means of cleaning reflecting mirrors and condensing lenses? I hope you will not find answering these simple questions too much bother."

If Mr. Daniels goes on as he is starting off, he will be a man whom projection may well be proud of. He is not starting off with the sole idea of finding something he may make a living at with the least possible exertion—which is the rock that wrecks many. Instead he has genuine respect for the task he has undertaken. To him it is a profession. It is something to respect and build up to. He realizes its responsibilities. As to his questions, it never is a task to enlighten men of this type.

An intermittent movement should be adjusted until there is no lost motion in the intermittent sprocket, using care not to get it so close that the movement binds in any degree when the flywheel attached thereto is rotated by hand. That is the test. Set the movement up until the flywheel binds just a trifle. Then back it off a trifle, but not enough for lost motion to be felt in the intermittent sprocket. Make a last test with the flywheel after everything is tightened up—the holding screws, I mean.

As to the second question, I am free to say I don't know, except that sandpaper (even No. 00, the finest there is) should not be used. Whether it is best to use crocus cloth once a day or not, I am not certain. I therefore invite our readers to answer this question: How often should the amplifier and exciter lamp prong ends be cleaned with crocus cloth?

The reason I say sandpaper is unsuitable is that frequent scrubbing of the prongs with it might wear them away unevenly, especially if a bit of unnecessary pressure were used.

As to the third question, every day before the run is started in all-day theatres, or alternate days in two-a-day houses, remove the condenser lenses or mirrors and wash them with water, using a good grade of soap and being careful not to get the mirror-back (if a mirror it be) wet. Rinse thoroughly with clean water and polish with a soft, clean cloth, or with Kleenex paper, the latter preferably, as it is sure to be clean and lintless. In addition to this, where high-powered light sources are used, it is advisable to wipe off the mirror, or face of the collector lens if a condenser be used, before the start of each reel.

This frequency of washing may seem extreme to some, but it is good practice nevertheless, though it makes work.

mitted to the I.A. in the local having jurisdiction over this territory. He served his apprenticeship and became a projectionist. Then he came to the ——— theatre as second projectionist, remaining for several years at low wage. In 1929 he went elsewhere.

"I started at this same theatre at very low wages. Joined the I.A. as soon as possible. Presently I was raised to $25 per week as second projectionist. Served my apprenticeship—two years—and received a journeyman's card. Ever since 1929 I have held a position as second projectionist in this theatre.

"Meanwhile the man in question was working elsewhere, but he finally came back, stayed a while, then went to Chicago and worked for a time. Later he came back and took relief jobs. Then a second-run house opened near here, and he took a position as its projectionist. It closed after about nine months. He was then given all the work caused by the NRA.

"And now for the payoff. About a month ago the chief, or first, projectionist here was made manager. I, of course, expected to get the job made vacant, but this man was given the job. When our local meets next, the matter of whether or not he will retain the job, or whether it shall be given to me, will be decided.

"These are the facts in the case. The good brother left to take a better job. I remained and have been here as second man ever since. We are both married and are, I believe, of at least approximately equal ability. What I want to ask is this—and I would like your answer to lay before our local (the job of first man is very desirable, paying $52.50 per week): Assuming what I have said to be true, would you consider it right and just that I have the position, or should it be given to the other brother?"

It is not in my province to tell any local what it should do in any individual case, nor would I presume to do so. It is my privilege, however, to point out certain things having to do with right and justice.

While I have long insisted that fairness demands that the men of highest ability be given, so far as possible, the best positions, here is a case, assuming the facts as stated to be correct in which both men have approximately the same ability and the same conditions—both being married, both having served an apprenticeship, and both being I.A. men in good standing. The matter then resolves itself into one of priority in service and that is a matter having wholly to do with service for an individual employer. Men of equal ability do not have priority in service except insofar as has to do with one employer. When he quits that employer he automatically loses all priority rights. If he reenters the service of that company, he has absolutely no service priority rights whatsoever. He passed them up when he quit.

In matters of this kind, if such a case arises between two men of approximately equal ability, a local can take but one just position; namely, that the man who remained on the job in lower position should should be advanced when the opportunity comes. I believe all locals will agree to this. It is common practice, strictly observed by labor organizations in general. And in my humble opinion, it represents the most constructive policy.

ACADEMY PLAN DESERVES SUPPORT

THE RESEARCH COUNCIL of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has issued a questionnaire intended for a large number of theatres in which the following inquiries are made:

(1) Do you believe a closer, more definite contact between theatre men and studio technicians would result in general improvement in results as viewed and heard by theatre patrons?

(2) Would you approve of the issuance and distribution of a series of information bulletins outlining in a general way the technique of recording and photography, supplemented by our views as to how motion pictures may be presented to best advantage in theatres?

(3) Would you be interested in receiving such information?

(4 Will you assist us to the extent of explaining just what type of information would be most helpful to you?

(5) Advances are being made from time to time in recording and photography. As a theatre manager or projectionist, would you be interested in information which would help you to periodically modernize your equipment and be able to take advantage of these developments, thus improving the screening of your pictures?

I suggest that every projectionist send the Academy his answers to these questions. It is not asking much. Moreover your answer will supply your address, so that you will receive the matter sent out later. The Academy headquarters are at Suite 1201, Taft Building, Hollywood.

A METHOD OF MARKING CUES

H. S. ROLAND of Scranton, Pa., writes:

"I heartily agree with C. B. Baldwin's criticism of 'punch hole machine operators,' June 1st issue of BETTER THEATRES. His method of renewing cue marks is excellent. I have used it for some time. I now wish to submit a method for lining up a row of three or four cues.

"I use a template which fits a Universal splicer. The template consists of a metal plate with four holes drilled to fit the locating pins in the splicer. There is a fifth hole where the cue should be. With the film engaged on the four pins the template is placed over it and, using a sharp-pointed scribe, a circle is scratched in the emulsion through the cue hole. This is done on or in three or four frames in a row.

"I then punch out the tabs of opaque film, as Baldwin does, of a size that will just cover the circles. Lining the discs up with the circles, I cement them on, smooth side to smooth side. If a cue for dark scenes or fadeouts is required, a slightly smaller punch may be used, so that a faint white circle of light will be in evidence on the screen. The result compares favorably with the regular cue marks.

"If the projectionist has followed your

MR. LAEMMLE OFFERS CASH FOR IDEAS

CAL LAEMMLE, Universal's venerable chieftain, has just announced his intention of inaugurating a contest for projectionists. Recognizing the fact that projectionists must view each production several times, and therefore have an exceptional opportunity to analyze its action, Mr. Laemmle offers to pay a reasonable sum in cash to any projectionist making a suggestion that is adopted by Universal.

This does not mean that every suggestion advanced will be adopted. It does mean that any suggestion that is adopted will be paid for. Suggestions should be addressed to Mr. Carl Laemmle, Universal Pictures Corporation, Rockefeller Center, New York, N. Y.

Mr. Laemmle's action is along the lines of practicable recognition of projectionists and projection. A great corporation does not bother to make such an offer unless real help may be obtained.

QUESTIONS FROM AND TO MEXICO

R. CALDILLO of Mexico City, writes this interesting letter:

"I have had the pleasure of looking at one of your Handbooks of Projection. I cannot read it, but got an English-speaking friend to explain enough things so that I know it is very valuable. Unfortunately, Mr. Richardson, we have no such book in Spanish that is worth while. Why do you not print your books in our language? I am sure many of our men would like to have them.

"May I ask you a few questions about projection things? First, how much light should a motion picture screen have, and how can it be made even all over the screen? Second, what is the best way of testing for grounds. Third, can an arc lamp mirror be fixed after it is damaged. And fourth, could not the loudspeakers be beside the screen just as well as in back of it. If they were, and punching the screen full of holes were unnecessary, how much light would be saved?

"I trust, Mr. Richardson, you will not think I am too bold, asking so many questions. You see we don't often get the chance to get advice from anyone except sound engineers, and all most of them know is sound. Some of them, perhaps, don't know that quite as well as we wish they did."

Certainly you are not too bold. That's one of the reasons I'm here—to answer questions. And I'll get even with you by asking you some questions. What are the conditions down there? How much are projectionists paid? What kind of projectors and sound equipment have you? Have the Mexican projectionists any organization? What kind of projection rooms do you have? In fact, write and tell us all you can about projection affairs in Mexico.

And now your first question: That is very hard to answer, as to its first part. In deluxe theatres it runs as high as 15 or even 17 foot-candles at the screen center, dropping down gradually to about 6-foot-candles at top, bottom and sides. In smaller, less pretentious theatres it runs from 10 to 12 foot-candles at center, and 3 to 5 at margins.

For reasons it would take entirely too much space to explain intelligently, no screen is ever evenly illuminated, and probably never will be. Some time, possibly, I will grab off sufficient space to explain the matter, as it is interesting.

A magneto is really the best testing instrument for the reason that the voltage generated is high, and when using it one disconnects whatever is being tested from the circuit, or the circuit from the outside line, hence the test is, by reason of the high voltage and isolation, positive. However, you may make a pretty good check by means of a test lamp. Just insert a lamp of the voltage of the circuit it is to be used on in any ordinary socket, and to the socket terminals attach wires, called "test lamp leads," long enough to reach to the parts to be tested.

Suppose, for example, it is suspected that one side of your arc is grounded to the lamp frame. With the arc not burning, the carbons separated and the table switch closed, touch one test lamp lead to the lamp frame, and the other in succession to each carbon jaw or carbon. If there is a ground, one of three things will happen. (1) The lamp will light if there be a ground of sufficient conductivity to carry current enough to raise the lamp filament to visible red (or to incandesence). (2) The lamp will not light, but there will be a spark when contact is broken, which indicates a high resistance connection between a live part and the lamp frame. (3) Nothing at all will happen, which of course means there is no ground carrying enough current to be detected by such a test. There are other ways of testing—a bell and battery, for example. But the test lamp is the most popular with projectionists.

As to your third question—maybe yes, maybe no. It depends upon the mirror and how bad the damage is. A really good mirror may be re-backed and reground at about half the cost of a new one, after which it is practically as good as a new one. Consult your supply dealer. Some mirrors cannot be reground at reasonable cost.

Screen men assure me the perforations eliminate only about 10 per cent of the surface. There are some auditoriums in which sound probably could not be distributed in satisfactory fashion by placing the loudspeakers anywhere except in back of the screen. In my own opinion, the best available location is not at the sides of the screen, but either above or below it.

or other materials with the aid of mouldings or strips of material. As a rule low, long and narrow rooms should not be banded horizontally, for this tends to accentuate these faults, while vertical division tends to correct them.

WOOD VENEER

A plain, unbroken surface of beautiful wood grain can be produced easily with Flexwood, a wood veneer on a fabric backing, which is hung like wall paper. This material is suitable for sheer paneling, the panels being set off from the surrounding rails and stiles by use of different wood veneers, as lancewood panels framed in prima vera. Elaborate paneling can be made in Flexwood, if desired, or such features as reeded pilasters. One of the most useful veneers in Flexwood is walnut, which costs about 40 cents a square foot. There are many other woods, including exotic woods, in this material at different prices.

ASBESTOS BOARD

Good texture and color, together with very moderate price make J-M Flexboard highly suitable. This is an asbestos cement composition board that is fireproof. It can be used in horizontal or vertical banding, with metal-covered flat strips or wooden strips over the joints for decorative effect, or as a dado and various other ways. It can be bent to a radius in furring to form curved wall surfaces. The cost is about 10 or 15 cents a square foot.

SEASHELL FRIEZE

For a frieze or wall above a dado of wood veneer or Flexboard, or of black glass or other rich material, Kapashell is especially fine. It is composed of the pearly inner linings of shells from the Philippine Islands, forming a surface of over-lapping fan shapes about 4½ inches across. It should be used with the rounded ends of these fans upward. It is of a rich creamy tint enlivened by a play of delicate colors such as are seen in mother of pearl. By heat treatment this pearl shell can be given a rich golden color. Kapashell mounted on fireproof board costs about $1.50 a square foot. It is furnished in convenient sizes for the job, up to 4 x 8 feet, ready to nail in place. The nail holes can be filled with putty, with which a little of the pearl shell has been mixed. The horizontal joints can be covered with flat reeded or plain snap-on mouldings of silvery Alumilite-finished aluminum, while similar mouldings can be used along the top and bottom.

STRUCTURAL GLASS

Carrara opaque structural glass comes in black, white, cream, jade and gray, in either dull or polished finish. It can be set with close joints or with chrome metal strips in the joints, or snap-on mouldings over the joints, for decorative effect. The black Carrara glass makes a very handsome wall that, in its polished form, makes the room appear larger because of the reflections in its mirror-like surface. It can be used for the entire walls or for the dado or wall base. The 11/16-inch thickness, suitable for panels up to 10 square feet, costs about $1.50 a square foot installed. Stock sizes in this thickness can be had from 8 x 16 inches to 12 x 24 inches. The heavier thicknesses for larger panels and to withstand harder usage are 7/16-inch at about $1.75, and ¾-inch at about $2 a square foot installed. This material is also excellent for toilet rooms and stalls.

Vitrolite opaque structural glass is made in black, white, ivory, jade, gray and orchid, in black dendric surface and in several very beautiful agate colorings. The agate material shows markings that suggest whisps of smoke in varied tones and colors. Agate Vitrolite can be used in combinations of different colorings and with the plain colored material. This material is also well adapted to toilet rooms and stalls.

Fyr-Art glass units can be similarly applied, and are available in practically all colors.

Opaque structural glass can be enriched with lines or ornament recessed by sandblasting. Colored enamels and metal leaf can be applied in the ornament. The sand-blasting can be carried to any depth or through the material to form perforated grilles. Light sand-blasting on the black glass produces a frosted effect which can be shaded to suggest vertical fluting.

SHEET METAL

Sheet metal can be used for novel and effective treatments. For example, the dado can be made of sheet copper banded horizontally with flat brass-covered mouldings and the frieze of sheet aluminum similarly banded with brass. Pilasters can be made in the same way. A good color for a painted wall with such a dado and frieze is chartreuse, with a stripe 1½ to 2 inches wide painted in Chinese vermilion above the dado, and a similar stripe of soft gray-blue (ultramarine, white and a little black) under the frieze. The dado should have a black base and cap.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

HERE IS MY PROBLEM, can you give me some advice? I own the electric and water utilities of this little village. My income is a bit small and I need to add something in the nature of an amusement enterprise wherewith to help my load, electrical, and at the same time increase my income.

We are ideally located geographically to draw big crowds on the holidays, and that includes every Sunday. Nearest pictures 25 miles, and that is too far for the local people to go. But we could get many into a theatre from our big city on the week-ends from May to October.

Our local people like dramatics, and I want a theatre with a stage to accommodate private theatricals, also to take care of fraternal organization conventions—this last, since we have many German and church fraternities in these parts that would designate our little village as a convention city if we had a building to accommodate meetings.

My idea is a 300-seat theatre, with large stage to furnish accommodations for purposes before mentioned. The walls of the building could be built with hollow tile (a factory making same is within a short truck haul). I would use pressed steel trusses, steel purlings and make the structure as near fireproof as possible. Will do no decorating at this time—all of that can follow.

If you will kindly give me some figures on length, width and heights, inside measurements, with slope for floor and projection angles, etc., it would be appreciated.

I made the mistake of putting in a water wheel, turbine type, in 1927, under advice of my own consulting engineer and that of a large manufacturer of water wheels. I am junking the outfit. They gave me a quarter-turn belt drive, centers too short, and the building cannot be extended to allow longer centers between the driving and driven pulley except at an extreme cost. My loss was just a bit over $5,000 and I don't want another dose of this kind in the proposed little theatre that I plan.

I note a Trans-Lux house in your June 1st issue uses rear projection. Would that be of any advantage in my case? Of what advantage is there in such projection over the usual?—J. T. L.

The Answer:

IN THE FIRST place I doubt if a 300-seat theatre would justify the cost of a large stage for dramatics. Such a stage should be provided with gridiron or rigging loft, rigging equipment and asbestos curtain; also, it should have dressing room facilities and an orchestra pit. The cost of the stage would be the biggest item of the building cost.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

Your description of the construction of the building is satisfactory, but you should treat the walls and ceiling with acoustical materials. The least expensive method is to use sound absorbing tiles or planks. This material does not need decorating.

I do not advise you to make the proscenium arch less than 34 feet in width, and the stage should be at least 25 feet deep. These stage dimensions require an auditorium of 50 feet in width, which will give twenty-eight seats across the width of the auditorium, with a center bank of fourteen seats across, and an aisle on each side, and two wall banks of seven seats across each. This will require only 15 rows and will make a very shallow theatre.

The slope of the floor in such a small house would be 24 inches. As the proscenium arch should be at least 20 feet high, the height of auditorium ceiling about the high point of floor should be 22 feet. The projection room may be located above the foyer, which may be about 10 feet high. At this location you will have a desirable projection angle. The depth of the auditorium will be 58 feet. This space includes space for orchestra pit, seats and foyer or cross-aisle. Add to this any required space for lobby and women's and men's rest rooms.

I believe a lot 50x90 feet will fulfill your requirement.

In your case there would be no advantage in using rear projection.

The Question:

I HAVE a store-room theatre. Building is 25x140 feet, with ceiling from 14 to 18 feet high, seating 390. I am unable to accommodate my crowds at times and am contemplating taking in the building adjoining, which is the same size. Will you kindly advise me as to the amount of space I should allow for the lobby in a building which will be 50x140, and also the amount I should allow for the standee area, and also for the stage from the back wall? Do you think the best location for the fans and air washers are on the roof, in a house specially built for these.

How many seats do you think I would be able to get into this house on the ground floor. And how much more would it raise the building cost if I should raise the ceiling to a point where I could have a balcony to seat 100 to 150.

I think I would prefer to have the box office right out in front, with rest rooms on each side of the lobby, which, I think, should be in the center.

Please outline the number of aisles and chairs to each row and any other information that you may think helpful, as I intend to raise these walls to whichever height I shall decide will be best, either with or without the balcony.—C. W. N.

The Answer:

BY TAKING in the adjoining building, you will be able to have a floor area of 50x140 feet. For such a theatre I suggest a stage, or platform, 16 feet deep. The lobby should be about 14 feet deep, and foyer 8 feet wide. This will allow you space for thirty-five rows of seats. By planning a center bank of 13 seats across the width, with aisles on each side, you will have enough space for two wall banks of five seats across, making the total amount of seats across the width of the auditorium twenty-three seats, so that the total seating capacity on the ground floor will be 800 seats.

By building glass panels in the wall between auditorium and foyer, the foyer may be used for standee space.

There is no objection to locating a penthouse on top of the roof to accommodate the fans and air washer, but generally there is space in the side flare walls above exit doors, extending from the proscenium arch, which space formerly was used for organ chambers and which can now be used for such purposes.

If you require a balcony of 100 to 150 seats, the ceiling should be at least 24 feet above the high point of the auditorium floor, and the roof should be raised 6 feet. This will cost at least $1,500, including the cost of raising the walls.

is in front of the building between the entrance doors.

If rest rooms are to be located on each side of the lobby, arrange it in such a way that they are to be entered from the foyer or cross-aisle.

If there is a demand for small stores in your location, 50-foot front could provide for them, and the rest rooms could be located in the basement.

The Question:

I HAVE enjoyed BETTER THEATRES for some time, and I am interested possibly in the construction of a new theatre. I built a theatre in 1920 with a seating capacity of 650 at the peak of prices, with regrets, and now before I would consider building, would appreciate your advising me through your BETTER THEATRES department.

I have lote 50x140 in middle of the block, with the post office building joining me at the north. My idea first was to build with a store on either side, say 15x40, with theatre entrance of 20 feet, theatre proper to be built in rear of stores. No balcony, possibly with rest rooms in the basement under first lobby. Not decided whether or not I would consider apartments over second floor.

We have natural gas to heat with here at 30c for first 200,000 cubic feet, and also lignite coal that runs $3 per ton. What heating and ventilation would be recommended?

Would like a nice canopy and front, designing it with architectural glass or material similar to Formica. In fact, would like a real classy little theatre.

The floor, I think, I would prefer concrete, saucer-shaped with seating circular so patrons would have clear vision, as their views are usually obstructed with incline floor, seeing over the head of some larger person. Would prefer two aisles in the theatre. Could this be arranged in small house also? Do not care particularly for one center aisle or wall aisles. I am particularly interested in new lighting, such as cove lighting, with neon.

I would like to know the approximate cost of construction of such a building with seating capacity, with apartments above, and without. Also, if this may possibly be too expensive, would like an estimate on a 25x140 theatre. The approximate cost, number of seats, etc. Size of booth with toilet facilities, also a full basement, but this may be too much of an added expense, although find basement room very convenient.

I would want house built or brick or tile, with interior materials such as Celotex or some other good material for acoustical treatment. What color scheme would you suggest? My ideas may be flighty, and I would appreciate your advice and corrections, as this will give me the information I need before consulting an architect. —J. C. S.

The Answer:

IF YOU consider a store room on either side of the entrance 15x40 feet, there will be left 97 feet for the theatre proper. This will give space for 27 rows, by arranging the seats as follows: A center bank of 14 seats with aisle on each side, and two wall banks of 5 seats each. The total seating capacity will be 648 seats. This will require three exits.

If your building has no alley or court on either side, I advise that you consult your State theatre building code, as there is a possibility that this code may require an exit court on one side, and this, of course, would reduce the seating capacity. On the other hand the code may allow you to place one exit one each side of stage opening into the alley in the rear of the building, and adding one extra set of doors for exit purpose to the entrance doors.

Rest and toilet rooms may be located in the basement, but they should be planned so that the patrons may enter into a lounge with women's and men's rooms on opposite sides of the lounge, as remote from each other as possible.

The cost of natural gas in your locality seems to be very low, and for that reason I suggest that you use gas for fuel. Use a gas furnace with fans, air washer and filters. If you can obtain cool water, this will give you a splendid cooling system. You may, however, have to drill a well to obtain it. The advantages of heating with gas are that it is clean and needs hardly any attention. A small boiler room can house this unit, no coal room being required, and if you so desire, this unit can be installed on the second floor. This would save quite a sum of money for galvanized iron ducts, as these ducts may be placed in the space between ceiling and roof, and the air may be introduced at the ceiling, into the auditorium. In my locality, this type of installation seems to be more economical than any other.

Very effective lighting may be obtained with cove lighting in neon tubes.

Should you desire to build the theatre alone, use for estimating the minimum cost, a rate of 20c per cubic foot. Should you want apartments above theatre, this cost must be increased to at least 26c per cubic foot. A theatre 25x140 feet should be estimated at a minimum of 18c per cubic foot on account of the small span for roof girders.

The maximum seating capacity, figuring on one store, stage and foyers, would be 270 seats. I do not advise you to make the projection room less than 9 feet wide or less than 20 feet in length. For a theatre, all that would be needed in a basement would be space for boiler and coal room under stage, men's and women's rooms and storage area. It is advisable to plan for basement under stores. Even if you have use for the balance of the basement, I doubt if the benefit derived of a basement would justify the extra expenditure, so far as the theatre alone is concerned.

If you intend to use sound absorbing tiles or planks for walls and ceiling, you do not have to decorate these places as tiles or boards come in several shades, and by using cove lighting almost any color effect is obtainable.

LAW AND THE THEATRE

A DEPARTMENT DEVOTED TO LEGAL PHASES OF THEATRE OPERATION

REVIEWING HIGHER COURT DECISIONS

By LEO T. PARKER

A group of recent cases involving points of law of special interest to owners and managers of theatre properties

IT IS NOT often that the higher courts have rendered decisions involving theatre owners, so important and interesting as have been decided during the past couple of months. Many of these decisions relate to phases of the theatre business rarely discussed by the courts. Therefore, these late decisions are particularly important to theatre owners and operators.

VALIDITY OF CLOSING LAW

FREQUENTLY theatre owners enter into expensive litigations believing that city ordinances are invalid which restrict the operation of theatres on Sunday. In many instances the impossibility of obtaining favorable verdicts would be readily apparent to any theatre owner who had been informed of the holdings of recent courts on the subject, and thus the heavy expenses of a suit and necessary loss of time could have been eliminated.

First, it is important to know that a municipality has no right to pass a valid ordinance unless expressly or impliedly authorized to do so by a State law or under the cover of municipal police power by which things, which may be injurious or detrimental to the public, or likely to prevent good order, may be suppressed and prohibited.

Another important point of the established law is that a State statute is invalid if it violates the United States or State Constitutions; or if it violates a United States statute; or if it is unreasonably restrictive; or if its enforcement is disadvantageous to the public.

A city ordinance is void if it violates the United States or State Constitutions, or United States statutes; or if it violates a provision in the municipal charter; or if it contradicts a State Statute; or if it is unnecessarily restrictive; or if it is against public policy and unlikely to promote and protect the public health, morals and welfare of the general public; or if it favors a particular class of business firms or individuals.

The express and implied powers granted to municipalities, relating to police regulations, cover a multitude of subjects. Among those are the right to enact, ordain, alter, modify or repeal any and all ordinances which are not repugnant to either the laws of the United States, the United States or State Constitution, or the State statutes. Also, the police power may be utilized to improve good government of the city, to preservation of peace and good order, to suppress vice and immorality, and to safeguard the health and general welfare of the community.

Where such powers are delegated to municipalities in general terms, by either the State Constitution or State statutes, the powers are not limited to the treatment of subjects specifically named, but the city officials have implied power to determine when any specific act is deemed to be inimical to the good order or general welfare of the community.

Therefore, a municipality Sunday Closing Law is valid and enforceable if either the state Constitution or statutes authorize the city to adopt a charter, and the charter subsequently adopted by the city authorizes passing of "all ordinances," or the like. Moreover, practically all charters authorize passing of ordinances of a broad conception.

CASE

For example, in Blackledge v. Jones (Ada, Okla., 41 Pac. [2d] 649), it was shown that the charter of the city of Ada, Okla., provides that the city shall have the power to enact and enforce all ordinances necessary to protect health, life and prosperity. The city council passed an ordinance which prohibits operation of motion picture theatres on Sundays. A theatre owner was arrested, and convicted of violating this ordinance.

A fine was imposed upon him which he refused to pay, and he was committed to jail. He filed an action for a writ of habeas corpus, praying that he be discharged, and contended that the ordinance is invalid for three reasons: (1) That there is no inherent power in the city to pass an ordinance prohibiting Sunday shows; (2) that such an ordinance is in contravention of the laws of the state of Oklahoma; (3) that no power has been delegated to the city of Ada by the Constitution or laws of the state or by its charter to pass an ordinance prohibiting Sunday shows.

However, since the city charter provides that the city shall have power to enact "all ordinances," and the ordinance does not conflict with the State Constitution, and also because the State law merely provides that city charters shall not be in conflict with the State constitution, the higher court upheld the conviction of the theatre owner.

OPERATING A NUISANCE

VARIOUS COURTS have held that when a city passes an ordinance prohibiting or limiting the operation of theatres and other places of amusements, and the question often arises as to whether the ordinance shauld be enforced as to a particular person conducting or proposing to conduct such a business, the answer to the question is not controlled by the manner in which that particular person is conducting or will conduct his business, nor whether the business is a nuisance per se, but whether it may be, and often is, so conducted as to be a nuisance or deleterious to the public welfare.

Moreover, the decision of that question is within the discretion and judgment of the council, unless its power is arbitrarily exercised. If so, it exceeds the constitutional rights of the citizens and renders the ordinance void.

If the ordinance is decided by the courts to be valid, then the duty of the court is to determine if the place of amusement is likely to injure the public health, morals or safety, and if its prohibition will protect the public welfare.

It is well settled law that a court may enjoin the enforcement of an unreasonable or invalid ordinance, when its enforcement would interfere with the reasonable conduct of business or other property rights, and the court will do so if the evidence presented by the owner of the theatre clearly indicates that enforcement of the ordinance interferes with his legal rights to a greater extent than conduct of the theatre

For example, in the late case of City of Birmingham v. Leo A. Seltzer (Birmingham, Ala., 159 So. 203), it was disclosed that a city enacted an ordinance which provides:

"It shall be unlawful for any person . . . firm or corporation to conduct, or engage or participate in any test or contest by whatsoever name called, which shall endure either continuously or intermittently for a period of more than twenty-four hours."

The owner of a place of amusement contested the validity of the ordinance on the grounds that it interfered with his plan of earning a profit by utilizing contests to attract crowds. Also, he introduced testimony to prove that he had incorporated strict regulations, with respect to his contests, in an endeavor to remove all objectional features. In view of these contentions, the higher court held the ordinance void and said:

"It appears that complainant (proprietor) has taken much pains and care to eliminate all objectionable features which may be incident to that sort of contest. . . . A city has the right to prohibit an enterprise entirely, or to limit it to certain zones, when, as thus located, it bears some substantial relation to public health, safety, or morals. . . . But if a city undertakes to declare that a certain form of amusement is deleterious to the public welfare, when it has none of the elements of a nuisance, and has no capacity or tendency to become such, the act of the city in thus ordaining exceeds its power, for it thereby trespases upon the constitutional rights of its citizens."

WRITTEN AND VERBAL CONTRACTS

CERTAIN KINDS of verbal contracts are equally as valid and enforceable as written ones. On the other hand, there are many kinds of contracts which should be in writing.

For example, a contract relating to the sale of real estate, to long-term leases of real property, and to the sale of certain kinds of chattels, must be in writing, otherwise such contract is void. Moreover, a contract by which a person or firm, such as a bonding company, guarantees the account of another, or guarantees performance of any agreement, or a construction contract, is required by law to be in writing.

For these reasons it is important to know that a contract which is legally a written contract must be completely written. In other words, a contract partly in writing and partly verbal is, in legal effect, a verbal contract. Thus circumstances may arise where an incomplete writing, or one expressing only a part of what is meant, is by oral words made into the full contract; or where there is first a written contract, and afterward it is changed by verbal agreement.

Also, it is a well established rule of law that when the whole contract has not been reduced to writing, such a contract in its entirety is to be regarded as a verbal contract subject to all the incidents of purely parol contracts.

CASE

These points of the law were discussed in the late case of Naeve Amusement Company v. Shea, (Omaha, Neb., 258 N. W. 666). The facts of this case are that the owner of a place of amusement filed suit to recover payment on a fire insurance policy after his building was destroyed by fire. During the trial it became evident that the outcome of the controversy depended upon the legal construction to be given to the insurance company's contract which was partly in writing and partly verbal.

DECISION

The court held that all of the varied agreements must be construed under the

AGENT-PRINCIPAL RELATIONSHIP

By M. MARVIN BERGER

Member New York Bar

AN AGENT is defined as one who deals with third parties in behalf of another. In this definition is to be found some indication of the duties of the agent with regard to his principal, for since he acts in the place of the principal, the agent must display the utmost good faith and loyalty to him. Accordingly, the agent may not:

1. Make a secret profit at the expense of his principal.
2. Represent at the time his principal and another party whose interest is contrary to his principal's, without the latter's knowledge. If a salesman is bribed by a buyer, not only does he lose his right to receive compensation from his principal, but the principal may sue the salesman or the buyer for the amount of the bribe.
3. Sell his property to the principal or sell the principal's property to himself, without the latter's consent.
4. Disobey orders. An agent who goes beyond or contrary to the instructions of his principal (except of course in case of emergency where he is forced under the circumstances to use his own judgment) loses his right to compensation and makes himself liable for such loss as he may cause to his principal.
5. Pass his authority on to a sub-agent, unless he be authorized or unless it is customary to do so. Of course, an agent may obtain people to help him in the mechanical details of his agency, such as typing, but he must always actively supervise and keep matters involving the use of discretion and judgment in his own hands.
6. Not only does an agent owe his principal honesty and good faith, but he must also perform his duties competently. The law requires of an agent that he shall attend to his principal's business with the same amount of care and skill as that ordinarily displayed by other persons engaged in the same business. For example, in case an agent has in his custody, money belonging to his principal, ordinary prudence demands that he should deposit such funds in an account separate from his own. Again, under certain circumstances, in the exercise of ordinary care, the agent should keep books of account and render accounts to his principal.

The chief duty owed by a principal to his agent is that of paying the agent for his work and reimbursing him for advances and expenses incurred by him in the principal's business.

If in his dealings with third parties in his principal's behalf, the agent is guilty of fraud or misconduct towards them, not only does he make his principal liable for such acts, but also himself. The fact that he acts for a principal at the time, does not relieve him from the consequences of his misconduct.

For example, a theatre manager who unjustifiably assaults a patron upon the theatre premises during the hours of his employment is personally liable, along with his principal, for the act. Assume, however, that he makes this assault upon a trolley car while on his way to work. In that event his employer is not liable, for then his agent is not acting within the scope of his duties, but as a private individual.

It often happens that an agent in his dealings with third parties in behalf of his principal does not disclose to them that he is only an agent or does not mention the name of his principal. In such a case, the third party, even though he discovers the identity of such an undisclosed principal, may generally hold either the agent or the principal liable under any agreement made by the agent.

laws governing verbal contracts, and said:

"A written contract is one which, in all its terms, is in writing. A contract partly in writing and partly oral is, in legal effect, an oral contract. . . . A contract cannot be said to be in writing unless the parties thereto, as well as the terms and provisions thereof, can be ascertained from the instrument itself."

SUIT FACTORS

Obviously, the contents of a written contract speaks for itself, whereas the obligations of a verbal agreement must be proved to the court by testimony of the contracting parties and by witnesses who may have obtained some information with respect to the obligations assumed by the parties.

Therefore it is quite apparent that litigations involving written contracts are less expensive and more quickly settled, when compared with suits involving verbal contracts which require a great deal of testimony by witnesses for both litigants. The outcome of suits involving verbal contracts always is uncertain because it is impossible to anticipate the testimony whch will be given by the various witnesses. For these reasons it is advisable that all theatre owners, and executives, refrain from entering into verbal agreements, or automatically transferring written contracts from their usual legal status by making verbal agreements with respect to and in addition to the written contracts. This can be avoided by the parties signing properly dated written memorandums of any changes, or subsequent agreements, and attaching these to the original contract.

PENSION AGREEMENT IS BINDING

FEW THEATRE owners realize that an employer who issues booklets which indicates a promise to pay old age pensions to those employes who have been faithful and loyal, can be compelled to pay these pensions (Wilson v. Rudolph Company, 194 N. E. 441).

EMPLOYEE DENIED COMPENSATION

A THEATRE OWNER is not liable in damages for an injury received by a theatre employe unless the injury results from negligence on the part of the theatre owner, or by failure of the latter to abide by valid state laws and city ordinances with respect to safety appliances and devices, employment regulations, etc. Moreover, a theatre employe is not entitled to recover compensation on state compensation insurance supplied by the theatre owner, unless the employe is classified within the provisions of the insurance policy.

For instance, in the recent case of Warner Bros. v. State Industrial Commission (38 P. [2d] 5, Oklahoma City), it was disclosed that a theatre owner has a state compensation insurance policy which specifies that employes engaged in "hazardous employment" will receive a specified payment for injury or death.

A person employed as an usher in the theatre was seriously injured when he fell while changing placards and advertisements of coming attractions. He filed a claim to recover compensation and attempted to prove that his employment was in the nature of "hazardous employment" because at various times he had access to the picture machine booth and other dangerous places. However, the higher court refuses to allow compensation.

RESTRICTIVE CLAUSE VOID

CONSIDERABLE discussion has arisen from time to time whether or not a clause in a contract may be construed broadly by the court to mean all branches of the theatre business where an employe or seller contracts not to engage "in a competitive business." This point of the law was discussed in the late case of Begley v. O'Neill (183 N. E. 151, Springfield, Massachusetts).

In this case it was disclosed that the owner sold his business and contracted with the purchaser "that I will not engage in the business in any manner, whatsoever, in the Town of West Springfield, either as an employe or as owner or operator of any such business, for the period of ten years from the date of this instrument."

However, he began operating in that town, and suit was filed by the purchaser of the business on the grounds that the seller had violated the above mentioned clause. However, the court held the contract as being unrestrictive.

weird Indian melodies softly greet him from the depths of the well.

In addition to adequate decorative treatment, lighting and other features which are integral and built-in parts of the motion picture theatre structure, the new moderne show house calls for fabrics, furnishings and, of course, the necessary sound and projection equipment.

USE OF FABRICS

In reckoning his building costs, if an owner feels that he cannot set aside an appropriation large enough to include a suitable quantity of rich fabrics, I would recommend the use of less expensive materials, rather than the cutting down of the amount used. The acoustical value of draperies, covered wall panels, and upholstered chair backs, has long been recognized, so that the service rendered by fabrics of various sorts is a double one, combining beauty and utility. Where building ordinances do not legislate to the contrary, lounge and auditorium doors are being replaced by heavy drapes, the soft folds of which muffle extraneous noises almost as effectively as do doors of metal, wood, or glass, and these fabrics help to dress the house.

SEATING AND FURNITURE

Coming to the item of furniture, do you realize how moderne design is progressing in this line of endeavor? The first awkward attempts at machine-age furniture are being succeeded by products more satisfying to the eye and with greater ease for the body, in the same manner that the older type of wooden opera chair is rapidly being replaced by seats with spring backs and cushions of the greatest possible comfort.

The newer theatre chair carries in its fabrics and standards the same note which is struck in the color scheme of the auditorium, and has advanced from a mere necessity to a decorative note in the architectural plan.

In the foyer and lounge, built-in or specially designed movable furniture is growing more popular because it not only is less expensive than separate pieces purchased and brought into the house, but the same fabrics, metals and designs can be repeated in chairs, benches, tables, etc., to give a distinctive air to these rooms. Built-in pieces of furniture may be closed in at the floor, and the carpet eliminated beneath, to prevent cleaning difficulties.

The warm glow of an electric fireplace, or the musical tinkle of falling water from a small fountain, can make the foyer a focal point of interest. Recessed shadow boxes featuring coming attractions, if properly placed, can be made part of the interior decoration of any part of the theatre, and these items can easily be designed in the moderne style to harmonize with the rest of the theatre structure.

The value of pictures as a decorative note in the theatre interior should not be overlooked. It is a regrettable fact that for some years past there has been a trend away from the use of pictures and books in the furnishing of residences. Perhaps we, as a nation, have failed to realize in these latter years that art and good literature play an essential part in character building. With the filming of many of the great classics, the screen is in some measure attempting to overcome this deficiency, and the placing of copies of genuine works of art, where the original paintings are out of reach, on the walls of foyers and lounges in the motion picture theatre cannot help but demonstrate a desire on the part of exhibitors to create a certain amount of cultural atmosphere. Statuary also finds a pleasing background in the simple lines of moderne design

There must necessarily be a commercial side to the entertainment offered by the screen, else little inducement would be offered for investment in undertakings of this nature. But cannot we combine a good investment with a great ideal, the combination of clean recreation with the proposition that the motion picture theatre shall take its place as a magnet-like center which shall draw into its doors the beauty-loving members of the community it serves?

"FOX IS TOPS IN 'A' PICS!

"Latest compilation of STR's Film Derby Chart indicates an almost unprecedented rise on the part of a company within a few months in the case of Fox . . .

"Of even greater significance is the fact that this company rolled up seven Class "A" pictures, the largest in this classification from any major company, beating — — and — —, its nearest rivals by two pictures.

"The recent affiliation of Fox with 20th Century bids fair to make that producing organization one of the strongest in the industry."

MADE OF MEN

CURRENT speculation on the realignments now in progress among larger interests in motion picture production and distribution have been jelled into a Hollywood forecast published by the New York Times seeing ahead a final crystallization into four great companies, ruling the screen world.

It may look that way, but it will never happen.

We merely have again a recrudescence of a line of speculative thought that assumes that the motion picture can, or is likely to, follow the patterns of some other big industries, the motor car for example.

That can happen only in the minds of promoters, exploiters, manipulators, or what we used to call financiers and bankers.

It would be convenient if the picture business did follow such simple patterns of concentration, but it does not. Examination of case histories for some twenty years will show that after about a certain period of time, or a certain stage of expansive development, something happens to picture companies. That is because there is no such an entity in the picture business as is commonly implied by the word "company" in general industry. No matter who comes or goes, in, for instance, such organizations as the Telephone Company or U. S. Steel Corporation, the concern plows on with about as much real effect to be observed as would accompany a change of captain on the Mauretania.

Those are businesses in which it is commonly the experience that 2 and 2 make 4.

In the motion picture industry, the real values of which are men and ideas, and the men only as producers of ideas, 2 and 2 do not often make 4. The answer may be anything from 0 to maybe 8 or 10.

Size, in the motion picture business, means nothing beyond the immediate moment. It was, let us observe, only a short spell ago that Twentieth Century, now looming large in affairs, consisted of little more than two men and a notion. Meanwhile in a short period of years several of the biggest and most pretentiously important corporations of the industry have vanished substantially without trace. Further, demonstrating the special order that obtains in this industry, we have examples of continuing and periodically prospering corporations which have died several deaths and, failing to admit it, have risen like asparagus after the cutting.

The not too obvious fact is that motion picture corporations are not only exactly like men, they are men, variously costumed in the guises and uniforms of industry for the purposes of commercial conformity and convenience. The external forces of finance, banks, bankers and their—shall we say clientele—meaning stockholders, endeavoring to deal with motion pictures in terms of commodity, therefore often come up against surprises.

It will presently be more widely realized that motion picture enterprises enjoy very little of inertia values, that the power stream must be on all of the time. The Chase bank decisions reflected in the current Twentieth Century-Fox arrangements, the earnest efforts at a crystallization of manpower by RKO, the manhunting ordeals of Paramount's tedious emergence, the capable persistence of Universal, the renascence looming in United Artists—all these are evidence enough that the industry as much as its product is made of persons and personalities.

And all this makes it appear that the pattern of consolidations, mergers and such manipulations, the like of which may control the making of soap and motor cars, will not and can not rule an industry which is motivated as men are motivated.

Once General Film had all the real box office values in the world. For a moment Triangle held Griffith, Ince and Sennett. Once Famous Players-Lasky had about 85 per cent of all star values. Dreams of all-embracing control have always been proved dreams.

Today's deals and manifestations, and some that are just around the corner, are aftermaths of two major impacts, sound and depression, and their effects are much more important to corporations than to men.

The men of the motion picture business are still individualists. There will always be about as many companies as there are captains.

REMEMBERING

THE wires bring tidings that the able and erudite Mr. Keene Abbott, for more than twenty-five years critic and reviewer for the Omaha World Herald, is to retire this week. A hail to him who when we were in our twenties made gay with a brave coterie of reporters in that hard-bitten town on the rolling river, the wild Missouri. Keene, glory to him, achieved national distinction in letters with his novels and delicately limned short stories, the while devoting his days to routine and often invasively unharmonious newspaper reporting. It is pleasant to remember him, with Miles Greenleaf, Charles Ladd Thomas and mayhap Herman Peters, aligned, foot-on-rail, at "The Merchants" with the Old Yellowstone beaded in the glass.

THE New Dealer is now designing new coins for us, a square one-mill piece and a half-cent with a hole in it, Chinese fashion. It may be observed that it is quite a while since we have had any square money, owing to the fact that the same management has shot quite a hole in the dollar, too. The life-saver model half-cents can be put on strings and we'll be right back to the wampum era.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

We're Surrounded!

From 10 different points the motion picture industry and its corporate units are being examined and attacked.

The Sabath congressional committee, the McAdoo senatorial committee and the Securities and Exchange Commission are scrutinizing reorganizations; the Department of Justice is moving against major distributors; three bills to ban block booking and impose industry control are pending in Congress; an inquiry is in prospect for Electrical Research Products, and surveys are to be launched by the U. S. Census Bureau and the NRA.

The story of the beleaguered industry is on page 13.

Du Pont Buys

Pathe Exchange, Inc., on Wednesday reduced its stock interest in DuPont Film Manufacturing Company from 49 per cent to 35 per cent by selling 1,400 shares to E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Company for approximately $1,140 a share.

Of the approximately $1,596,000 total proceeds, $1,500,000 will be used to reduce the company's $2,000,000 obligation to the Bankers Trust Company. During a hearing in the New York supreme court recently on an application for an injunction to block the sale, the proposed selling price was given as $1,680,000. On page 14.

Fox Film Earnings

Consolidated net profit of $1,355,781 for the 26 weeks ended June 29, 1935, after all charges, including federal income taxes, was reported Wednesday by Fox Film Corporation.

This compares with a consolidated net profit of $1,199,241 for the same period ended June 30, 1934. For the quarter this year the consolidated profit from operations, after all charges, including federal taxes, was $738,974, compared with the first quarter profit of $616,806 and a profit of $393,865 for the second quarter of 1934.

On the basis of the 2,436,409 shares of Class "A" and Class "B" stock outstanding, the consolidated net profit for the first half of 1935, after all charges, including federal income taxes, amounts to 55 cents a share, compared with 49 cents for the same period of 1934.

The consolidated earned surplus at Dec. 29, 1934, was $3,006,812, and after adding the net profit and profits on foreign exchange amounting to $20,940, the consolidated earned surplus at June 29, 1935, said the report, stands at $4,383,533, all of which has accumulated since the effective date of reorganization, April 1, 1933.

Gross operating profit was $21,043,004 for the 26 weeks, including $20,369,421 gross income from "sales and rentals of films and literature." Amortization of production costs amounted to $10,495,570; operating expenses of exchanges, head office and administration and the like, $5,178,831, and participation in film rentals $3,443,903.

Net profit before interest and depreciation totaled $1,881,728, and net before provision for federal income taxes was $215,000.

No theatre earnings are included in these figures from National Theatres Corporation in which Fox Film has an interest of 42 per cent.

Spoor Facsimiles

Third dimensional filming of Broadway stage hits, scene for scene as on the legitimate stage and with the original cast, is the plan of George K. Spoor to provide product for his projected 12-theatre circuit.

"There'll be no location trips, no directors, just the usual technicians," Mr. Spoor told the HERALD correspondent at Houston, Texas, where he is interested in oil wells. "The process will take no more than three hours."

Mr. Spoor predicted that in 10 years the present method of making motion pictures will be obsolete. His observations are on page 27.

The Art Theatre

The financial newspapers, not the tabloids, are the best advertising medium for the so-called Fine Arts Theatre, says George Kraska, operator of a playhouse in Boston, which makes its appeal to the "intelligentsia" audience.

And while the bizarre is a sturdy handle for the Art Theatre to cling to, both in physical appointments and in operation, the picture itself is first and last the big requisite to a happy box office, Mr. Kraska has found. Too many attempts to conduct the specialized theatre have come to grief because the owner has forgotten to establish a reputation for good programs in his eagerness to advance the exotic, the manager has learned.

Nor is the showing of foreign language pictures a fundamental secret of successful operation, he says—some foreign language films have drawn well, others have not; it's rather the attracting of special audiences with carefully booked product, properly exploited. College towns make the best locales for art theatres, in the opinion of Mr. Kraska. His observations are noted on page 17.

For 2000 ft. Reels

Adoption of a standard 2,000-foot reel on January 1, 1936, was recommended to the producing and distributing companies on Tuesday night by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

No change in operation of the theatre would be entailed, the Council's subcommittee pointed out, while savings approximating $250,000 a year would be effected for the companies. The story is on page 16.

Trans-Lux in London

Trans-Lux, Ltd., formed in London as an affiliate of Trans-Lux Movies Corporation of America, has projected a circuit of from 150 to 200 theatres in the British Isles and on the Continent, reveals Percy N. Furber, chairman of the American firm, who has returned from London after negotiating the deal with Lord Beaverbrook and others.

Prominent personalities will be in charge of the British affiliate. Will Evans, widely known British theatre man, is chairman of the board. Peter Rudyard Aitken, son of Lord Beaverbrook, is president. Norman Holden, son of Sir Edward Holden, leading banker, is a director.

Immediate construction of the two first houses in the West End of London will start as soon as sites are determined. See page 32.

Lawyers Indignant

Attorneys whose fees were objected to in entirety by Thomas D. Thacher, special counsel for Paramount in opposing many of the $3,221,328 allowances asked by 53 applicants in the company's reorganization, this week were charging virtual "repudiation" of the reorganization agreement whereby committees and counsel were to be compensated for their services.

The legal cooks who stirred the broth of Paramount Publix were indignant at Mr. Thacher's attitude, and at the adjourned hearing last week Alfred A. Cook, of counsel for the company in the reorganization, reminded the court that the company had pledged a "solemn obligation" to compensate certain of the committees and counsel.

Mr. Thacher opposed payment to 15 applicants who seek a total of $705,000, recommended payment in full of only $72,859 in fees, and asked that most of the other requests be reduced materially. Judge Alfred C. Coxe is expected to announce his decision late in August. See page 39.

20th-Fox Inquiry

That a committee of stockholders of Fox Film Corporation may appeal to the attorney general of New York state or to the Securities and Exchange Commission for an investigation of the merger of Fox and Twentieth Century Pictures was indicated this week by Henry L. Sperling, New York attorney for the committee. Stock transfers under the consolidation are a subject of special interest to the committee, of which L. T. Pidwell is secretary.

Further evidence of progress made by Twentieth Century since its organization in May, 1933, and by Fox Film Corporation since its reorganization in July, 1933, although it had paid no dividends since June, 1931, is reflected in figures submitted to the New York Stock Exchange in obtaining permission to list new securities of Twentieth Century-Fox. Details are on page 30.

Warner Profit

With a net operating profit of $371,591, after amortization, depreciation and federal income taxes, for the 39 weeks ended May 25, Warner Bros. Pictures' report last weekend presented a picture contrasting with that of the corresponding period last year, a $528,836 loss before federal assessments. The consolidated profit and loss statistics appear on page 33.

French Organize

Reorganization of the French industry at last is being undertaken, writes Pierre Autré, Paris correspondent of the HERALD. The newly organized Comité du Film, representing producers, distributors and exhibitors, has gone into action.

The first step was to publish the provisions of a standard exhibition contract. The second was to bar admission charges below 20 cents in first-runs of the districts and provinces and 16 cents in subsequent-runs.

Another development noted overseas is the formation of an International Film Chamber, concerned primarily with quota matters. Some members have the thought of using the Chamber to protect European product against American.

While these moves are under way, the French exhibitors still are awaiting the oft-promised reduction of taxes. Progress now has been made at least to the extent of outlining of a forthcoming decree to pare the state tax by one-fourth and to cut the pauper tax in half, this last at the discretion of town councils. The story appears on page 31.

Kontingents

With the so-called Kontingent Law extended in its present form to June 30, 1936, as far as American distributors are concerned, allocation of German import licenses is now underway.

Besides the 30 licenses again to be handed to exporters of German product, the Ministry has at its disposition 15 additional import permits, which can be released on application, making a total of 45 import licenses.

Details, by J. K. Rutenberg, the HERALD's Berlin correspondent, appear on page 51.

Back to the Law

Sol A. Rosenblatt, formerly NRA division administrator for the film, legitimate theatre, radio broadcasting, transportation, advertising, garment and apparel codes, and until recently national compliance and enforcement director under the NRA for all codified industries, has returned to the practice of law.

This week he announced the formation of the firm of Sol A. Rosenblatt, with offices in the International Building, Rockefeller Center, 630 Fifth avenue, New York.

Associated with him as a member of the firm is William B. Jaffe, formerly with the law firm of Nathan Burkan, whence also came Mr. Rosenblatt, and for six years in charge of the legal department of Columbia Pictures.

Stage Relief

Hallie Flanagan, professor at Vassar College and head of the experimental theatre at this center of education for young women, has been named by Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins to direct theatre relief work.

In Illinois, officials of the Works Progress Administration proposed this week to Washington a $718,840 project to provide a year's employment for 7,000 professional musicians and entertainers in Chicago.

While these federal developments were under way Actors' Equity Association in New York was standing pat on its decision that payment must be made to legitimate stage players for rehearsals, according to Frank Gillmore, president.

The story is on page 18.

Boards of Trade

Distributors are reported to be planning to restore the Film Boards of Trade to active duty in 33 exchange centers.

The new boards, which would be in operation by October 1, would take an important part in voluntary arbitration matters, in addition to the regular functions of the former boards, such as activity in local and state legislative movements, settling contract disputes, acting as contacts in public relations work, and supervising fire inspections at exchanges. See page 34.

Organized

Initial moves by independent exhibitors to oppose Loew's, RKO and Warner in Greater New York were taken Wednesday at a meeting of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, when Milton C. Weisman, attorney, announced formation of Independent Theatre Circuit, Inc.

Seventy-two theatres enrolled immediately and operators of more than 60 other houses indicated they will consider the plan.

Redundancy in Britain

Seeking a solution of "redundancy," which is the British word for overbuilding or overseating, legislative committee of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association is reported to have come to the conclusion that not much can be done about it until the distributors take a hand with them.

The committee is expected to propose that exhibitors and distributors jointly petition the Government that a law be passed making each new theatre project subject to official approval. See page 54.

AVALANCHE OF INQUIRIES ROLLS AGAINST INDUSTRY

Sabath and McAdoo Committees and Securities Commission Study Reorganizations; Three Fight Block Booking

Department of Justice Prosecuting Large Companies; Congress Inquisitive; Census and NRA Surveys to Be Launched

Already the subject of severe attack in both branches of Congress, the motion picture business and its corporate and trade practices in the next few months will face an avalanche of investigations, examinations, legislative assaults and searchings in 10 different moves undertaken in the name of the United States government, according to present indications.

Reorganizations of Paramount Publix Corporation, Fox Metropolitan Playhouses and Fox Theatres, and possibly Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, will be under the glare of the spotlight soon after Congress adjourns. The committee headed by Congressman Sabath of Illinois is priming itself for the job, having this week been assured by President Roosevelt that he favors some action in such matters.

The various moves current, pending and impending, fall into five categories:

1. Investigations of corporate reorganizations by the Sabath committee, by the McAdoo Senatorial committee inquiring into receiverships and bankruptcies, and by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

2. Congressional legislation including bills sponsored by Representatives Culkin, Celler and Pettengill, all aimed to outlaw block booking and blind buying but through different methods.

3. Department of Justice moves against distributors as exemplified in the Government's prosecution of major companies in St. Louis, and as indicated in a progressive scrutiny of distribution practices in some key centers.

4. Congressional exploration of the ramifications of American Telephone & Telegraph Company and its interest in the film industry, with special attention to its subsidiary, Electrical Research Products.

5. Surveys, to be launched by the census bureau and, in a larger scope, by the NRA.

Members of the special Sabath committee investigating real estate bondholders' reorganizations are keeping in close touch with the Paramount and Fox reorganizations, and, as soon as the legislative situation permits, will return to New York for further hearings. Committee investigators are now at work in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Los Angeles and other cities, it is reported from Washington, and are developing considerable material.

That these inquiries may go further than originally intended was indicated by a spokesman for the committee, who said its members were intensely interested in the $3,679,000 allowances granted or requested by committees, trustees, counsel and attorneys in the Paramount bankruptcy and reconstruction.

He also revealed that the Sabath committee is interested in the methods by which the fees were fixed. He intimated that because bondholders were not given an opportunity in court to cross-examine reorganization committees and their counsel, these would be called before the investigating committee, and said the committee felt that the question of fees in the Paramount case would have a bearing on future reorganizations.

FEDERAL BAR ASKS "RACKETEER" INQUIRY

Stirred apparently by the wide publicity given to the Paramount Publix reorganization and the applications for fees, Henry Ward Beer, president of the Federal Bar Association, representing the states of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, on Tuesday called on President Roosevelt to have the Sabath congressional committee return to New York.

Mr. Beer demanded an investigation of stock and bond transactions as well as of "new forms of racketeering that seem to have developed in corporate reorganization." Copies of resolutions adopted by the Federal Bar Association were sent to the White House.

"The committee has such vast scope that once we get started we don't know what will be looked into," he added.

"Serious charges" filed against Judge Alfred C. Coxe, who will decide the Paramount fees, will be aired by the Sabath committee, according to Congressman Thomas O'Malley of Wisconsin, a member of the subcommittee. Congressman Francis D. Culkins of New York is joining in the inquiry, in which it is reported all Erpi-Paramount connections will be investigated.

Matters concerning the Paramount Broadway Corporation and Allied Owners' Corporation and other theatre holding firms will be subjected to searching scrutiny, it was said in New York.

Witnesses in Fox "Met" Study

Among witnesses to be called in the Sabath committee's delving into Fox Metropolitan will be William Fox, Joseph M. Schenck, A. C. Blumenthal, Milton C. Weisman, representatives of the Irving Trust Company, trustee for Fox Metropolitan, and others. Several already have been heard. The investigators' present activities are preliminary to open hearings, which may start in two weeks.

Fox Theatres Corporation also will be investigated, but it is not definite as yet that the recent film company merger will be scrutinized, said I. Edgar Levy, counsel for the committee.

Given an assignment to investigate reorganizations generally, the committee is taking the Paramount and Fox matters as a part of a study which involves a number of large company reorganizations and will not concentrate on the motion picture cases, although they probably will be discussed in the report which will be submitted to the House next session.

The Paramount and other film company reorganizations are expected to be included in a broad investigation into receivership and bankruptcy proceedings in the federal courts, starting in December, by the committee of Senator William Gibbs McAdoo. The Senate has voted this committee additional powers, and the Department of Justice has been requested to provide the necessary investigators and legal assistance. Senator McAdoo has made public recognition of the large total of fees applied for, while Senator Nye of North Dakota read to the Senate the schedule of fees and charged efforts were being made to "loot" the company.

Currently concerned with corporate reorganizations is the Securities and Exchange Commission, which has disposed of Paramount and now will focus attention on Fox Metropolitan and other concerns. The Commission's report to Congress is expected to set off a broadside against financial practices of the committees and individuals in connection with the companies' affairs.

Apart from these investigations, the exhibition, distribution and production branches of the industry are threatened with regulation and control under the terms of the bills introduced by Representatives Celler, Culkin and Pettengill. All would ban block booking. In addition, the Culkin measure would create a motion picture commission which would impose control on the industry. The Pettengill measure, favored by Allied States and opposed by the MPTOA, virtually would vest control of the industry in a government bureau. The Celler bill, which amplifies and revises an earlier proposal, also aims to regulate film rentals and hits at the large circuits.

Texans' Complaints Studied

The Government's attack on alleged monopolistic practices will be resumed in the term of the U. S. district court opening in St. Louis September 30, when the prosecution of Warner, Paramount and RKO is scheduled to get under way. Representative Culkin recently advised Congress this trial will have a far-reaching effect on the industry. A progressive investigation by Department of Justice operatives in various exchange cities is believed related to the trial.

Complaints of independent exhibitors in Texas are being investigated by the Government, which has obtained records in connection with the cases from the former motion picture Code Authority. The protest is against alleged circuit dominance.

Taking another turn, a thorough investigation of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company is in prospect by the Federal Communications Commission. Delay has been occasioned by inability to find a vigorous prosecutor; but when it gets under way the inquiry will go deeply into the company's film interests, particularly with respect to Electrical Research Products, its subsidiary through Western Electric. Charges of "monopoly" in virtually controlling the sound field have been made in this connection.

Distinct from the inquiries mentioned, two federal surveys are to be made. A second census of theatres will be taken by relief roll workers next January for the U. S. Census Bureau, similar to the one conducted in 1933. The NRA is expected soon to launch a study of the industry from its inception, embracing production, distribution and exhibition, as part of research into the larger industries.

PATHE SELLS 1,400 SHARES TO DU PONT

$1,596,000 Transaction at $1,140 a Share Reduces Pathe Interest in Du Pont to 35%

Pathe Exchange, Inc., on Wednesday consummated the sale of 1,400 shares of DuPont Film Manufacturing Corporation capital stock to E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Company for approximately $1,140 a share, the transaction totaling approximately $1,596,000.

Of the proceeds of the sale, $1,500,000 will be applied to reduction of the company's debt of $2,000,000 at the Bankers Trust Company, the announcement said.

This reduces to 3,500 shares or 35 per cent the interest of Pathe in DuPont, as compared with 49 per cent interest held prior to the sale, which was listed in the Pathe reorganization plan at its 1931 valuation of $4,000,000.

Pathe's original proposal to dispose of 1,400 shares of its DuPont holdings gave the sale price as $1,680,000, revealing a current valuation at that time of $1,200 a share. The difference between the proposed selling price and the actual total is $84,000.

Basis of Court Ruling

The proposed price was made the basis of Justice Lauer's recent denial in New York supreme court of the application of Pat Casey and E. B. Derr, Pathe stockholders, who sought an injunction to prevent the sale.

The court ruled there was nothing in the plaintiffs' contention "from which the court could conclude that the price at which the sale is proposed to be made is not a fair and adequate one." The court added that "interference with the proposed sale would not be justified" and that no basis for criticism of the Pathe officers and directors was disclosed.

The petition also asked the court to restrain the Pathe directors from putting the reorganization plan into effect. Mr. Casey and Mr. Derr have pending an application for a reargument of their petition. If it is denied they plan to take the matter to the appellate court.

See Early Dividend Use

The conditions and terms of the sale had been carefully scrutinized by Pathe attorneys, said Willis C. Bright, a vice-president of the company, and they determined that it fully conformed to the understanding of the court.

The stock transfer will place the company in a sound financial position, the announcement said, adding that, upon completion of the reorganization, it will be able to apply a substantial portion of current earnings to the payment of dividends rather than to the "extinguishment" of debt.

Pathe Exchange A stock opened Wednesday at 10¼, rose to a high of 11¾, dipped to a low of 10¼, closing at 11⅝ with a net gain of ⅞ of a point.

PROVIDES OPINIONS OF OTHER EXHIBITORS

The value of the department "What the Picture Did for me" as a forum for expression of exhibitors, out of which the showman obtains information to determine his own course of procedure, is explained by John J. Metzger of the Oriental theatre in Beaver City, Neb., as follows:

"These reports are valuable to other exhibitors. We do not all see them in the same light, and personally in picking a picture I would rather have the opinion of several."

Court Promises "Something" On RKO Reorganization Fees

Federal Judge William Bondy, at a hearing last week of attorneys representing petitioners for more than $281,525 in fees in connection with the RKO reorganization, informed the lawyers he "would allow them something."

Fees are sought by Irving Trust Co., as trustee of RKO, $100,000; Donovan, Newton, Liesure and Lumbard, counsel to the trustees, $126,645; Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, special counsel to the trustee, $19,320; Randolph E. Paul, tax expert, $35,464; Price, Waterhouse & Co., auditors, $3,275, and an application for an unnamed amount submitted by Thomas D. Thacher, who served as special master at hearings on large creditor claims against RKO. The RKO applications were without opposition except for an attorney representing one James Young, whose status as an RKO creditor was disputed by counsel for the trustee. Judge Bondy took the applications under advisement after indicating appreciable reductions would be made.

Louisianans Threaten Bill To Cut Circuit Protection

A bill to compel distributors to reduce the protection now held by affiliated houses is planned by independent exhibitors in New Orleans in event a special session of the Louisiana legislature is called. The independents plan a conference with Senator Huey P. Long on his return from New York before formulating any action.

Bank of America May Finance Abroad

The Bank of America, of which Dr. A. H. Giannini is chairman of the executive committee, may participate in financing of foreign producers.

Dr. Giannini arrived in New York from Los Angeles on Wednesday, and sailed on the Normandie. He will be gone a month.

Legion Defends Right of Screen To Depict Crime

A statement of the position of the Legion of Decency toward the use of crime plots and material in the making of motion pictures, presented in a letter to the Buffalo Evening News by the Rev. Edward S. Schwegler, head of the Buffalo Legion, reiterates the terms of the Production Code. In his letter, he says:

"Your editorial, 'Cops and Robbers,' again brings up the moot question: what subjects are proper for presentation on the screen?

"Your intimation seems to be that crime should be eliminated from the pictures. If the argument be well founded, then you should logically demand that a number of other things should be kept out of the films. There should be no 'horror' pictures, no matrimonial infidelity, no murder mysteries, no suicide scenes, no presentations of the drug traffic, no drunkenness, etc. For to present any of these things realistically, though in a proper moral light, would presumably be 'the film industry's idea of reform,' and therefore worthy of censure.

"The Legion of Decency, on the other hand, has preached in season and out of season that crime, vice, sin, etc., were proper subjects for the films if they were presented in their true and reprehensible colors, and if the presentation was not so detailed and lurid as to become disgusting or demoralizing. It has also insisted that certain films would do harm to one, children included, and that certain others were fit for adults only.

"These doctrines are pointedly exemplified in the current cycle of 'G-Men' pictures. The racketeer is presented as a racketeer, not as a 'dashing and debonair fellow,' and the presentation, mostly, is not of a kind to disgust the average audience or incite it to crime. We have therefore recommended the majority of these pictures locally, but for adults only.

"Of course, there is the question whether the films are not overdoing the 'G-Men' theme. Such is always the case in movieland; a new idea, a new theme, is done to death.

"For the rest, it is rather naive on the part of a newspaper to call the films to task for a too lurid presentation of crime. What of all the headlines—first page ones, too—given to 'murder, kidnaping, robbery with violence, arson?' What of the Hauptmann case? —Edward S. Schwegler, D. D."

Distributors Await New York Tax Decision

With arguments completed, representatives of distributors in New York are awaiting a decision from Comptroller Frank J. Taylor on application of the city sales tax to film rentals. Estimates on the basis of eight major companies distributing locally place the annual amount of the tax at between $400,000 and $500,000.

The distributors contend that films are leased and not sold, and are governed by federal copyright under which they are leased, and consequently no municipality has a legal right to tax them.

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM

SCENES FROM WARNERS' SHAKESPEAREAN FANTASY

The subject of this presentation in the Herald's series of advance stills from 1935-36 product is a production certain to be one of the screen's most prodigious efforts. In a sense it represents the translation, into the terms and technique of the motion picture, of Max Reinhardt's spectacular stage production, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," with the original music of Mendelssohn. Co-directing with Mr. Reinhardt, however, was William Dieterle. Cinematography was in charge of Hal Mohr. Principal players in a huge cast are James Cagney, Joe E. Brown, Dick Powell, Jean Muir, Victor Jory, Verree Teasdale, Hugh Herbert, Anita Louise, Frank McHugh, and Olivia de Haviland.

2,000-FOOT REEL STANDARD ENDORSED

No Change in Theatre Operation, Companies Would Save $250,000—Academy Council

That a 2,000-foot reel length be adopted and be made standard for the industry on Jan. 1, 1936, was recommended Tuesday night in Hollywood to the producing and distributing companies by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

In a formal report transmitted from the Council to each of the companies participating in the cooperative technical program, William Koenig, chairman of the Research Council, pointed out that savings approximating $250,000 a year would result to the companies by adoption of the longer reel.

Conducting the survey on behalf of the eight large companies, the Council's reel length subcommittee, consisting of J. M. Nickolaus, superintendent of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio Laboratory, chairman, A. J. Guerin, J. J. Milstein, Sidney J. Twining, and Gordon S. Mitchell, manager of the Research Council, has been investigating every phase of the motion picture industry as it is concerned with the length of the reel in which film is sent to the theatres.

See Big Savings to Studios

The use of the longer reel would involve changes in operating procedure in the studio and the film exchanges, in that film is now sent to and from the theatres mounted on a 1,000 foot reel, while in many theatres it is rewound on to a larger reel and projected to the screen in 2,000 foot lengths. Adoption of the new reel standard would eliminate this "doubling" of reels in the theatre, the subcommittee pointed out, and would result in savings of many thousand dollars a year in film replacements due to damage of the film when the reels are cut apart to be sent back to the exchange. With each "doubling" operation, it was shown, two frames of film are cut away from each reel, causing a "jump" in the film and necessitating replacement of the reel end by the exchange.

With the new reel standard, film would be projected in all theatres on the original reel on which it is sent from the exchange.

Changes in cutting technique in the editing of pictures as a result of the new reel standard would result in savings to the studios in film amounting to approximately $138,000 a year, said the subcommittee, and would eliminate much of the difficulty formerly experienced by the cutters in finding satisfactory "changeover points" between reels.

No Changes in Theatre Operation

No changes in theatre operation would be necessitated, it was pointed out.

The Research Council conducted a survey of theatre equipment in every country, and gathered together, with the co-operation of equipment companies servicing the foreign field, and the foreign office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, comprehensive data which, it decided, shows that the larger reel would operate satisfactorily in all theatres in each of these countries.

Theatre equipment throughout the United States also was studied, inasmuch as it would have been impossible to adopt a 2,000 foot standard reel if equipment was of insufficient size to accommodate it.

In the report, the subcommittee itemized the changes in each department of the industry necessary before the new reel may be used, and included specifications for a reel which it felt would be satisfactory as to weight and size. The 1,000 foot reel is approximately 10 inches in diameter, while the new standard reel would be 15 1-2 inches in diameter.

Racial Question Brings Controversy in St. Louis

A serious controversy has developed in St. Louis between Motion Picture Operators' Union No. 143 and the Urban League, local negro organization, as to whether white or negro projectionists should operate the machines in three all-negro motion picture theatres in the city.

The Urban League contends the jobs should go to a group of unemployed negro projectionists. The union takes the view that the three theatres—the Star, Strand and Criterion—because of their membership in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, should employ white projectionists, as the exhibitors' association has a working agreement with the union, and the theatres are legally and morally obligated to hire white men. A compromise is being sought.

House Bill Shifts Corporation Taxes

Motion picture corporations would be affected by the provisions of the new tax measure prepared by the ways and means committee of the House early this week. Under the bill, corporations, which now pay a flat tax of 13¾ per cent, would pay on the basis of a sliding scale or graduated tax, calling for 13¼ per cent if net profit is $15,000 or less, and 14¼ per cent if the net profit is more than $15,000.

A corporation making over eight per cent a year would pay five per cent on profit up to 12 per cent, from 12 to 16 per cent profit pays 10 per cent, from 16 to 25 per cent pays 15 per cent, over 25 per cent pays 20 per cent tax. Adjusted declared values of June 30, 1934 are taken as the basis. The present excess profits tax is five per cent on profits over 12½ per cent. The corporation tax would be effective January 1, 1936.

The Senate on Wednesday made the Duffy copyright bill its unfinished business and heard an explanation of the measure by patents committee members, despite protests of Senators Copeland and Wagner of New York, who said the bill is too trivial and controversial to occupy the Senate at this time. It is expected the measure will be passed early next week.

Senator Duffy last week caused to be inserted in the record a statement by Thorvald Solberg, for many years register of copyrights, who assured authors that the Duffy bill is "an opportunity to secure a greater measure of direct legislative benefit than has been possible since 1909. Answering the criticism of the bill by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, Mr. Solberg declared "remedies against infringement are ample and represent an adjustment to needs of the present.

The Graass bill to place operation of music copyright agencies under a statewide system has been introduced into the Wisconsin state legislature at Madison. The measure provides that the secretary of state collect from any organization which charges fees for the use of its copyrighted music an annual license fee of five per cent of its gross receipts in Wisconsin. The bill would require licensed organizations to file a schedule of charges and the basis of them, salaries and names of officers, a copy of agreements with original composers and other information. It was drafted at the request of the American Society for the Advancement of Public Music, Milwaukee organization and is aimed at the ASCAP.

Exhibitor in Kansas Celebrates 90th Year

L. M. Crawford, veteran exhibitor of Topeka, Kan., celebrated his 90th birthday last week by driving to Colorado with his wife and daughter. He went to Topeka in 1858 and lived there until a few years ago, when he divided his time between Topeka and Wichita. Now inactive in the theatre business, he owns three houses, one at Wichita, one at Lincoln, Kan., and one at El Paso, Tex., all under lease.

Art Theatre Needs Flair for Bizarre, But— Good Pictures Come First, Says Operator

Financial newspapers, not tabloids, are best advertising mediums, says George Kraska

The socalled Art Theatre, because of its truly international flavor, is on the way forward and can be expected to make considerable headway in large centers, in the opinion of George Kraska of Boston, who bases his judgment upon his experiences as operator and manager of the Fine Arts Theatre there.

Projects for such theatres are already under way in Detroit and Cincinnati. Only a dozen or so are now on the active list in the United States, including New York, Minneapolis, San Francisco, Chicago, Hollywood, Washington, Cleveland, Baltimore, Newark, Philadelphia and Boston.

The Fine Arts Theatre in the residential Back Bay district of the Hub has long been regarded as one of the most successful operations of the sort. The intimate 587 seat house, charging 50 cents in the afternoon and 75 cents evenings, has a "take" that fluctuates from $500 to $5,500. It boasts the longest consecutive run of any local house, roadshows excepted, with the recent 8½ weeks showing of the Gaumont British "Man of Aran."

Booking Highly Specialized

The operation of a fine arts theatre is considerably different from that of a regular house, as a number of theatremen have found to their sorrow, it was pointed out. For one thing, such theatres do not have the advantage of national publicity campaigns. Pictures come to them cold, in most instances. Booking, moreover, is a highly specialized business.

Expenses run much higher, as Mr. Kraska can testify. He lost almost everything the first time he tried to establish himself in Boston. The overhead of the small houses with their limited audiences is higher than that usually incurred. Advertising takes 25 to 30 per cent of the grosses. Most of this is best spent for newspaper space, Mr. Kraska has found.

The most common mistake made by promoters of such theatres is that they plunge into the business without giving enough attention to first establishing a reputation for good programs.

"A large majority of those attending fine arts theatres do not understand the language of the film," he finds.

The idea of showing artistic and educational films on their merits, and ballyhooing them neither as stupendous nor colossal, came to the young Russian from Odessa when he was a violin teacher in East Boston. Nothing of the kind had been attempted before in the socalled cradle of American culture. He managed to get enough money together to put on "Potemkin" in Symphony Hall. It clicked. Subsequent attempts to establish himself seemed weighted down by ill fortune, however, largely because he had no one theatre he could call his own, and for that reason was continuing operation on a roadshow basis.

GEORGE KRASKA

The outcome was the loss of the theatre he already owned in Winthrop, a few miles outside of Boston. For a time, he went with the Loew circuit and managed a theatre in Canton, Ohio. But it was not long before he was back in Boston.

It had taken a year and a half of planning and negotiating before he finally brought "Potemkin" to Boston. Then even after he was at the Fine Arts Theatre, the house at one time seemed closed for good. Then he came back from Ohio and took over the house on his own, with the aid of two associates who had a financial interest. This time it was a different story. He bought out his associates early this year.

The advent of talking pictures, which many thought would guillotine the fine arts theatre business, proved its salvation. Scholars, pupils, and instructors come to hear languages in which they are interested. Natives come to hear the tongues of their home lands. Mr. Kraska takes advantage of this situation by tying up free language classes for audiences with different foreign productions. He contacts a school or individual specializing in language instruction.

Entertainment Value First

Not even spirited public controversy over the showing of a picture will make up for lack of entertainment value. This was illustrated in Boston a few months ago when another house which was opened under a similar policy aroused national attention because of attacks directed against it by the American Legion and others for allegedly spreading Red propaganda. The Majestic soon was darkened by Levrad, Inc.

With Boston said to have one of the largest Irish populations outside of Ireland, the only film whose booking Mr. Kraska has cancelled because of protests was an Irish film made in Ireland by Irish actors for an Irish country. The play appeared in the Hub on the stage. It was complained that the story showed the Irish in a bad light.

Because a fine arts theatre interests artistic groups and those with a flair for the unusual, the decorations and furnishings can become profitably bizarre, says Mr. Kraska. The front of the Fine Arts Theatre, even though down a side street, is sure to catch the eye. Red, black, and silver, it resembles a camouflaged building. The same color scheme is utilized within.

The Theatre has also become known as a gallery for art exhibitions. Paintings, etchings, and drawings are presented along the stairway leading to the second-floor theatre and in the lobby, and they are also a means of additional newspaper and word-of-mouth publicity.

George Kraska took an ugly bit of roof, stark with gaunt fire escapes, and made it one of the most sophisticated spots in town. It is now "Le Jardin Fantastique." Yet it is no more than an inexpensive fountain, a few bits of modernistic furniture, and several designs chalked on the brick wall. The unusual wall designs were effected by the German artist, Erica Karawina. They combine tawny yellow with turquoise, coral green, and orchid in an atmosphere at once bizarre and peaceful. "Le Jardin Fantastique" is a rendezvous that appeals to the selective audience.

Depends on Newspaper Ads

Experimentation has shown Mr. Kraska that newspaper advertising is the most profitable for his house. At one time he had a weekly mailing list of 10,000. He once used a return-card ballot to find out which Boston newspapers were the most largely read by patrons. The two leading financial newspapers led the list; a tabloid was not even represented. Mr. Kraska had been advertising heavily in the tabloid when he wanted to reach a particular foreign class.

The mailing list finally was dropped. He had used it to the utmost to publicize a picture that failed to draw. Then, to clinch the test, he did not send out a card on "The Unfinished Symphony." The picture opened to capacity.

A midnight showing of Hecht and MacArthur's "Once in a Blue Moon," the Jimmy Savo feature, drew a capacity crowd with such catchlines as: "the world's worst film . . . a movie you may not like but one you can not afford to miss . . . disappointing and fascinating."

Mr. Kraska does most of his booking direct in New York, and the Fine Arts Theatre is the only Boston motion picture house using single features consistently.

NAMES ASSISTANTS ON THEATRE RELIEF WORK

Hopkins, Relief Chief, Appoints Hallie Flanagan Director; Equity Pay Ruling to Stand

Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress Administration chief at Washington, announced plans last week for the transfer of unemployed actors from the relief rolls to positions under the works program, and the appointment of Hallie Flanagan of Vassar College as technical assistant to direct theatre projects.

Mr. Hopkins also appointed Harry G. Alsberg of Washington to direct projects for writers. The two assistants will draw up details of work on which actors and writers are to be employed. Theatrical troupes may be formed, perhaps for the presentation of plays written by writers under the program. Financing of the plays would come out of the $300,000,000 fund for "white collar" workers.

Miss Flanagan is the wife of Professor Philip H. Davis, and for nine years has been director of the experimental theatre at Vassar. Mr. Alsberg is a former newspaper man, once director of the Provincetown Players and adaptor of the play "Dybuk."

Would Aid 7,000 Musicians

Illinois officials of the Works Progress Administration submitted to Washington this week a project which would provide $718,840 for a year's employment of about 7,000 professional musicians and entertainers in Chicago. The project was developed by the recreational director of the Chicago department of public works and proposes to employ professional musicians and entertainers in the production of plays, varied performances, concerts and other types of entertainment at parks, playgrounds and other suitable places.

Equity Ruling to Stand

The recent ruling of the Actors' Equity Association that payment shall be made for rehearsals will stand, despite the appeal by theatre managers in New York to revise the measure in two important respects.

Marcus Heiman, president of the League of New York Theatres and chairman of the managerial committee appointed by the League to negotiate the revisions, asked:

1. Establishment of a salary stop limit whereby if an actor's salary exceeds a certain amount he would not be eligible for the rehearsal allowance.
2. Exclusion of the large cast musical shows from the full burden of paying for rehearsals.

Asked for the reaction of the Equity Council, Frank Gillmore, president, said: "We have no thought of revision. It is certain that our rule will remain unchanged."

Sees Extra Musical Cost

Mr. Heiman did not seek to have the measure rescinded altogether, it is understood. He left a brief with the actors' organization in which, among other things, it was estimated that the new ruling would add approximately $5,000 to the budgets of each new season's musical show. The producers warned many announced musical productions may be abandoned because of this extra cost.

Under the ruling senior members of Equity are to be paid $20 a week for rehearsal "expenses," and junior members, or those with less than two years experience, $15 a week. Members of Chorus Equity also are to receive $15 weekly while rehearsing. The probationary period of seven days for dramatic productions and 10 days for musical shows is excluded. Dramatic shows require from three to four weeks rehearsal; musicals usually need four or five. The new ruling is to go into effect with the new season.

Irene Franklin, of Stage, Films, Dies

Irene Franklin, for years a popular vaudeville comedienne, who appeared in numerous features and short subjects, died at the Patton State Hospital in Los Angeles last week at the age of 59.

Born in St. Louis, Miss Franklin made her first stage appearance at the age of five. She remained on the stage until the decline of vaudeville caused her to go to Hollywood a few years ago. She was on the stage notably in "Sweet Adeline" and "Star Dust." Many of the songs she sang on the stage and over the air were of her own composition.

She appeared in 1934 in "Change of Heart," Fox; "Registered Nurse" and "A Very Honorable Guy," First National; "The Women in His Life" and "Lazy River," MGM. One of her last pictures in 1935 was "Death Flies East."

She was married three times. Her first two husbands died. She is survived by her third husband, William Johns.

Get New Contracts

Paramount has given new term contracts to Dean Jagger and David Holt, child player. Jack Cunningham received a new contract as a writer-supervisor.

Moreno Tries Comeback

Antonio Moreno, famous star of the silent screen, will make his first screen appearance in five years in Universal's "Storm Over the Andes."

Carlyle Ellis Resigns

Carlyle Ellis has resigned as press contact man for the Central Casting Bureau on the Coast. The position will not be filled.

Nick Smith Dies

Nick Smith, treasurer of the Tulane theatre, New Orleans, died of heart disease last week. He was 60 years old.

Bank Night Now In Philadelphia

Bank Night, Screeno and similar trade stimulating devices have found their way, in a new invasion, into a dozen situations in the Philadelphia area, resulting, it appears, in fewer summer closings than last year, with exhibitors depending on the devices to override the summer slump, and the proportionate decrease in the use of premiums with the growth of the new methods. The giveaway stunts are thus far only being used by independents. Warner has stayed away from premiums, double features and stimulators.

It is estimated that 75 per cent of the theatres in Texas are using some form of giveaway, mostly money "nights" of one sort or another. All classes of houses in larger cities and small towns have adopted the practices. In Houston there is a notable refusal to use the methods, which is also true in some neighborhood situations. Theatre managers in San Antonio are taking steps to eliminate the practice.

The Pacific Northwest is singularly free of the stimulating devices, with the exception of a few situations.

John Romweber, operator of the Miles-Royal at Akron, has asked in court that two competing theatres be restrained from using Bank Night and seeks $5,000 damages from the operators of the competing houses. He charges the stunt a violation of state and city laws against lotteries. William L. Hart and Niel J. Krichbaum, the defendants, contend the stunt is no lottery but a gift, and has been approved by the city legal department.

The attorney general of New Hampshire is being sued in a friendly test case to determine the legality of Bank Night.

Bank Night is being used in Roanoke and Hopewell, Va., and automobile giveaways are being used in Charlottesville. Approximately 25 situations in Minnesota, North and South Dakota have signed for Bank Night, according to Ray Coffin, head of Affiliated Distributors in Des Moines. The situations signed are operated by the Minnesota Amusement Corporation.

Calls Censorship Important

Joseph W. Fichter, assistant state director of education in Ohio, and thus assistant chief of the censor board, speaking before the Hamilton Rotary Club last week, said: "Many motion pictures stress the artificial side of life, and one of the most important functions of the state educational department is film censorship."

May Produce in Florida

Anglo-American Film Renters of London has suggested to authorities at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., the possibility of producing there if the city is able to raise $100,000 for a studio.

Duals Firm in New England

New England exhibitors appear unconcerned at the possibility that riders on new contracts will seek to prevent double featuring, which has become almost permanentl established in the territory.

SPOOR WILL FILM BROADWAY HITS IN THIRD DIMENSION, ACT BY ACT

Plays Will Be Bought on "Percentage Plus" Basis and Be Shown in 12-Theatre Circuit, Says Inventor-Producer

The motion picture of today is on the way out, and the public will be satisfied with nothing less than something entirely "new and fresh" in amusements, said George K. Spoor, inventor and the father of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, founded 28 years ago, with G. M. Anderson, in Houston, Texas, this week. Mr. Spoor said that his plan for a circuit of third dimension, wide screen theatres will be ready for launching by the first of the year. Details of the project were reported upon in last week's Herald.

Mr. Spoor has made several trips from Chicago to Houston in the last few months in the interests of his oil holdings at Dickinson, 25 miles from Houston. With the Coast Petroleum Company he holds 2,000 acres in lease, and has one well classed as a big producer. He said that the step by which his property, real and personal, had been transferred in 1932 to Albert W. Malone was "a friendly trust," taken to protect his "natural vision" patents valued at $4,000,000 when his realty became involved in Chicago. It was not a court action.

Would Turn Plays Into Films

Turning to the problems of the industry, Mr. Spoor said:

"With production costs mounting spectacularly, producers uneasy at pouring good money after bad, exhibitors forced to run double features and resort to giveaways, Screeno, bank nights and whatnot to get the public in the theatres it just means one thing, and that is that the public is tired of pictures as they are made now."

The producer-inventor purposes to remedy this by making already established Broadway hits into pictures, filming them scene by scene and act by act as played by the original cast, using his own "depth" process.

"There'll be no location trips, no directors," said Mr. Spoor. "Just the usual technicians, shooting as the play is given in consecutively arranged sets corresponding to the scenes and acts of the play. The process will take no more than three hours.

"The idea is to complete the ideal merger of the legitimate stage and the screen. The plays will be bought on a percentage plus basis, and the original casts used. The pictures will be given extended runs in 12 cities from New York to the Pacific Coast, and will be played in matinee and night shows exactly as stage plays. At the close of the acts the curtain will drop for brief intermissions, while the audience steps out for smokes and chats."

Mr. Spoor predicted that in 10 years the present method of making pictures will be obsolete. He also forecast the use of television in homes within five years, and declared that pictures will be broadcast over radio chains at that time. "More films will be made for television than for theatre projection within a few years," he declared.

Recalling that he had dropped a fortune in 1929 because talking pictures and the depression beat his third dimension and wide screen to the punch, Mr. Spoor said he had salted away a $4,000,000 investment in basic patents and is now like a man who stands on the threshold of a new venture with his plans and experiments "behind him and paid for."

"I'm like a man who lives six blocks down the street from his big factory," he explained. "For 15 years he walks back and forth those six blocks, putting money in that idle factory. I don't deny that it is a fine feeling to know that the factory will now start producing."

He said his company, the Spoor-Berggren Natural Vision Company, has chosen 12 key cities from New York to the Coast across the northern route, and is ready to start its first feature by January 1. No play has been actually bought as yet. He declared he had been approached regarding production of "Three Men on a Horse" before the play was sold for production in England, but that he was not ready to start negotiations.

Mr. Spoor shied at a report that he was interested in a television company formed by big names in Europe. "I'm not concerned in any television deals," he declared. "There are marvelous developments ahead for the industry, however, and even now they are talking about projection by electricity without the aid of screens. Nothing is impossible."

Reminiscing regarding the old Essanay company in Chicago when he provided the "S" and Broncho Billy Anderson the "A" of that name, Mr. Spoor recalled Wally Beery as "the elephant trainer"; Gloria Swanson, Frank Bushman, Ruth Stonehouse and many other members of his "school." "We ran a darned big school," he smiled. "We were too busy to know how big." He said he was "just turning 20" when he looked in a peep box and turned a crank to see a story in pictures, and conceived the idea of taking them out of the box, mounting them on a stand with a light to reflect the images on the wall.

"That was the birth of the moving picture," he said.

Mr. Spoor was asked if he were making money in oil to put in his new theatre venture. "I don't have to," he answered. "I have more money in the new theatre medium than any man has a right to put in any venture. And it's all paid for, and every penny of it is mine."

Exhibitors Are Signing Cleveland Dual Agreement

Signatures are being obtained slowly in Cleveland on the local exhibitor agreement on double features, providing that any feature which has not played a downtown first run engagement may be double billed. Up to late last week the agreement had been signed by 60 theatres, with 82 signatures needed.

Greenthal U.A. Advertising Head

Monroe W. Greenthal, for four and one-half years exploitation manager of United Artists, last week was appointed director of advertising and publicity by Al Lichtman, president. Mr. Greenthal succeeds Hal Horne, who had resigned.

Mr. Greenthal, 31 and a graduate of Columbia University, was associated with Vanity Fair and Vogue magazines before entering the motion picture industry. He severed his connection with Vogue to join the Lawrence Fertig and Central advertising agencies.

He began motion picture work in 1928 as editor of Gold Mine, Universal house organ, and later was appointed associate editor of the Universal Newsreel. Mr. Greenthal joined United Artists in 1931 as manager of exploitation, holding that post until his appointment last week.

Army Asks More Theatres at Posts

Plans for nine additional theatres at United States army posts over the country have been submitted by the War Department at Washington to the division of applications and information of the works program.

The applications listed the following locations: $50,000 for a post exchange and theatre at Fort Randolph, Canal Zone; $88,000 for buildings and a theatre at Fort Ringgold, Texas, and for theatres at Fort DeLesseps, Canal Zone; Quarry Heights, Canal Zone; Kelly Field, Texas; Fort Monroe, Va.; Fort Francis E. Warren, Wyo.; Fort Leavenworth, Kan.; Fort Sill, Okla.

PWA Grant to Aid Kansas City Auditorium

A grant of $155,000 from the Public Works Administration office in St. Louis was made to Kansas City, for the purpose of aiding in completing the new municipal auditorium theatre. The amount represents 30 per cent of the cost of the project. No policies for the theatre have been arranged as yet, pending the completion of the auditorium, according to George Goldman, who will manage the entire project.

Mon Randall, Film Art Head, Dies at 44

Mon Randall, motion picture artist and well known in advertising circles, died on his orange farm in Corona, Cal., last week, apparently as the result of a heart attack. He was 44. He entered the motion picture industry as art director of Triangle Film. Later he went to New York to head the Universal studio art department. In 1927 he was named national pictorial advertising manager for MGM.

ACTOR SUES ON USE OF PHOTOGRAPH IN TIEUP

Sinclair Suit Names Postal Telegraph; Seek Clarification of Film Company Rights

Clarification of the rights of a film company in publicizing a contract player is asked by the Postal Telegraph and Cable Company in defending a suit instituted in the New York supreme court by Hugh Sinclair, of the cast of "Escape Me Never."

Justice Edgar J. Lauer, upholding Mr. Sinclair's contention that a composite photograph of himself displayed in windows of Postal Telegraph offices presented him "in an undignified manner," indicated that he would grant a requested injunction against the company later this week. United Artists, which is distributing the British and Dominions film in this country, may join the action as an intervening defendant.

The photograph in dispute showed Sinclair and Elisabeth Bergner, the star of the film, in the act of notifying "enthusiastic admirers" by telegraph on a telegraph blank of the defendant company that "Escape Me Never" was about to be shown at a New York theatre, according to Justice Lauer's summary. Mr. Sinclair objected that the picture was used without his authorization and that it was different from one for which he had posed. Postal Telegraph attorneys said the picture was taken from the film and that a sheet of music in Sinclair's hands was changed to a telegraph blank.

"Assuming that such authority was granted as contended," Justice Lauer said, "there is no proof that plaintiff authorized any picture except a true one. A 'composite' picture, brought about by double printing or new matter added to a true photograph, creates a new picture, different from the one for which the subject was posed.

Retains Civil Rights

"An actor is in public life and, although a subject of fair comment, his choice of profession does not entail the forswearing of his civil rights. He may insist on so conducting himself and so presenting his work to the public as to preserve the attribute of dignity. It does not appear that such civil right has been here contracted away."

Postal Telegraph attorneys told the court it should not issue the injunction unless it was clear that use of the photograph in the manner indicated was not authorized by Mr. Sinclair's contract with British and Dominions, in which it was provided that the film company had the right to publicize him in any way it deemed advisable.

Schreiber Asks Rehearing

United Artists claims that in obtaining the picture for this country, it also acquired the exploitation rights granted in Mr. Sinclair's contract. The telegraph company says United Artists prepared the poster and that it obtained no remuneration for the tieup. It is understood United Artists has agreed to indemnify Postal in event of any damages resulting from the action.

Jacob Schreiber has filed a petition in federal court in Detroit, asking a rehearing in his suit against Co-operative Theatres of Michigan. William Sayres, master in chancery, had recommended that the complaint be dismissed because it did not involve interstate commerce and therefore the federal court was without jurisdiction.

If the United States district court should deny his petition, Mr. Schreiber has indicated he will appeal to a higher court, and if that, too, sustains the denial, he will file suit in state court charging violation of the state laws. He contends that the court overlooked the fact that contracts, entered into by Co-operative, a buying combine, were sent to New York, which places the matter under interstate commerce.

St. Louis Trial September 30

Trial in St. Louis of the 10 distributing companies and six executives, charged in a monopoly action with conspiracy to withhold product from three St. Louis theatres, has been set for September 30 by Federal Judge George H. Moore. He overruled defense demurrers, but sustained motions for bills of particulars.

Lincoln Theatres Corporation, at Lincoln, Neb., has filed a motion in district court for a new trial, in the suit in which Augusta Paper, plaintiff, was awarded a judgment against it of $11,754. Mrs. Paper sued on an assignment of claim from Nick Paper, the suit growing out of a contract between Mr. Paper and the theatre company. The court held that Lincoln Theatres had not fulfilled the contract. In the motion for a new trial the defendants contend the contract sued upon is contrary to public policy and unenforceable.

Buying Combine Planned In Philadelphia Section

Approximately 25 independent exhibitor leaders in the Philadelphia area met at the headquarters of the Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association early this week to discuss a buying combine for the territory and to zone the city into six sections. The zones are: Kensington, North Philadelphia, West Philadelphia and suburban, Germantown, South Philadelphia and Southwest Philadelphia.

A committee was named for each zone to line up exhibitors for zone meetings within a few days, which will be followed by a general meeting at which plans will be formulated for a buying combine. It was indicated by Morris Wax, IEPA president, that it will take about three weeks to get the corporation under way, the plan being to have the members as stockholders of the corporation, who will pay a percentage of film rentals for servicing charges.

Coast ITO Rescinds Adherence to Zoning

The Independent Theatre Owners of Los Angeles at a general meeting early this week rescinded a letter sent to all exchanges last week indicating adherence to the Los Angeles clearance and zoning schedule. About 75 per cent of the membership attended the meeting. Harry Vinnicoff, C. A. Ferry, Jack Berman, Max Sinker, Lou Bard and Earle Johnson were elected directors and Harry Popkin was named an honorary director.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Roxy is dead!

"Roxy," a six-weeks-old fox terrier belonging to Bernadine Baier, 13-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Baier, owners of the Lindbergh theatre in Kansas City, and named for the showman Rothafel, last week achieved a niche in a hall of fame all his own.

A group of children were playing near the Baier home, with Bernadine and "Roxy" taking a vigorous part in the proceedings. A small girl dashed across the street. A speeding truck pounded down the pavement. The terrier leaped, chased the girl from danger and was killed instead.

Out of the $1,250 that Shirley Temple receives a week—the highest salary ever paid a child star—she gets $4.25 to spend herself. Of this sum she places $1.50 in her toy bank and spends the rest as follows: candy, 25 cents; fruit, 40 cents; soda pop, 15 cents; box of paints, 75 cents; dog collar, 95 cents, and 25 cents for the Sunday school collection.

She'd make a good recruit to Huey Long's army campaigning for adoption of the share-the-wealth plan.

Our vote for the most retentive memory goes to Paul Kneeland, a pioneer, now conducting the Sterling Film Exchange—handling "westerns, comedies and reissues"—in the Massachusetts town of Medford. Mr. Kneeland addresses to this department the following stickler-for-facts observation:

> Glancing through the Motion Picture Herald I noticed in "This Week" column notice of Hale Hamilton's 10th anniversary as a screen player.
> Now, dear old Hale was in pictures in 1918—even before this. In Motion Picture News of October 9, 1915, mention is given of "Her Painted Hero" from the Sennett studios, and this effort starred Hale Hamilton. "Polly Moran, Charles Murray and Slim Summerville lend Mr. Hamilton capable support."
> Perhaps in this actor's mind, such productions were better forgotten than remembered. Then, again, that's "Ham's" (no offense) business.
> I suppose now they'll be telling me Harry Carey made his debut in "Trader Horn."

Tip for the ladies: Embarrassing situations, even costly retakes can be caused by "Pocketbook Panic" that terrible feeling when a pocketbook opens on the set and the contents spill out all over the ground). To avoid it Hollywood players use locked zippers on their handbags.

In the Shanghai Press of China we read the account of a Charlie Chaplin imitator, named Saburo Sugihara, who for years had been a fixture in Tokyo in Japan. Dressed in baggy trousers, carrying a cane, wearing a black bowler hat and a mustache, "Charlie" has delighted Oriental crowds with his antics. When a crowd gathers in the streets Charlie performs and then passes around his hat for a yen or two.

But business waned and Charlie got a job as a laundry solicitor. One day he was arrested for allegedly stealing 80 yen from another solicitor.

"And now Charlie is making personal appearances again," in Shanghai, reports the Press. "What his future plans are, nobody knows but Charlie, but he will undoubtedly avoid another affair with the police."

Nor does anyone know Hollywood Charlie's plans.

There is a young man who goes with one of the pretty daughters of Bob (Philadelphia Metro manager) Lynch. He graduated from college last winter with the regulation one-sheet sheepskin and was holding the World by the tail. Well, he and his Dad thought that all one had to do was to get a film theatre and start declaring dividends; but after several weeks of operation, the bank served notice on him that they had to have the bankroll enlarged if they wanted to continue issuing checks.

So—in view of the fact the theatre isn't doing so well they are going to operate it differently than any other house, as you will note from his letterhead which marks the beginning of their exhibition eccentricities:

Read Kendall, in Los Angeles Times, gives sympathetic expression to the predicament of Rosamond Pinchot, in Hollywood for a "career," as caused by the inquisitiveness of local motorcycle officers and policemen on the beat. It's all on account of a queer Pennsylvania automobile license on her green touring car.

As a courtesy, her home State—where her Uncle, Gifford Pinchot, tall, lean and fiery, was formerly governor—gave her car plates which merely bear her initials: "R. P. 1935 Pa." And whenever she drives through the streets of Los Angeles and thereabouts she is continually flagged down for an explanation. The coppers probably believe that Mack Sennett is staging a wild-auto-car-chase-through-the-city comeback.

Can you imagine what would happen to the movie business if the theory of Bill Starrett, noted builder, ever became a reality. Gregory Ratoff's British-made picture entitled "18 Minutes" will be released by Paramount this summer, but Paramount, apparently under the impression that 18 minutes is not long enough, has changed the title to "This Woman Is Mine."

Resigned to the decree of Missouri's legislators that there shall be in effect after August 27th a one per cent sales tax, exhibitors of St. Louis and elsewhere, along with other business men in the state, conferred variously with state auditor Forrest Smith to arrive at the best method of making collections from the public, which is mandatory, in order to facilitate change-making and to eliminate as much of the inconvenience as possible. The question was how could the exhibitor and merchant collect for the state one mill on each ten-cent sale, as set down in the law, when no such coin exists?

After many an hour's deep thought they decided that the most efficient method would be to use tokens. So contracts were signed, arrangements made and the machinery set up to manufacture and use 10,000,000 one-mill and 5,000,000 five-mill tokens. A weighty problem had been disposed of. Until someone in Washington politely informed them that there is a constitutional prohibition against a state government coining money, which status the tokens would have when used by the customer.

When the tourist visits he invariably sends back home a conventional picture postal card. A visitor to New York, for example, returns cards showing the great two-block square public library on Fifth Avenue, the Bronx Zoo, St. Patrick's Cathedral, the Empire State Building, or the harbor and its lights and skyline at night. And so with Nick Cavaliere, one of the best of the expedition cameramen, who post-cards Terry Ramsaye from Calcutta in India, while en route to Singapore and thence to the innard wild country of the jungle to join Frank Buck, Mr. Buck being engaged at the moment in preparing a feature motion picture for the profit of Amedee J. Van Beuren, for the release schedule of RKO, and for the glorification of the zoo. Anyway, the picture on the postal card addressed by Nick is captioned: "Tiger Shoot: A Line Closing In." It shows a dozen or more elephants in the brush, holding on their backs a score of "tourists" from the States and from England shooting directly at a lone, unprotected man-eating tiger.

The latest wrinkle in motion pictures is the "abstract film." A sample was on display at the Radio City Music Hall, an eight-minute subject called "Rhythm in Light" portraying "geometry of harmony" on the screen and bringing together, for what was said to be the first time, "a visual perception of music." Produced in the studios of Miss Mary Ellen Bute, society girl of Texas and cousin of Colonel M. E. House, chief brain truster for President Wilson in wartime days, the film uses a curious array of articles to express abstractionism—whatever that might be. Miss Bute used sheets of crumpled cellophane, an egg-cutter, prisms, toy pyramids, ping pong balls, velvet, sparklers, bracelets, and, chiefly, camera angles. These various objects come and go on the screen in time to the music. Personally we prefer Mickey Mouse.

STUDY OF FOX MERGER WITH 20TH IS ASKED

Fox Stockholders' Committee to Urge the State Attorney General or the SEC to Act

A committee of stockholders of Fox Film may carry to the attorney general of the state of New York or the Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington an appeal for an investigation of the merger of Fox and Twentieth Century Pictures, it was revealed this week by Henry L. Sperling, New York attorney for the committee. Stock transfer phases of the merger are the objects of the committee's attention.

L. T. Pidwell is chairman of the committee and Cromwell Gibbons is secretary. Neither has been connected with the motion picture business, as far as could be learned. Mr. Sperling said he had asked for additional information from United Artists, former distributor of Twentieth Century product; Fox Film and Twentieth Century. It was said in the statement that there was no hope of a proxy action in opposition to the merger.

The statement regarding reasons for the formation of the committee read as follows:

"A proxy fight to stop any course of action which may be determined upon by the insiders in the Fox Company is a futile course in the opinion of the committee. A majority of the Fox stock has always been voted as a unit. Some of the members of the present committee surveyed the situation at the time of the reorganization in which five-sixths of the equity of the stockholder was transferred to holders of obligations of the company. Prior to that time the ownership of the control was generally known but this identity has now been lost.

"However, it is apparent that the control is still functioning as a single unit. According to newspaper reports the merger has already been effected without awaiting the formality of its approval at the meeting of the stockholders called August 15. Mr. Zanuck and Mr. Schenck are already in their jobs at Fox, promised under the merger plans, and presumably drawing their salaries of $5,000 a week and $2,500 a week, respectively, as provided for in the merger agreement.

"The committee is satisfied, however, that the certificate for the reclassification of the Fox stock when the merger is consummated opens a door for the minority. This certificate, according to the printed announcements sent to stockholders of record, states in Section (a) of the fourth paragraph: 'This said Class A common stock and said Class B common stock shall share equally in any distribution to stockholders whether by way of dividends or otherwise.' In the eighth paragraph the same proposed certificate states, regarding the exchange of the stock: 'On the basis of ½ of a share of said preferred stock and ¼ of a share of said common stock for each share of said Class A common stock issued or unissued, and on the basis of 1 share of said preferred stock and ½ of a share of said common stock for each share of said Class B common stock.'

"The committee is interested in a legal interpretation of the 'equally' and 'otherwise' in this proposed certificate."

United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings, acting as receiver for General Theatres Equipment, last week petitioned Chancellor Josiah C. Wolcott in chancery court, Wilmington, Del., for permission to direct voting trustees of General Theatres to approve the Fox-Twentieth Century merger.

Figures submitted to the New York Stock Exchange in obtaining permission for listing of new securities of Twentieth Century-Fox show the progress made by Twentieth since its formation in May, 1933, and the advancement made in the position of Fox since its reorganization in July, 1933, although it has paid no dividends since June, 1931.

Twentieth Century produced 18 pictures and began its profits from the first, "The Bowery," which cost $725,436.27, and showed a profit of $304,286.18. "Broadway Thru a Keyhole," which followed, cost $871,588.04 and showed a profit of $2,102.09. The income from May 2, 1933, date of incorporation, to May 31, 1934, was $306,388.27. Expenses were $280,210.44, and $26,177.83 was transferred to surplus.

During the months from June 1, 1934, to May 4, 1935, net income jumped to $1,409,277.71 and surplus increased to $1,440,553.82, and total current assets on that date were given as $3,489,535.54.

Fox Net Increase

During the first 13 weeks of 1933, before the reorganization, Fox had a net of $557,122.49. In the following 39 weeks ending Dec. 30, 1933, the net jumped to $1,410,793.13. In the 52 weeks ending Dec. 29, 1934, the net slipped slightly to $1,273,069.10, but it leaped to a new high level for the 18 weeks ending May 4, 1934, when the total was $1,162,165.53.

Surplus rose steadily from zero on April 1, 1933, to $1,674,353.94 on Dec. 30, 1933; to $3,006,812.13 at the end of 1934, and $4,169,230.47 on May 4, 1935. The total assets on May 4, 1935, are given as $43,563,838.50. It is figured that the consolidation of the two companies will raise the assets to $54,072,856.64.

Under the Fox charter 1,500,000 shares of preferred and 3,100,000 shares of common are authorized, but listing has been applied for and received for 1,388,799 shares of preferred and 3,077,407 of common. Of this, Twentieth Century will receive 132,513 shares of preferred and 613,264¾ shares of common, while 1,226,529½ shares of preferred and 613,264¾ shares of common will be used to convert the present stock outstanding. The remainder will be reserved for conversion of preferred stock, possible conversion of five-year six per cent gold debentures due April 1, 1936, warrants expiring in March, 1936, possible conversion of preferred into common, and options to officers at not less than $10 per share.

No SEC Statement Needed

Counsel has advised the company that no registration statement is required for the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The new preferred stock is valued at $35 per share in case of dissolution or liquidation of the company, plus accrued dividends, and the company is authorized to purchase it for retirement at not exceeding this price.

The total number of shares reserved for options of officers is 100,000 at not less than $10 per share. S. R. Kent's option is for 60,000 of these shares.

The company is required under the terms of the consolidation agreement to set aside five per cent per year of its consolidated net earnings, after payment of preferred dividends, for retirement of preferred stock. No common can be purchased by the company until all the preferred has been retired.

The Stock Exchange has turned down parent company statements asked of Fox Film Corporation in connection with the application for listing of stock of Twentieth Century-Fox approved last week on the ground profits of wholly-owned subsidiaries and a proportion of profits of controlled subsidiaries were included. It is expected revised financial reports will be issued in the final printing of the application for listing.

The action of the Stock Exchange is in line with a proposal that all applicants for listing provide more complete financial reports.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, issued a statement this week designed to clear up "any misunderstanding that might exist as to the duties of Darryl F. Zanuck at the Fox Studios." He indicated that Mr. Zanuck will be in charge of all production of Fox Film, with general supervision of all pictures made at the studios. He personally will supervise as well the Twentieth Century pictures to be released by Fox.

New Coast Union Seeks Membership from Studios

Formed in Hollywood and soliciting studio membership is the National Association of American Employees, new labor organization. It is reported that, although the new group was formed to act under the collective bargaining provisions of the Wagner bill, there are indications the organization is prepared to fight the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and is backed by several former members of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, who were dissatisfied with the recent dispute over jurisdiction in which the IBEW was the winner. Membership of the new group is said to be 280. Tentative officers are: Ole Heidelman, president; Walter Featherstone, secretary. Howard B. Rose is assisting in the organization. A conflict is expected between the organization and studio unions.

The Criterion, Los Angeles subsequent run theatre, was picketed last week by members of Local 150, IATSE, which charged T. I. Tally, owner of the house, with using non-union help and cutting his staff in half. His refusal to negotiate is said to have resulted in the picketing by the union.

Hammond Invents New Sound System

John Hays Hammond, Jr., Boston inventor, has developed a new sound system, known as the "dynamic multiplier system," on which 18 patents have been allowed. The invention was developed at Mr. Hammond's Gloucester laboratory. It is said the device is designed to do away with undesirable features of present sound equipment.

The work has been in charge of Ellison Purington, engineer. It is claimed that film men who have witnessed demonstrations of the new system have declared it gives a more life-like quality to pictures.

GB Pictures Joins Film Board of Trade

GB Pictures Corporation has been admitted to membership in the New York Film Board of Trade. Phil Meyer, local GB branch manager, has been named as the company's representative on the board. All GB exhibition contracts will be enforced through the Film Board's legal division, as a result of the membership. GB is the first British distributing company to be admitted to the local board since its organization 20 years ago.

REMAKING OF FRENCH INDUSTRY STARTS WITH UNITED COMMITTEE

First Action of New Film Board Is to Publish Provisions of a Standard Exhibition Contract Then Limit Low Admissions

by PIERRE AUTRE
Paris Correspondent

Complete reorganization of the motion picture industry in France is at last underway. Following upon establishment of the Union des Distributors has come the formation of the Comité du Film, a gathering together into permanent organization of representatives of producers, distributors and exhibitors.

Here is how it happened.

On July 1st a special meeting of all French producers was called. They all came—except Pathé Natan and Gaumont (GFFA)—nearly all of them independent producers, and the independents now represent practically all production in the French industry.

At this meeting it was decided that a grouping of all the working elements of the production branch was necessary, this group to go along with the distributors and exhibitors' organizations if a general reorganization was to be effected.

The producers decided to cooperate with the distributors, exhibitors, and Technical companies (such as laboratories and equipment makers) for improvement of the film industry wherever possible.

"It was decided unanimously," said a statement, "to sustain the French producers' interests and to help the reorganization of the French cinema industry. The producers will group themselves in an association with an organization committee including the following producers: Felix Gandera, Marcel Pagnol, Frogerais, P. J. de Venloo, Jean Corret, who will lay the format for the Union Syndicale des Producteurs de Films. This association's committee will confer with the committees of the Union Des Distributeurs and of the Union Des Chambres Syndicales Francaises des Theatres Cinematographiques (exhibitors' association) so that, if it is necessary, they may together with these other organizations be a part of an official representation of the cinema industry before the Government."

Central Board Voted

The committees met jointly and decided to create a common organization named the Comité du Film. This board includes the following members: Alexis Fougeret, Felix Gandera, Henri Klarsfeld (manager of the Paramount French branch), Georges Lourau (manager of Films Sonores Tobis), Raymond Lussiez (president of the French exhibitors' association), Edmond Ratisbonne, P. J. de Venloo (producers and distributors).

Presidents of the boards are Felix Gandera for the producers, Georges Lourau for the distributors, Raymond Lussiez for the distributors.

All the French branches of American companies are a part of the distributors' association.

The old Chambre Syndicale Francaise de la Cinematographie, whose president for eight years has been Charles Delac, has been left entirely out of the new movement; nearly all the members, producers, distributors and exhibitors, have resigned to join the new board. Only the technical companies remained and the Chambre Syndicale is now to be reorganized and will include mainly these concerns.

On July 3rd, representatives of the new Board visited the Minister of National Education, and were advised that he will help them as much as possible.

The first action of the Comité was to publish the standard exhibition contract, elaborated by the distributors' and exhibitors' association, though the work had been started by the Chambre Syndicale.

The second action of the Film Board was to limit excessively low prices of admission in the provincial and Paris districts. Except in the summer season, seats no longer will be less than 3 francs (20 cents) in first runs in the districts and provincial cinemas, 2 frs. 50 (about 16 cents) in subsequent runs.

The distributors' association, in connection with the exhibitors' organization, intends also to study film rentals, according to theatre location and standard of product.

Attacks Booking Company

The Board has started a fight against the Omnium des Spectacles, subsidiary of Pathé Natan, which handles the renting of the full programs for 152 French theatres, among them 60 owned by Pathé-Natan (27 in Paris, 12 in suburbs, 21 in the Provinces), and 92 owned by independent exhibitors (21 in Paris, 23 in suburbs, and 48 in the Provinces).

For several months there has been difficulty between the distributors and this Omnium. The distributors' association asked all its members not to rent any more pictures to the theatres in the Omnium, and specially the theatres of the Pathé Natan Circuit. A few independent exhibitors have left the Omnium.

The other theatres of the Omnium now are for the most part showing French pictures released through Pathé Natan, or through the other companies which are not a part of the distributors' association.

Establishment of the Comité du Film is the best and the most important thing which has happened in the French industry in years. It is expected that the Chambre Syndicale eventually will join and will represent the equipment companies and laboratories.

American Films a Target

Looking forward to an International Film Chamber, representatives of the cinema organizations of 20 European countries, among them France, Germany, Italy and England, met at Munich. The French cinema was represented by Georges Lourau, president of the new distributors' association, Raymond Lussiez, president of the new exhibitors' association, and Demaria, representing the French Chambre Syndicale.

This international film board would be a purely European organization and would group all the national cinema organizations, including producers, distributors and exhibitors.

At a meeting August 10 in Venice will be determined the plan for the board's activities.

This new organization will not affect the International Federations of Distributors and Exhibitors. The Educational Committee likewise will carry on.

The new international board will concern itself chiefly with quota matters in each European country. Some of the members have in their mind to make of this board an organization to protect the European production against the American. It is difficult to see how this could be accomplished, as the European branches of American firms are in each country a part of the national cinema boards, and the companies are represented in this international board.

American Product Is Made Target of New Chamber Representing Twenty Countries and Concerned with Quotas

At a second meeting on August 21, also in Venice, a constitution for the international board will be adopted.

More Tax Reduction Delay

For many a long day the exhibitors have awaited a reduction of the entertainment taxes and the Government always has promised it for "tomorrow morning." In three months, two or three Governments have announced this reduction as an accomplished fact, but at the last minute the minister in charge had not been present to sign the decree, or the Government has been put in the minority by the Parliament, or something else has happened. The result is that all are still bearing the same burden of special taxation.

The French Parliament now is on its summer vacation, until November. But the Government will be able to establish decrees which will be ratified when the Parliament comes back. So Marcel Regnier, minister of finances, adopted at a cabinet meeting on July 9th the main lines of the coming decree.

By this decree the state taxes (taxes d'Etat) on motion picture theatres will be decreased by 20 to 25 per cent, and may take 25 per cent of the net receipts.

For music halls, variety halls and several other kinds of entertainments, the state taxes will be reduced by 50 per cent.

For the legitimate theatres it will stay the same. These pay only 2 per cent for state taxes.

On the other hand, the town councils will be permitted to reduce the pauper taxes to 5 per cent. At present 10 per cent is paid.

In Paris it is expected that the new municipal council will grant this reduction of the pauper tax.

Publication of the decree had been delayed by an amendment by Deputy Lafont, now the minister of public health, who inserted a provision that exhibitors who show a certain quota of French pictures should receive a special reduction of taxes. The amendment was dropped.

Most of the ministers wished to avoid this matter in the decree, but it was rather difficult because the amendment was included in the decree proposal made by the Finances Commission. The amendment couldn't be applied. There are not enough French pictures for all the French cinemas, especially in Paris, where 35 theatres of 240 are showing nothing but foreign talkers. French pictures always are rented first by the circuits. Thus the independent exhibitors very often are obliged to rent foreign dubbed pictures, which, except in the case of an exceptional picture such as "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" or "Viva Villa," make less money than French pictures. There is also the case of the specializing cinemas which show foreign talkers and would have to close if they were obliged to show French pictures, because they could not obtain any for pre-release.

That is why the Lafont amendment was dropped.

TRANS-LUX MAY SHOW FEATURES OVERSEAS

But Ratified Circuit of 150 Theatres in Britain and Continent Would Start with Shorts

A circuit of 150 to 200 Trans-Lux theatres in the British Isles and on the Continent is contemplated in the plans of Trans-Lux, Ltd., which has been formed in London under an arrangement with Trans-Lux Movies Corporation of America, said Percy N. Furber, chairman of the board of the parent company, this week.

Sites are being sought for immediate construction of two initial theatres in the West End of London, declared Mr. Furber, who recently returned from several weeks in the British capital. After these two are opened the company proposes to extend activities in the provinces and on the Continent, for which territory the company has acquired sole rights. The American firm retains the rights to development of Trans-Lux in Canada, Australia and other British dominions, he added.

May Add Features

To start with, the English houses will be devoted to newsreels and shorts subjects programs, the original policy of theatres of this type, but later they may show feature pictures as well.

Will Evans, wellknown British theatre man, has been elected chairman of Trans-Lux, Ltd., with Peter Rudyard Aitkin, son of Lord Beaverbrook, as president. These two, with Norman Holden, son of Sir Edward Holden, former chairman of the Midland bank, comprise the board of directors.

The directors of the American company have approved the agreement, which was negotiated by Mr. Furber with Lord Beaverbrook and Mr. Evans, whereby the British firm advances the funds for construction of the theatres. As in America, the company's policy will be to make no investment in the physical structures, merely advancing the funds on mortgages. The premises will be leased in all instances.

$90,000 Total Theatre Cost

"The main outstanding difference between Trans-Lux and other theatre operations is that we make no investment in brick and mortar," declared Mr. Furber. "If we find the properties are unprofitable, they are converted into stores and subleased."

Mr. Furber estimated the cost of construction of each theatre at $40,000 or $50,000 and the total cost, including equipping, at $90,000 to $100,000. Rear projection and other technological departures featuring the Trans-Lux houses in America will be incorporated in the British theatres.

The Trans-Lux firm in England has been incorporated with nominal capital. The American company will have a financial interest in the operations abroad.

Editorial Sees Great Improvement in Films

An editorial in the Columbus, Ohio, Dispatch recently, under the heading, "Musical Movies," said in part: "There is no doubt that the musical movie is a firmly established feature of the screen world. . . . In the brief space of a year we have seen a great industry reverse the mental process of producers and directors to the end that the public has benefited, the industry, much to its surprise, has reaped increased financial returns and the stature of this medium of entertainment has been lifted to the highest point it has yet enjoyed." The editorial gives a large measure of credit for the recent great improvement of the screen to the organized bodies which "led the way to the improved conditions."

Sees European Audiences Preferring Musical Films

The European public has shifted its allegiance, with regard to American films, from musical pictures to action material, according to Joseph R. Hummel, foreign general sales manager for Warner, who returned recently from a tour of four months, during which he covered all European countries except England.

While abroad Mr. Hummel established new offices in Vienna and Athens, with Ernst Reich in charge at Vienna and V. Michalides at Athens. G. Westergaard was placed in charge of the Danish office, succeeding C. Conradsen, who was transferred to Sweden to fill the vacancy resulting from the resignation of Knut Swenson.

MGM Moves Department

MGM has coordinated the scenario department at the home office. Nina Lewton, in charge of books and magazines, has moved her staff to the offices occupied by Bertram Block, in charge of plays. The legal department has taken over the space occupied by Miss Lewton.

Plan New Studio In Mexico City

by JAMES LOCKHART

Though Mexican film producers admit that their industry is not so very robust and that it is still much of an infant after nearly five years' existence, optimism reigns among some of these industrialists. This cheery spirit has prompted a new national producing enterprise, the Compañia Cinematografica Latino Americana, S. A., which has its headquarters at Avenida Juarez, No. 60, Mexico City, to decide upon the construction of a large studio, for its own productions as well as those of other Mexican picture makers, at Tlalpan, federal district, about 10 miles south of the Mexican capital.

Work on the studio is scheduled to start this month. It is understood that practically all of the equipment will be acquired in the United States. When this plant is completed, there will be three studios in the Mexico City sector. The other two, one large and the other small, are operated respectively by the National Motion Picture Production Company, pioneer producer of made-in-Mexico pictures, and George M. Stahl.

Suppression of Mexican-made pictures that exploit notorious criminals who have served time and are hired as actors merely because of their box office value among a certain element, and productions that overly emphasize crime, is the intent of the Mexico City police department. The department has ordered all producers in their jurisdiction to bar notorious ex-convicts from their pictures and to go easy on crime theme productions.

The police are investigating numerous complaints about a "bootleg" studio that is turning out pictures in which notorious men and women criminals are featured. Most of these pictures are exhibited privately before groups of morbidly curious folk who have an abundance of both money and time; but some of such productions frequently find their way to the screens of cinemas that cater to the lower classes. This glorification of crooks and crime is bad for customers of these "nickelodians," the police contend.

After a long illness, Albert Bell, a son of the late Richard Bell, noted English clown for whom a children's park here is named, died at his home in Guadalajara, capital of Jalisco state. Albert had worked for some years for Mexican film producers as a scenarist, adapter and technician. He was planning to become an exhibitor in Guadalajara when he was taken ill.

Work has begun in Mexico City on the first of a series of two-reel comedies to be made in English by Ramon Peon, a Mexican producer. "Welcome Rotarians" and "Here Come the Lions," based on the Rotary and Lion conventions, are the first two.

Produciones Mexicana Argos, cooperative organization of film and stage players, technicians and newspapermen, plans a group of scenic and folklore pictures, the third of which relates to Vera Cruz, is titled "Vera Cruz, the Flower of the Tropics," and will be in three reels.

Operating net before the charges including federal income taxes for the period this year was $5,293,812.38.

A total of $877,137.80 was credited directly to deficit account, representing profit of $856,312.16 on redemption of funded indebtedness retired in the period and other items amounting to $20,825.64. There was charged to deficit account $508,991.28 representing a provision of $170,000 for possible loss on a deposit under a purchase contract not consummated; a loss of $41,384.91 on the sale of capital assets (net) and cancellation of leases; and a net loss (other than operating losses provided for to the beginning of the current fiscal year) on investments in capital stock and bonds of, and advances to, a subsidiary previously consolidated, amounting to $297,606.37.

The consolidated balance sheet shows current assets of $19,009,785.58, including $4,171,160.65 cash. Current liabilities (other than mortgages and funded debt maturing within one year) were $11,095,713.41.

Receipt of 100,000 shares of its common stock was reported, in compromise and settlement of claims advanced against Renraw, Inc., and Harry M., Albert and Jack L. Warner based upon or arising out of the contract between the corporation and Renraw, Inc., dated as of Sept. 1, 1928, and as modified, under which contract the Warners rendered their personal services to the corporation during the six years ending Aug. 31, 1934.

RKO Plan Would Have Films Play Full Week

This fall the RKO circuit will undertake an experiment in its important New York houses looking to the holding of outstanding pictures for a full week, instead of the current two changes each week. The plan will go into work with the release of "Top Hat," RKO film starring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, and the first release on the company's 1935-36 schedule.

Hope was expressed by an RKO executive this week that the circuit could obtain 40 pictures for the purpose, but it is believed only about 20 are definite, a large number of which will come from the contribution of 20th Century to the Fox schedule. During the past season only three pictures played full week stands on the circuit.

Film Writers Aim at Guild Shop, Says Pascal

A "Guild shop" is the aim of the Writers' Guild at Hollywood, according to an article by Ernest Pascal in a recent issue of The Screen Guild's Magazine. The article says that a "guild shop" is not a closed shop, because the Guild "opens its door to every writer regardless of qualification. The writer merely agrees to abide by the rules of the guild—and no writer, except a guild writer, may be employed in a motion picture studio."

Indicating a precedent, Mr. Pascal noted the formation of a stage dramatists' guild which protected its membership with a set of rules applicable to all producers. He said the guild is not interested at the moment in a deal with producers.

Tax Revenue Drops in Month, Gains for Year

The government revenue from the federal admission tax declined more than $120,000 during June, as compared with May, and $386,000 as compared with June of last year, it was announced last week in Washington by the bureau of internal revenue. June receipts were $1,211,288, compared with $1,343,876 in May and $1,597,238 in June last year. For the fiscal year ended in June, the bureau reported admission tax revenue showed an increase of approximately $765,000, the total having been $15,379,397, compared with $14,613,414.

RKO Studio Expanding

RKO has awarded contracts on the Coast for the construction of three new sound stages, a two-story scene dock and a three-story storage building at the studio. A new power house also is planned. The work is expected to cost about $500,000. Stage space will be increased by more than 24,000 feet.

FILM BOARDS MAY BE REVIVED BY OCTOBER 1

Groups in 33 Exchange Centers Would Take a Leading Part in Handling Voluntary Arbitration

Film boards of trade will be revived in 33 exchange centers by October on a basis of their former importance, to fill the gap left by voidance of the NRA code, if plans of distributors are carried through as proposed. The composition and functions of the boards are reported already well defined, but it is considered certain that the Film Board name will be relinquished for some other designation.

Many important trade functions were left without direction when the local code boards were eliminated, and it is planned that the substitute boards will answer the need expressed by exhibitors in many centers for tribunals of arbitration and conciliation.

Film boards were relegated to a minor position when the code boards were established in the field, and even prior to that in some centers board secretaries had been put on a part-time basis and offices dispensed with. Skeleton organizations were left in approximately 15 exchange centers. In several instances exchange executives were appointed secretaries of the film boards, and their work consisted mainly in gathering statistics and conducting public relations work.

The staffs of the new film boards would be recruited largely from personnel of the former organizations, it was reported.

Drafting of clearance and zoning schedules would be one direction of assistance from the new boards in the local territories. Procedure for voluntary arbitration also would be devised by the boards. Former duties to be resumed would include participation in local and state legislative activities, acting as public relations contacts, as in civic organization cooperation and dealings with censor boards, as well as supervising fire inspections at exchanges.

Code Authority Office Closes

The Code Authority closed its offices in the RKO Building in Radio City on Wednesday. The final audit report of Price, Waterhouse & Co., accountants, was sent to the finance committee.

The grievance board of the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association at Kansas City this week was to consider a complaint of R. H. Montgomery, operator of the Mainstreet at Independence, Kan., that he is unable to obtain sufficient product. The Kansas City board, however, is expected to make no decision before the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America has determined its own method for handling grievances. The local board expects eventually to accept complaints, make necessary investigations and make decisions where issues are clear-cut, and seek compromises.

Mr. Montgomery has filed complaint also with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana favors voluntary arbitration and is urging its members to sign contracts carrying such provision.

The first draft of a 35-page report on the history and operation of the film code has been finished by William P. Farnsworth and is being revised preparatory to submission to the National Recovery Board.

Nazi Begin New Purge of Films

The Nazi regime in Germany, turning another page in its anti-Jewish campaign, is directing its attention toward a "purge" of the motion picture industry. The Reich film chamber this week cancelled the membership of a director, Willie Zeyn, on charges of having lent his name to a film produced by a Jew outside Germany. It is said his career is thus ended in Germany.

Reports were common that the Nazi were directing an attack at "non-Aryans" in the industry with their accustomed activity. At the same time an official denial was issued that Emil Jannings, Angela Salokker and Otto Gubuehr—all "non-Aryan"—were refused screen engagements in Germany because they were "non-Aryan."

Lilian Harvey, born in Germany, who scored success in the motion picture in the United States and England, was reported this week to have left Germany for England, interrupting a film she was making for Ufa in Berlin. Nazi attention is said to have been drawn to the film industry by "Monthly Leaflets" published by the office of Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, head of the Nazi foreign propaganda department, in which an article by Dr. Alexander Jason said "film production has not changed its face much" in Germany since 1933. This was interpreted in Nazi quarters as hinting that the Jews had not been thoroughly combed out of the film industry.

Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, German Minister of Propaganda and Public Enlightenment, at Berlin, has been named virtually the undisputed and autocratic motion picture dictator of Germany.

A cabinet decree issued last week gives Goebbels power to ban any motion picture without previous consultation with the Film Censorship Board.

Popeye, The Sailor To Take to the Air

Popeye, the Sailor, Segar's famous cartoon character which moved from the comic strip to the screen under Paramount release and Fleischer production, will take to the air, sponsored by the Wheatena Corporation. The program, 15 minutes in length, will be heard every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 7:15 p. m. Eastern Daylight Saving Time, over an NBC-WEAF network. The first broadcast will be on September 10. A West Coast group of similar programs will be heard on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, beginning September 16, at 4:45 p. m.

SAYS FILMS GLORIFY WHITE COLLAR JOBS

The motion picture, not the schools, is responsible for the oversupply of white collar workers, in the opinion of Roswell Ward of the New York State Employment Service Department. "The movies glorify the white collar worker," said Mr. Ward. "The youth of the land see the movie hero at his desk with a telephone and push buttons. That becomes the only type of employment youth will accept."

Mr. Ward declared that as a result of "picture propaganda" more than 70 per cent of the requests for positions are for white collar jobs. He observed that the "era of golden opportunity is over as far as the office worker is concerned."

Cooper Protests New Tax in Canada

Colonel John A. Cooper, head of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors Association of Canada, at Ottawa, protested last week at Ottawa to C. Fraser Elliott, commissioner of income tax, on the new remittance tax which strikes at American distributors operating in the dominion. He indicated that the commissioner would consider, with federal authorities, arguments presented by representatives of the industry, but said that no decision could be expected before late in August.

The new tax, effective July 1, provides that subsidiaries must withhold five per cent of all remittances derived from revenue received on copyrighted material.

Canada Exhibitor Group Reorganizes

The Saskatchewan Exhibitors' Association, Canada, has been reorganized with P. W. Mahon, of Prince Albert, as president. Other officers are: Jack Fields, Moose Jaw, vice-president; Larry Grayburn, Regina, secretary; Walter Davis, Regina, treasurer. The association reached a decision to become more active during the next year and arranged meetings to be held at intervals at Moose Jaw, Regina and Saskatoon.

Film Training For French Naval Officers

Training in cinematography is soon to become part of certain French naval officers' education, according to a report from Assistant Trade Commissioner Earle C. Taylor in Paris to the Department of Commerce at Washington.

French Marine Minister Pietri decided that a certain number of naval officers should familiarize themselves with the technique of motion picture photography. The officers chosen will put in a period with the photography corps of the army and later spend additional time with private firms. The initial period of instruction over, the officers will receive a portable motion picture camera and will be allowed a fixed footage of film annually.

The years since 1915 have seen the motion picture industry develop from swaddling clothes to full maturity. They have given character and stability to the most modern of the art forms and have seen it universally adopted as one of the indispensable features of modern living. This swift progress has been made in the short span of two decades—an extraordinary achievement even in this age of miracles.

Beginning then, alongside of men of aggressiveness and responsibility, Mr. Martin Quigley, with a vision of business journalism new to the motion picture, has carried on in continuous service as editor and publisher contributing uninterruptedly to the screen's welfare, the Quigley publications accurately and interestingly reflecting the progress of individuals and institutions, a definite constructive force that keeps pace with and links the best efforts in film trade activity all over the world.

Beginning then and on through twenty years, beside ambitious men driving their individual projects to world success, Mr. Martin Quigley has been privileged to see and share in the crystalization of the art and industry into a state of eminence; has been privileged to weave his own ideals and ideas into the fabric of the industry; has been privileged to interpret the best efforts of the industry to the external forces that were attracted to and impinged upon it.

Through these years that are now historic the industry had great need for a balanced judgment of activities, for a constructive voice to the outside and for a continuously operating yardstick of achievement. Under Mr. Quigley's guidance Motion Picture Herald and its antecedent publications have fulfilled these functions to a degree that has ever been contributary to the industry's growth and well being.

ATTORNEYS ACCUSE THACHER OF REPUDIATING PARAMOUNT PLEDGE

Lawyers, Finding Fee Claims Contested, Point to Reorganization Provision of $2,500,000 For Allowances; Court Firm

Strenuous protests were voiced this week by attorneys and others whose claims for fees aggregating $705,000 were objected to in entirety by former Federal Judge Thomas D. Thacher, special counsel for Paramount Pictures, Inc., at the adjourned hearing last Thursday in the U. S. district court in New York on the total of $3,221,328 asked by 53 petitioners. Some of these attorneys termed Mr. Thacher's attitude a virtual "repudiation," on behalf of the company, of a provision in the reorganization plan whereby $2,500,000 was set aside for such allowances.

That the committees, their counsel and others fully expected that they would receive compensation was pointed out by Alfred A. Cook, of Cook, Nathan & Lehman, counsel for Paramount in the reorganization proceedings and for the stockholders protective committee.

"A solemn obligation of the company existed in the plan to pay several of the committees and their attorneys," Mr. Cook reminded the court. "It also provided compensation for such other parties and counsel as the court may determine.

"If no such agreement had been provided by the company, the committees could have withheld their consent to the plan, for which assents of two-thirds of the outstanding debentures were needed for approval."

Mr. Thacher pointed out that Judge Alfred C. Coxe, in confirming the reorganization, reserved the right to fix reasonable compensation and cited Section 77-B of the bankruptcy act relative to compensation and reimbursement for "actual and necessary" expenses incurred in the proceeding.

Court Not Bound, Says Coxe.

"The court will not be bound by any agreements or stipulations in the reorganization plan for compensation," Judge Coxe commented. "That position has been upheld by the circuit court of appeals."

While urging that 15 applications be denied entirely and many others be sharply reduced, Mr. Thacher informed the court it would be difficult to determine a precise yardstick in deciding what should be allowed. Judge Coxe made it clear that the recommendations of Paramount counsel would not necessarily be followed by the court.

Mr. Thacher's objections later were attacked by Archibald Palmer, representing minority stockholders and bondholders, who termed the proceedings "outrageous and reprehensible on the part of the directors" and called Mr. Thacher "a tool of Wall street." Mr. Palmer's application for $15,000 fees was recommended for disallowance in entirety.

Attorneys expect that the court will announce its decisions late in August.

Referee John E. Joyce, special master in the Paramount bankruptcy, again occupied the bench with the judge.

In a three-hour presentation to the court, Mr. Thacher emphasized that the court could, if it wished, reduce the total to even less than the $2,500,000 estimated in the plan as the cost of reorganization. Mr. Thacher, a former solicitor general of the United States, had played a leading part in drafting the new bankruptcy law, under Section 77-B of which the Paramount reorganization was accomplished.

Only 14 applications, totaling $72,859, received the unqualified endorsement of Paramount through its counsel. No definite objections were voiced by Mr. Thacher to the largest single application, that of Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, who, as counsel for the receivers and trustees, asked $700,000. Mr. Thacher, with reference to "my good friend, Arthur Ballantine," a partner in the petitioning law firm, said that claim could be left, insofar as Paramount was concerned, to the court's discretion.

However, Mr. Thacher pointed out that those lawyers had already received an allowance that would bring their total compensation up to $950,000 if the present application were granted. Despite the great value of their work, he went on, he felt it could have been done more economically. Besides fees, the firm asks $7,679 as expenses.

Kuhn, Loeb $114,287 Opposed

The largest applications Mr. Thacher urged be denied in entirety were those of Kuhn, Loeb & Company, bankers, for $100,000 allowance and $14,287 expenses, and Cravath, De Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, attorneys for Kuhn, Loeb, who asked $150,000 plus $812 expenses. Mr. Thacher pointed out that Kuhn, Loeb made a profit of $1,000,000 in issuing $92,000,000 of Paramount securities and a trading profit of $400,000. He indicated also that they had an obligation to security holders to participate in reorganizing the company; that they voluntarily assumed that function at first and that it was only after the reorganization was well underway that they demanded compensation.

"There was no line or letter or suggestion that Kuhn, Loeb were employed to draft a plan," insisted Mr. Thacher. "An affidavit submitted by the bankers' committee said merely 'it was understood.' Their work and that of their counsel was of great value, but who asked for it? Sir William Wiseman testified at the hearing of the Securities and Exchange Commission that it was undertaken voluntarily, that he saw the responsibility and acted upon it."

Judge Coxe later agreed that the bankers had an obligation to those to whom they had sold securities, and, as at the previous hearing, referred to Kuhn, Loeb as "reorganization managers." Robert T. Swaine, of their counsel, objected to this characterization, but Judge Coxe replied:

"I don't care what you call them. In essence, their function was that of reorganization managers."

Cites Duplication Services

Mr. Swaine declared that the services of the banking house were not volunteered prior to March, 1934, and that an agreement existed whereby Kuhn, Loeb and Swaine's law firm was to be compensated, and in any event was to be reimbursed for out-of-pocket expenses, if the committee failed to approve the plan.

Pointing out that the new demands, in addition to $458,029.99 already allowed in fees and expenses and $363,333.78 spent in administrative expense in the proceedings, would bring the total cost of reorganization to $4,042,691.92, Mr. Thacher objected to payment to any committees, individuals or attorneys who performed any service that might be considered a duplication of the activities of the trustees and their counsel.

Special Counsel Recommends $705,000 in Claims Be Rejected in Entirety, Among Them Kuhn, Loeb's $114,287 Fee

Where the creditor's claim is adverse in the sense that it is intended to deplete the fund under administration, there can be no allowance for attorney fees, Mr. Thacher said.

"On April 29, last," he said, "the supreme court declared 'extravagant costs of administration in winding up of estates in bankruptcy have been denounced as crying evils,' and referred to the report of the attorney general transmitted to Congress by President Hoover recommending revision of the bankruptcy statute."

"Counsel for the stockholders committee," he said, "and later for the debtor (Alfred A. Cook), in presenting this plan of reorganization asserted, 'While I do not like colloquialism, if there was a melon, that was created by the various counsel and is one to which the creditors and debenture holders and stockholders were entitled and that they enjoy today.' In behalf of the reorganized corporation we submit that the size of such an estate as this is not a fair test of compensation for legal services, and we further respectully submit that the various counsel did not create this 'melon.' "

Applications amounting to approximately $1,400,000 were described as "excessive" by Mr. Thacher and the court was urged to reduce them to a "moderate" amount. In this category were the large claims of the bondholders, stockholders and other protective committees and their counsel.

Praises Services, But——

Mr. Thacher highly praised the services of Adolph Zukor, as receiver, and of the trustees, Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson, who ask an aggregate approximating $340,000. Together with the application of their counsel, the figure asked by this group is about $1,100,000. Nevertheless, he questioned justification for compensation at the rate of $72,000 a year.

Mr. Thacher also praised the work of Mr. Cook of the firm of Cook, Nathan & Lehman, who asks a fee of $250,000, but recommended that the allowances to the stockholders protective committee, which Mr. Cook represents, be reduced substantially from the requested $75,000 in fees and $170,000 expenses.

Cites Profits on Bonds

Mr. Thacher asked the court to consider that Frank A. Vanderlip, while chairman of the debenture bondholders committee, made "substantial profits" in dealing with those bonds during the reorganization period, when the court weighs Mr. Vanderlip's application for $50,000, and of the four other members for $7,500 each. He pointed out Mr. Vanderlip still has 55,000 of these debentures, which he purchased at 36 to 53, and now selling at 97.

He said that Lawrence Stern, another member of the committee, made a profit of $19,000 trading in Paramount securities, and that while his interest was supposed to be with the bondholders, the major portion of this profit was in trading in common stock. Mr. Thacher demanded itemization of the committee's $90,863 expenses and $52,390 payment of compensation and expenses to Dr. Julius Klein, a committee member and "expert."

While questioning the "propriety" of R. E. Anderson of Erpi in asking $7,500 as chairman of the general creditors committee, Mr. Thacher announced that since the previous hearing members of this committee, four in number, had withdrawn their applications, totaling $13,500. He said that if the court found such a committee was necessary, it should be reimbursed for the expense of organization and of handling claims. The committee requests $1,197.40 for expenses. Mr. Thacher recommended a reduction in the fee of $50,000 applied for by Nathan Burkan, counsel for the committee.

ATTACKS LAWYERS FOR IMPLICATIONS

Answers Zirn

Following an hour-long presentation of his claim by Samuel Zirn, as intervening attorney for bondholders, Mr. Thacher said there was no provision in the statute for the allowance of $75,000 fees and $1,207 expenses asked by Mr. Zirn.

Without mentioning names, Mr. Thacher scored attorneys who, in seeking to prove their own services "indispensable," attacked the motives and reputations of others.

With reference to the application of A. J. Schanfarber, Chicago, attorney; A. M. Frumberg, New York; Edgar J. Schoen, Chicago, and Mr. Zirn, for $75,000 fees and $7,868 expenses in connection with a suit brought in the New York supreme court against Paramount Publix, allegedly to prevent $10,000 in assets from being diverted to the banks, Mr. Thacher said that "it is preposterous to contend" that the suit preserved anything.

If Mr. Thacher's urgings were to be followed precisely by the court, the fees granted would not exceed $1,500,000. Attorneys were of the opinion the total allowed will be in the neighborhood of $2,000,000.

Thacher Recommendations

By name and amount, Mr. Thacher's recommendations on the fee petitions were as follows:

Charles D. Hilles, as receiver and trustee, $128,000; Eugene W. Leake, trustee, $118,000; Charles E. Richardson, trustee, $87,000; Adolph Zukor, as receiver, $18,545, and Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, as counsel to the trustees, $700,000 and expenses and disbursements of $7,679. All five applications were left to the discretion of the court, except in the case of the trustees, and Zukor compensation on the basis of $72,000 per year, representing a slight decrease in the amounts asked, was recommended.

The following 14 applications were approved unconditionally, both as to the right of the applicants to fees and as to the amounts asked:

Choate, Hall & Stewart, Boston, attorneys, $35,000 fee and $881 expenses; Chase National Bank, as trustee under the indenture of Paramount bonds, $1,975 fee; Milbank, Tweed, Hope & Webb, attorneys for Chase as trustee, $1,000 fee; N. Y. Trust Co., as agent in the reorganization, $3,297 fee and $415 expenses; Cobb, Hoke, Benson, Krause & Faegre, Minneapolis attorneys, $4,500 fee and $59 expenses; Pillsburg, Madison and Sutro, San Francisco attorneys, $3,525 fee and $9.83 expenses; Sonnenschein, Berkson, Lautmann, Levinson & Morse, Chicago attorneys, $5,750 fee and $285 expenses; Strauss & Hedges, special counsel, $501 fee; Kiddle, Margeson & Hornidge, special attorneys, $700 fee and $14 expenses; Harry Meyer, Butte, Mont, attorney, $150 fee and $31 expenses; Hornidge & Dowd, special attorneys, $1,980 fee and $26 expenses; Winston, Strawn & Shaw, Chicago attorneys, $1,500 fee and $16 expenses; Johnston, Tory & Johnston, Toronto attorneys, $750 fee, and Price, Waterhouse & Co., accountants, $10,484.

These, aggregating more than $700,000, were objected to in their entirety:

Bibb, Dederick & Osbourne, attorneys for an intervening bondholder, $25,000 fee; Saul E. Rogers, attorney for intervening bond and stockholders, $10,000 fee; Jacob J. Lesser, attorney for an intervening stockholder, $37,500 fee and $12 expenses; Archibald Palmer, attorney for intervening stock and bondholders, $15,000 fee; Louis M. Levy, attorney for intervening stockholders, $750 fee; Samuel Spring, attorney for Paramount creditors, $7,500 fee; Malcolm Sumner and Edwin L. Garvin, attorneys for an intervening creditor, $150,000 fee and $431 expenses; Orrin R. Judd and J. Andrew Crafts, certified public accountants, employed by Sumner and Garvin, $11,000 fee; Myron Robinson, consulting expert, employed by Sumner and Garvin, $12,500 fee; Samuel Zirn, attorney for intervening bondholders, $75,000 fee and $1,207 expenses; A. J. Schanfarber, A. M. Frumberg, Edgar J. Schoen and Samuel Zirn, attorneys, $75,000 fee and $7,868 expenses; Kuhn, Loeb & Co., reorganization activities, $100,000 fee and $14,287 expenses; Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, attorneys for Kuhn, Loeb, $150,000 fee and $812 expenses; Rosenberg, Goldmark & Colin, special attorneys for Paramount, $3,500 fee and $228 expenses; Joseph P. Day and Peter Grimm, realty advisors, $10,000 fee.

COUNSEL FOR SABATH REBUKED BY COURT

That Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe will permit no one, not even Congress, to interfere with his handling of the Paramount reorganization was evident when, at last week's hearing on allowance of fees, Meyer Kraushaar, counsel for the Sabath congressional committee investigating real estate reorganizations, sought to read a prepared statement.

"I have made up my mind that this court cannot permit you to be heard," Judge Coxe told the committee representative. "This is a litigation between private parties and I see no need for the entrance of another branch of the government, legislative or otherwise, into the proceedings. This court is bound by the oath of office which I have taken to protect whatever interest the general public has here."

Mr. Kraushaar later said privately he wanted to protest the large fees.

With respect to the Vanderlip committee's request for $80,000 plus $143,253 expenses, and the petition of the committee's counsel, Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner & Reed, for $150,000 fee, Mr. Thacher believed that a total remuneration of $150,000 for both would be "adequate."

Total Disallowance Urged

With reference to $50,000 fees and $25,728 expenses asked by the bank group committee, and $75,000 fee sought by Beekman, Bogue & Clark, committee attorneys, Mr. Thacher recommended total disallowance of the committee's fees and allowance of "reasonable expenses and fees for legal services."

Cook, Nathan & Lehman, as attorneys for the stockholders' protective committee and for Paramount ask $250,000 fee and $3,759 expenses; stockholders' protective committee, $75,000 fees and $170,000 expenses. Mr. Thacher regarded the law firm's application as "excessive" and recommended that members of the stockholders' committee be denied fees and numerous committee expenses be reduced or disallowed.

He advised reduction of the claims of the Munger debenture committee, $6.000 fees and $1,945 expenses; Szold & Brandwen, attorneys for the committee, $75,000 fee and $78 expenses.

He called "excessive" these claims:

Paramount Broadway bondholders' committee, $40,000 fees and $16,914 expenses; Stroock & Stroock, attorneys for the committee, $100,000 fee; Independent Paramount Broadway bondholders' committee, $2,500 fee and $297 expenses; Weiss, Pels & Grant, attorneys for the independent committee, $10.000 fee and $84 expenses; Chemical Bank & Trust Co., trustee under the indenture for Paramount Broadway bonds. $21,424 fee and $307 expenses; Cotton. Franklin, Wright & Gordon, attorneys for Chemical Bank as trustee, $8,000 fee and $48 expenses. He recommended an allowance of about $200,000 for the entire Paramount Broadway petitioning group.

Cook, Nathan & Lehman, as attorneys for the stockholders' protective committee and for Paramount, ask $250,000 fee and $3,759 expenses; stockholders' protective committee, $75,000 fees and $170,000 expenses. Mr. Thacher regarded the law firm's application as "excessive" and recommended that members of the stockholders' committee be denied fees and numerous committee expenses be reduced or disallowed.

He advised reduction of the claims of the Munger debenture committee, $6,000 fees and $1,945 expenses; Szold & Brandwen, attorneys for the committee, $75,000 fee and $78 expenses.

He called "excessive" these claims:

Paramount Broadway bondholders' committee, $40,000 fees and $16,914 expenses; Stroock & Stroock, attorneys for the committee, $100,000 fee; Independent Paramount Broadway bondholders' committee, $2,500 fee and $297 expenses; Weiss, Pels & Grant, attorneys for the independent committee, $10,000 fee and $84 expenses; Chemical Bank & Trust Co., trustee under the indenture for Paramount Broadway bonds, $21,424 fee and $307 expenses; Cotton, Franklin, Wright & Gordon, attorneys for Chemical Bank as trustee, $8,000 fee and $48 expenses. He recommended an allowance of about $200,000 for the entire Paramount Broadway petitioning group.

Says Undue Credit Claimed

In connection with his objections, Mr. Thacher pointed out that counsel for the trustees and the committees claimed undue credit. In particular he mentioned that the trustees claimed credit for an increase of $15,557,000 in cash of Paramount Publix and subsidiaries during the reorganization period up to June 2, 1935. Analyzing this increase, however, Mr. Thacher said it may be accounted for as follows:

Cash increase		$15,557,000
Cash settlements (as per plan) including expenses of administration and reorganization (estimated at $2,500,000)	$8,202,000
Cash increase after reorganization (excluding funds received from issue of new securities)	$7,355,000	$15,557,000

The source of this $7,355,000 may be analyzed as follows:

Interest accrued on claims for which new securities are to be issued	$4,895,000
Interest and dividends accrued first six months 1935, $55,000,000 as per plan at 3 per cent	1,650,000
Accrued interest and sinking funds, not paid, of subsidiary companies, including cluding Paramount Broadway	743,000
Liquidation of receivables and assets by trustees	734,000

Mr. Thacher submitted this summary covering the period of reorganization:

"The security values of Loew's, Inc., during the same period increased $46,000,000; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, a subsidiary of Loew's, increased $1,447,000; Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, a small chain of theatres, increased $5,800,000; Radio Keith Orpheum, one of the larger companies still in bankruptcy, increased $4,380,000; Warner Brothers pictures increased $27,400,000. The increased value of Paramount securities was $31,378,000."

He concluded that if the court fails to apply in this case the principles long recognized in bankruptcy procedure, "there will be confusion, scandal and waste in the administration of a statute which was intended to prevent just such evils."

Supports Thacher Objections

Monroe Goldwater of Goldwater & Flynn, counsel for Allied Owners Corporation, largest individual Paramount creditor, supported Mr. Thacher's objections generally for his client, and contended that committee counsel should be paid by their clients and not by Paramount. He particularly opposed allowance of fees to Stroock & Stroock, counsel for Paramount Broadway Corporation bondholders committee. The U. S. circuit court of appeals last week slashed $75,000 allowed this firm as trustees'

Otterson to Shift Theatre Contracts

The arrangements maintained by Paramount with its theatre operators and partners are to be reorganized by John E. Otterson, Paramount president, following his return from the Coast studios about August 15. The affiliates are expected to be on a new basis, either working agreements or new long-term contracts, by late September.

The company's policy of decentralized theatre operation will be continued, it is understood, and it was said in New York that there is no prospect of a return to home office operation centralized in New York. It is considered likely that many deals will be extended, despite the fact no action has been taken to renew 90-day agreements now held by Paramount theatre operators which expire September 28.

Failure of the company to initiate action on renewals is attributed to the pressure of production and management which have commanded Mr. Otterson's attention to the exclusion of practically everything else during his first month as new head of Paramount.

Mr. Otterson also is expected to decide the future status of S. A. Lynch with Paramount. The former head of Southern Enterprises has been advisor to Paramount trustees on theatre reorganization, and still has much to do in connection with the reorganization of Olympia and other Paramount holdings in New England. Mr. Lynch is due back from a European trip late this week.

Paramount partners directing the company's 1,000 theatres are currently negotiating new season film contracts at distribution headquarters in New York with the counsel of Y. Frank Freeman, the company's theatre head.

Settlement of claims against Paramount has entered its final stages. The Paramount board soon will be asked for authority to settle the antitrust claim against the company arising from a suit for triple damages filed in Boston several years ago by E. M. Loew, independent theatre operator. Negotiations for a settlement were underway when the Paramount reorganization was completed, and the trustees then handed the matter over to the new board. A special master at Boston recommended triple damages of $120,000 in favor of Mr. Loew, and it is reported the trustees were attempting to negotiate a settlement for $50,000.

Lasky May Be Co-Producer For Mary Pickford in U. A.

It is understood that Jesse Lasky is most likely to be named as co-producer with Mary Pickford at United Artists. However, Miss Pickford said this week in New York that she will not announce the name of the producer until she arrives on the Coast next week. She plans to drop stage work, devoting all other time to the screen, with perhaps occasional radio work.

Mr. Lasky, on the Coast, said no contracts have been signed and that he is considering several proposals, one from an English company, with independent financing, it is understood.

JUDGE PRAISES PARAMOUNT PLAN

Paramount's reorganization plan was highly praised by Judge Alfred C. Coxe at the hearing on fees in the U. S. district court in New York last week.

Interrupting Archibald Palmer, counsel for minority stockholders and bondholders, who was attacking the major committees as "vested interests" and Thomas D. Thacher's treatment of them as "the Lord's anointed," Judge Coxe observed:

"It is a good, sound, sensible plan of reorganization, probably the best I've seen in my experience. It is simple and direct, simple because not too many securities are issued, direct because the creditors get their securities without difficulty and without any assessments. The security holders have fared very well."

Minority Interests May Go to Schenck

As a result of increasing creditor sentiment in favor of the acquisition by Fox Theatres Corporation of the 50 per cent stock interest in the new Fox Metropolitan Playhouses offered it under the reorganization plan for Fox Metropolitan, Joseph M. Schenck's United Artists Theatres Corporation ultimately may be a minority stockholder in Fox Metropolitan.

Mr. Schenck's firm had agreed to make available to Keith-Albee-Orpheum a 10 per cent stock interest in the reorganized circuit out of its 50 per cent interest. Fox Theatres, sponsors of the reorganization plan, has an option to acquire 50 per cent of the new stock by payment of $150,000 and the withdrawal of its claim against Fox Metropolitan. An alternative method is for Fox Theatres to sell the 50 per cent interest to the United Artists theatre firm for $275,000. Retention of the stock, however, would automatically give Fox Theatres the controlling interest.

Creditors of Fox Theatres appear to be favoring retention of the 50 per cent as an investment, a procedure endorsed by Federal Judge Martin T. Manton, who has jurisdiction over the Fox Theatres receivership. Fox Theatres is bound to make its final decision on the matter within 60 days after completion of the Fox Metropolitan reorganization. Efforts are being made to conclude the reorganization by August 15. Fox Theatres thus would have until Octobter 15 to reach a decision. Milton C. Weisman, Fox Theatres receiver, has indicated he would call a creditor meeting immediately after the Fox Metroplitan reorganization to decide on a course of action, placing the result of the voting before Judge Manton.

Six directors of Fox Metropolitan have been designated already, Mr. Schenck having three representative, including himself, and Fox Theatres three. Fox Metropolitan bondholders will be given three places.

counsel in the Allied Owners receivership, to $50,000.

Archibald Palmer called Mr. Thacher a "paid pleader, who had not lived with the case as some of us had." He said Mr. Thacher "deified committees" and attacked what he termed "the vested interests," as opposed to the minority stockholders.

Mr. Zirn was in the midst of an exposition opposing fees for the trustees and their counsel, when the court interrupted with: "I have heard enough of that.'

And thus the hearing ended.

The Paramount reorganization was discussed Tuesday in the House by Representative Sabath, while on Wednesday William Gibbs McAdoo said in the Senate that his committee will study the matter in New York in December. Senator McAdoo reported numerous complaints on the administration of receiverships and bankruptcies, notably the Paramount receivership.

Mr. Sabath introduced a bill that a federal conservator be appointed by the President to approve all reorganization plans of realty corporations. It was anticipated that the Paramount case will be the basis of legislation next winter.

Demands of Union Halt Stage Shows

Union conditions in St. Louis have led Fanchon and Marco to completely discard plans for the installation of stage shows in one or two of the local first run theatres. The plans were apparently definite a week ago. Executives declared that bookings for Olsen and Johnson and the "Texas Mustangs" of Southern Methodist University were cancelled because the local musicians' union refused to furnish men to play for the acts and because stage hands asked more than last year.

In a message to Fanchon and Marco last week Sam Meyers, president of the musicians' local, said his group would not furnish men for any single engagement, and that the musicians were not interested in assisting the theatre management in experiments to determine whether St. Louis would support a permanent policy of pictures and stage shows. Nothing less than a full season's contract will be considered by the union, said Mr. Meyers.

U. A. Closes with Warner For Entire 1935-36 Lineup

A deal has been completed in New York providing that the entire product lineup of United Artists for 1935-36 will be shown in Warner theatres throughout the country. The negotiations were handled by Al Lichtman, president of United Artists, and Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner Theatres Corporation. The Walt Disney short subjects released by United Artists are included in the deal. Among the features involved will be: "The Call of the Wild," released August 9; "The Dark Angel," "Red Salute," "Barbary Coast," "The Man Who Could Work Miracles."

NEW TYPE THEATRE FOR NEW EASTERN CIRCUIT

$40,000 Maximum Cost Includes Building, Equipment; Ground Broken at White Plains, N. Y.

Ground was broken recently in White Plains, New York, by Pix Theatres, Inc., recently organized, for the first unit of a new circuit of an undetermined number of theatres to be built along the eastern seaboard, incorporating promised radical departures from normal practice in theatre and construction and design, and all staffed by inexperienced local workers. The house will seat 299 and inclusive of building and equipment costs will be limited to $40,000 each, it was announced by E. S. C. Coppock, general manager of the company. The opening tentatively is set for October 17. Private capital is financing the enterprise.

Corners will be at a premium in the building since, in aiming at the design of a "functional" structure entirely eliminating waste space, the architects, Bianculli and Ghiani of New York, devised it in the shape of an arch, abandoning the rectangular form of design associated with small theatres.

Among the innovations, at least for theatres of that size, will be a modified reverse sloped floor designed by Ben Schlanger, architect; 16 mm. as well as 35 mm. projection; a special projector by DeVry; a modified form of contour curtain for the stage patterned after the one in the RKO Music Hall, and a row of seats wired for the hard of hearing. The design as well as the new technique are the result of two years of experimental development.

There will be modified refrigeration equipment for air conditioning, and a new type of Forest copper oxide rectifier will be installed, as well as a Peerless Magnarc lamphouse.

Mr. Coppock plans to adapt some of his ideas developed during many years as a manager for Paramount, and the house manager of the first Pix theatre will be a local man with no previous theatre experience but trained under new ideas of the corporation. The entire staff will be drawn from the community.

Policy will be first and subsequent runs at 40-cent top, single features only. Mr. Coppock also plans to present films not generally released to commercial theatres and has tentatively scheduled some product from the Explorers' Club of America. If these are shown, the explorer producing the picture will appear at the theatre with the film.

The White Plains site is at Mamaroneck and Livingston. The general contractor is the Frank M. Goble Construction Company, White Plains, and the structural steel plan is by Erickson and Skinner. Free parking will be available to patrons.

The entire venture, including the technical experimentation, has been financed by the company, and no outside capital is involved. John S. Clarke, Jr., is president.

Cameraman Is Drowned on Set

Glenn Strong, MGM cameraman, was drowned last week in the sinking of a barge used in the production of "Mutiny on the Bounty," off the California coast. Approximately 75 others, working on the barge, were brought safely to shore.

A heavy swell striking the barge, on which had been erected a replica of the quarter deck of the Pandora, British warship of the period of the story, the ship lurched and sank swiftly. The accident occurred about 50 miles off Santa Barbara, near the island of San Miguel.

Clark Gable, Franchot Tone and Charles Laughton, the leading players in the cast of the picture, were ashore at the time of the accident.

Priest Defends Films from Attack

Father Gerard B. Donnelly, writing in last week's issue of the Catholic publication, America, praised the manner in which the motion picture producers have improved the moral tone of their product during the past year, and sharply took to task the Catholic Daughters of America, who, at their Seattle convention recently, adopted a resolution attacking the industry.

Pointing out that the Daughters said that films were "definitely cleaner," Father Donnelly said, "It seems to me that this is a shocking understatement."

"I hold no brief for Hollywood," he wrote, "and I am fully aware of the fact that the producers accepted reform only as the result of enormous pressure. But somebody ought to insist that, since their meeting with the Catholic Bishops in May, 1934, the producers have lived up to their promises with admirable fidelity.

"They have adopted a code written and approved by the church authorities. They have employed a conscientious and strict interpreter of that code. They have during the past year acceded to his every order, and frequently, it should be remembered, at considerable financial cost. In short they have shown a splendid spirit of cooperation with the official leaders of the Legion of Decency. Hence it is embarrassing to find that The Catholic Daughters do not seem even ordinarily appreciative."

Father Donnelly took issue with the suggestion of Mrs. Mary Larkin, national editor of The Catholic Daughters, that film stars "who are notoriously known because of their many divorces and the scandalous lives they lead must be eradicated."

"It is regrettable indeed," he said, "that the people who entertain us . . . are subject to human frailty and temptation." He warned that if producers are to be denounced for code violation when they are innocent they would soon resign from further cooperation. "If they are damned when they are clean as roundly as they were damned when they were dirty, what, they might reasonably ask themselves, is the use of reformation?" he wrote.

ISSUANCE OF 45 IMPORT LICENSES BEGUN UNDER GERMANY'S QUOTA

Listing of Titles of German Pictures Released by Companies Is Required; 40 U. S. Films Passed by Censors

by J. K. RUTENBERG

Berlin Correspondent

Apportionment of the German import licenses has just begun in Germany. Issuance is subject to the kontingent laws and to the provisions regulating importation of foreign-made pictures. For American companies it is worth noting that the kontingent law in its original form, set up on June 28, 1933, again has been extended to June 30, 1936. This extension became effective July 1, this year.

As reported in the Herald of February 16, 1935, 30 external licenses again will be handed to the exporters of German films. They are transferable once (at a price of reichsmarks 10,000 for originals and a sliding price for dubbed films). Moreover, the Ministry disposes of 15 additional import licenses, which can be released on application, making a total of 45 import licenses. The German film distributors, on the other hand, get another total of 60, socalled internal licenses. They are non-transferable and must be used by the distributing companies themselves. These licenses are free from any charge.

At the same time that the German Film Chamber notified the distributors that their programs for the 1935-36 season must not be made known before July 15, and release contracts with cinema proprietors were placed under the same provisions, the kontingent office instructed the companies entitled to receive import licenses to order the transfer of the licenses by July 31 (Wednesday of this week) at the latest.

German Titles Included

The order had to contain a list with the titles of those German films (so far as the internal licenses are concerned) which had been released by the company between July 1, 1934, and June 30, 1935. Films distinguished especially by the censoring authorities for value in an artistic, educational or political sense, counted double. Certificates and judgments had to accompany the list.

Those companies which have distributed German films abroad, or have sold the performing rights of these films to other countries, are entitled to the external licenses, the number of which is ordinarily limited to 30. The companies must prove that they have received returns from other countries for these films or the respective rights between July 1, 1934, and June 30, 1935.

At the same time the provisions regulating importing for the coming season were made known, the censoring authorities published official figures that 40 American features had been passed by the censor in the releasing season just ending.

Of the 185 feature films distributed throughout the Reich 104 films were of German origin, 40 came from the United States, 11 from Austria, 10 from France and five each from England and Czechoslovakia. The total available was the lowest since the end of the war, and German production was as subject to the decrease as was the United States. The percentage of the other countries was a little higher and they outrivaled for the first time the total American film offer.

The total of films passed by the board, with country of origin, during the past and two previous seasons, are indicated in the following tabulation:

Germany	104	122	121
U. S. A.	40	37	65
Austria	11	9	6
France	10	8	10
Czechoslovakia	5	7	3
England	5	6	—
Denmark	1	2	1
Hungary	2	2	4
Poland	2	1	—
Sweden	1	1	—
Switzerland	2	1	—
Italy	1	—	3
Finland	—	—	—
Holland	1	—	—
Total	185	196	213

A considerable number of American films have been placed on the market rather late, June bringing the premieres of no less than six American films in Germany.

Export Bank in Action

Plans, discussed for a considerable time among minor film producers and exporters and aiming at a logical and systematic increase of German film exports, have led to establishment of German Film Export Bank, Ltd. (Deutsche Filmexport-Gesellschaft, Limited).

The bank was made possible by the support of the Association of Producers and Distributors (Gesamtverband der Film-Herstellung und Filmverwertung) after willingness had been expressed by a majority of German film producers to place 20 to 30 films at the disposal of the export company. The company aims to promote foreign distribution of German films in general. Existing contracts and agreements with distributors in other countries will be continued and the marketing of German films by the export company will not affect these relations.

In close cooperation with the Film Credit Bank the export company will support the producers of German films by an extension of the credit system to the export trade and at the same time build up new connections and trade agreements with other countries.

The export company will support impartially all German producers and distributors and will act whereas heretofore an efficient exploitation on the foreign market was handicapped by special difficulties.

Alfred Klar, hitherto managing director of the Centropa Company, Limited, has been appointed manager of the new company

Toronto Canada's Best Theatre City

Toronto led the rest of Canada as a theatre city, it was revealed in official figures released in Toronto last week. Montreal is the country's largest city.

Total revenue in 1934 for Toronto was $4,744,000, an increase of 1.8 per cent over 1933. Montreal's total indicated a decrease of 3.2 per cent, being $3,950,000 for 1934. Vancouver was listed third, with $1,575,300, while Winnipeg was fourth with $1,423,800 and Ottawa fifth with $836,900.

Compared with 1933, revenue increases were noted in Toronto, Vancouver, Windsor, Kingston, Moncton and Three Rivers. Decreases predominated in the large centers, however, with the totals lower in Montreal, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Edmonton, Victoria, Moose Jaw, Ottawa, Halifax, St. John, London, Saskatoon and Quebec.

Toronto showed the greatest number of theatre patrons with a total of 18,990,000 while Montreal's 18,599,000 was a close second. Vancouver stood third with 7,450,000, followed by: Winnipeg, 6,111,000; Hamilton, 3,482,000; Ottawa, 3,259,000; Edmonton, 2,091,000; Calgary, 1,953,000; Quebec City, 1,941,000; Halifax, 1,719,000; London, 1,701,000; Regina, 1,124,000; Victoria, 1,106,000; Saskatoon, 1,044,000; St. John, 1,044,000; Windsor, 1,019,000; Kingston, 660,000; Moncton, 488,000 and Three Rivers, 410,000.

Increases were reported for the first quarters of 1935 in practically all centers but a slump was noted in the cities of Ontario because of the heavy amusement tax increases which were enacted by the provincial government last May.

Organize Medallion Exchange

Philip Smith and a group of other New England theatre operators have organized Medallion Pictures of New England, new independent exchange. It was formed to handle New England distribution of eight features planned by Victor and Edward Halperin for Medallion Productions, Inc. NEW PLAN TO OPPOSE BRITISH OVERBUILDING

Exhibitors Want Distributors to Join in Seeking Government Act to Require Approval

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

In search of an effective method of combating "Redundancy," or overbuilding the legal and parliamentary committee of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, after prolonged sessions, is believed to have come to the conclusion that cooperation of distributors is essential in formulation of a workable policy.

That exhibitors and distributors jointly shall ask the Government to pass an Act making every new theatre erection subject to official approval is a probable recommendation from the Committee. Its final report is not expected for some time.

The campaign against overbuilding is now a year old. Originally conceived to include a boycott by distributors against any new theatre erected in face of a trade embargo, the plan ultimately was left to be worked by the CEA alone, owing to the view of John Maxwell, president of the Kinematograph Renters Society, that distributors could not equitably withhold product from new theatres.

Opposition Less Effective

The CEA revised its procedure and took steps to oppose the issue of new licenses in the localities affected. It was backed by a legal opinion that licensing authorities could refuse permits for new buildings on the ground that existing facilities were adequate. Many successes were registered at the outset, but of late CEA opposition does not appear to have been so effective, probably due to the fact that new builders have learned to present their cases in a form acceptable to local interests.

In the past year, theatre erection has proceeded on a very large scale in the United Kingdom. In particular, the Oscar Deutsch "Odeon" circuit, regarded as a main target of the CEA action, has added "super" after "super." Though there have been instances where its plans were affected by the redundancy campaign, the Odeon group for the most part has successfully asserted the right to put up a modern theatre in competition with existing older buildings.

Quota Quality a Problem

Out of the renewed discussion of Quota problems stimulated by Simon Rowson's paper at the CEA Summer Conference has come a suggestion from the Bristol branch that a committee of "examiners" be appointed to pass every film as of suitable entertainment quality before it is registered under the Films Act.

The suggestion is likely to be of value in bringing up for official discussion a method of coping with the "quickie" which is generally regarded as the only effective alternative.

But Mr. Rowson, championing a minimum cost clause, points out that a committee of the type indicated would have no statutory powers.

"Repertory" Bookings

Gaumont-British is making an interesting experiment in distribution by offering for bookings a series of its past successes, some of which were first released several years ago. The list includes such film as "I Was a Spy" and "Constant Nymph." The plan is intended primarily for small exhibitors, who are up against pretty severe product difficulties at the moment. A reissue in the ordinary sense is not planned; there will be no release date; copies of the films will be available whenever they are wanted. The move is, in fact, an application of the repertory principle to box office material.

Trade Makes Peace with Labor

After almost a year of more or less acute differences of opinion, and as a sequel to negotions extending over three years, the London and Home Counties Branch of the CEA and representatives of the chief labor unions concerned with the theatre field have signed the wages and hours schedule drawn up by the Joint Conciliation Board for the industry. This result registers a considerable triumph of tact and perseverance for Arthur Taylor, London secretary of the CEA, and indicates a reasonable hope of an amicable settlement of employment disputes in all parts of the country. The agreement is at present limited to London, and runs for a trial period of one year.

Production Spurt Continues

The almost daily announcement of new production companies is an indication of the optimistic view taken in financial quarters of the operation of the extended exhibition quota in the fall. Even more significant are the preparations which established companies are taking to extend their floor space. On top of the new plants and additions planned by London, British International Pictures, British National and others, it is announced that Sound City, Ltd., is doubling its capital of £175,000. The money, raised without a public issue, is to be used on considerable extensions of this company's studio at Shepperton, which is a service establishment.

On the production side, one of the new flotations, Falstaff Films, Ltd., indicates a first activity of the Captain Dixey company. Falstaff will make three in its first year.

"Documentaries" for Release

A contract announced by Associated British Films Distributors will bring into entertainment programs a series of "documentary" films, which have enjoyed an enormous reputation. ABFD will issue several subjects made by John Grierson for the Post Office Film Unit.

Other documentaries to be made at the ATP studios and released by ABFD will be made by Cavalcanti, lately in charge of Paramount production in Paris.

GTC Reconstruction Passed

In face of opposition by 1,000 preference shareholders, claimed to represent 300,000 shares, Mr. Justice Eve in the chancery court sanctioned the General Theatres Corporation reconstruction scheme, embodying reduction of capital from £2,000,000 to £549,166: 13: 4 and continuance of Gaumont-British management for 10 years under an arrangement by which G-B will provide £300,000 of new capital.

Opposition was based on assertion that G-B had mismanaged the theatres.

U. S. Films Gain in Holland

Declining popularity of German pictures in the Netherlands has resulted in a sharp increase in the number of American films shown in the country, according to a report to the Department of Commerce from W. M. Chase, consul at Amsterdam. American films in May represented 68 per cent of all first runs in Amsterdam.

Broadway Capitol Drops Stage Show

The Capitol on Broadway, one of New York's largest motion picture theatres, on August 9 will turn from feature pictures and elaborate stage presentations, often featuring "name" attractions, to a policy of motion pictures only, on continuous run as before.

The action of the Capitol, which is a Loew house, under the supervision of Major Edward Bowes, as managing director, thus follows the Paramount, another of Broadway's largest, which some time ago dropped stage presentations for all-film programs. "China Seas," MGM film starring Clark Gable, Wallace Beery and Jean Harlow, will be the first picture to play the Capitol under the new policy.

As a result only two large theatres in the Broadway area are now operating with stage presentations in addition to feature films, the Music Hall in Radio City and the Palace, which is a second run theatre.

U. S. Films Lead Imports into Poland

The United States led all other countries as point of origin in the importation of motion pictures into Poland during the year 1934, according to a report to the United States Department of Commerce from Clayton Lane, commercial attache at Warsaw. The United States imported 856 films into Poland, of which 479 were passed by the censor. France provided 31, Austria 42, Great Britain 17, Russia 17 and Czechoslovakia 10.

Only 15 features were produced in Poland during the year, out of a total production of 150 units, with 148 passed by the censor, of which 11 were silent and 137 sound. A total of 1,038 films were imported, of which 630 were presented to the censor and 621 passed.

Hungarian Film Industry Reported Making Progress

The Hungarian film industry is expected in 1935 to continue the progress made during 1934, according to a report to the Department of Commerce from the American consulate-general at Budapest. During the first five months of 1935 the Hunnia Film Studio produced five sound films at a total cost of approximately $156,000. It is expected that the industry will be placed under the jurisdiction of the newly formed Ministry of Industries, the artistic supervision remaining with the Ministry of Public Education and censorship and political and public moral issues with the Ministry of Interior. License holders unable financially to operate film theatres will be required to surrender their licenses.

Bright Lights

(Warner)

Comedy Drama

A bright, smart, clever concoction of back stage atmosphered and theatre folk hokum comedy, supported by a light dramatic and romantic story, in which there is more than the usual degree of human interest, brings this entirely within the realm of potentially popular and profitable screen entertainment. With accent on comedy in most of the situations, action and dialogue, it's a sort of lump-in-the-throat picturization of several chapters in the career of a small-time burlesque-vaudeville team suddenly lifted to the brilliant glamor of Broadway. Along with it is an amusing but touching detailing of what success does to lots of people until they eventually understand what it's all about.

The story moves at a catchy and colorful pace, with production values all that is required of such a character show. Joe and Fay Wilson are a pair of small-time troupers, who suddenly and quite by accident get a cinderella break on the Main Stem, and they're sensational there, as they were in the sticks. A stage socialite, Peggy, is set in the show for publicity purposes. Lovable but big headed Joe gets a terrific yen for the newcomer, a circumstance which, disillusioning to Fay, causes her to quit the big time and return to her former stamping grounds. Treading air, believing himself a big shot in the field of romance as he is on the boards, Joe eventually wakes up to the fact that he is being given the run around by Peggy and press agent Wheeler, with whom she really is in love. A wiser but not sadder Joe rejoins Fay back in the small time where they belong.

In the picture, Brown does all the stuff that his followers like to see him do. He sings, dances, mimics and cavorts in typical fashion in his stage roles, but in his straight parts he is surprisingly dramatic, which reaction is the result of his dumb inability to understand.

As midsummer entertainment, "Bright Lights," in which the exploitation possibilities are limitless, can be offered to patrons with the suggestion that it is as good as, if not better than, any of Joe E. Brown's previous vehicles. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

Cheers of the Crowd

(Monogram)

Melodrama

A showmanship idea is the inspiration for this show. Not a big or glamorous attraction, or a frantic excitement stimulator as the title might suggest, it is a topical situation comedy. In it there is much to amuse the ordinary garden variety of theatre goers and plenty to exercise exploitation ingenuity. As it concentrates on making the motivating premise the focal interest point, romantic love interest is only of the expected function and caliber as a melodramatic denouement provides the principal action.

In the yarn, Adams is a publicity expert specializing in drawing popular attention to a flopping show. Grabbing Honest John, an ex-carnival character who has departed his Midwestern fields rather than go to jail, Adams gags him up as a sandwich sign man who finds a sack of money, an idea which is very reminiscent of a recent actual happening as made a subject of newspaper and newsreel interest. Returning the money to the producer, Adams' reporter sweetheart, Mary, falls for the human interest angle, the resulting publicity of which puts the show in the money. Then as Honest John becomes the center of interest in his efforts to live up to his name, yet fearful that the Kansas authorities will get wind of his whereabouts, villain Walton attempts to chisel in by threatening to expose the ruse, as a means of getting money with which to elope with usherette Betty.

The idea of the picture is its leading exploitation quality. Cast names are hardly of the strength to arouse much interest, and the title, while valuable, has but little relation to the theme. Story content therefore must assume responsibiity for creating interest. The materials are provided with which to work, selecting the ones that appear to be most valuable for local use and giving them the benefit of intensive exploitation.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

China Seas

(MGM)

Action Drama

Necessity of scratching around for commercial showmanship ideas with which to sell the picture is something that those who play this production should never have to worry about. What showmen, big or little, playing to either the specialized audience or to general attendance, require of any picture with which to convince even the most skeptical patrons that they are offering entertainment worthy of their patronage, is available here in great quantities.

Consider the essentials, offered here, in the usual order of their importance. The title; short, easy to read and understand; quick to suggest alluring story content. The stars: Clark Gable and Wallace Beery, two of the screen's top rankers; Jean Harlow, one of the industry's biggest names. That prestige assumes a new significance in "China Seas," for in it the three are presented not only in a style which their particular followers like best, but in a manner certain to increase their popularity with average patrons. The supporting cast; what is remarked of the stars also pertains to each individual listed. Production values; authentic and natural demonstrations of a complete understanding of picture making art and technique. Story content: roisterous and sometimes ribald adventure in dangerous love and in peril on a liner plying the exotic China Seas, where anything may happen and much does. A story seething with action, alive with poignant dialogue, sparkling with expected and unexpected comedy in situation and conversation; thrilling spectacle of the elements gone mad, and human aspirations, greed and lust gone madder. Direction: a masterful treating of every entertainment asset, human or mechanical.

"China Seas" is a showman's show that, in every way, gives any one all the opportunity he wants to prove his ability. It's one which makes the job a cinch even for those who like to go fishing and let their assistants do the work when a potential "natural" comes along.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Comedy Drama

From a showmanship viewpoint, this picture in a primary consideration is an experiment. In it Will Rogers, who regardless of all other values is the natural exploitation audience entertainment point of interest, is presented in a dramatic role. While much that both parties have come to expect of Rogers, in his particular forte, is retained, there is little question but an honest effort has been made to see what the public reaction would be to Rogers in a more serious role than that which he has established. Whether the experiment proves a success remains to be seen. If there is a desire for something novel and different, the means, as far as character is concerned, have been provided. And, with due recognition of all else offered, the experiment should be the keynote of the interest-creating campaign.

In the picture, Doctor John is first presented as a quack medicine peddler on a Mississippi River steamboat. By circumstances, talked about but not picturized, he becomes owner of a boat. Likewise, it is revealed that his nephew, whom he has been chosen to be pilot, has been suspected of murder. Then, on the Claremont Queen, Duke appears with Fleety Belle, a swamp girl, who, as again explained, was the reason for the self-defense killing. From then on, with Doctor John majoring in dramatic portrayals, the motivating spirit of the story is his search up and down the river to find New Moses, psalm-shouting revivalist and eye witness of the killing.

During this time, John forsakes his quack calling and becomes proprietor of a floating wax works museum, the putting together and exhibition of which results in much comedy, and also the prospective rival of Captain Eli in a future derby steamboat race down the Mississippi. The search for New Moses and the race, which is given spectacular values in preparation for the start, are made simultaneous. By wile, ruse and ingenuity all the fun expected of Rogers is delivered. He first ties his Claremont Queen on to Eli's Pride of Paducah to be furtively towed down the river, as Fleety Belle is at the wheel. Then with the aid of New Moses, who has been picked up, Engineer Efe and roustabout Jonah, he burns all the wood save that which is necessary to keep the craft afloat, the wax museum and finally his high alcoholic content patent cure-all medicine, to win the race and save Duke from the gallows.

There are many incidents in the production with which to intrigue audience interest. The work of the supporting players, which in many cases predominates over that of Rogers, gives the picture a unique twist which in relation to him is of definite commercial and entertainment value. But, in the long run, Will Rogers is the dominating exploitation asset, in a campaign that assures patrons that they are going to see him in a type of role which is entirely different. That interest, once stimulated, should be amply repaid, not only by Rogers' versatility, but by other entertaining values.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Pursuit

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

For the action fans, those who like suspense-laden thrill dished up in furious fashion, with liberal portions of comedy and a flock of surprising twists tossed in for good measure, practically the entire running time of this picture is devoted to a series of chases via air, auto highway and waterway.

The action of the story, a modernization of the good old-fashioned stuff that ordinarily has the more impressionable leaping around in their seats, is also reflected in the theme. That, too, is popular material and it's played in a way that makes no pretentions to anything else than preserving its entertainment and showmanship value.

Essentially "Pursuit" is not a big picture in either cast or story importance, but under the prod of aggressive showmanship, which in the final sense is only availing one's self of what is ready and waiting, should result more than satisfactorily.

A novel premise has been selected for all the excitement, fun and secondary, but important, love interest. Detective Maxine (Sally Eilers) is hired by Mrs. McCoy to get her son beyond the clutches of her in-laws, with whom she is having trouble. Maxine hires Mitchell (Chester Morris), an intrepid and somewhat batty stunt aviator, to fly Donald to Mexico. Then the chases begin. The plane cracks up. The trio take to autos and speed boats. As they in turn go haywire, Mitchell and Maxine, who have fallen into combative love, start chiseling on each other. Secretly Mitchell figures he should turn the lad over to the in-laws, who have offered bigger reward for his return than Mrs. McCoy has for getting him out of the country. Old Reynolds tries to get a finger in the financial pie, but attempts to spirit the boy away. In the end, Mitchell and Maxine, their love for each other conquering all other inclinations, get Donald to a haven of safety and the chases are over.

Sell this to the tune of thrill action, with the added lure of plenty of comedy and just enough romantic love interest to catch the fancy of those who must have that quality in their entertainment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Westward Ho

(Republic)

Western

The first release on the schedule of Republic Pictures, born out of Monogram Pictures, this western, starring John Wayne, popular star with an appreciative following, may be considered superior to the regular run of western material. In cast numbers, background material and the like it gives every evidence of care and expense in the making. The result is worthwhile.

As a western it is to be sold chiefly to those among the regular run theatre patrons who have demonstrated a taste for the active stories of the western plains and mountains of yesterday. But at the same time the picture should be worth some extra effort on the part of the exhibitor. It has considerable suspense, an ample portion of the fast-paced action which western fans want, incidental romance and fast riding.

Dealing as it does with the activities of the famous Vigilantes of the Early West, who handled outlaws in their own active manner, it is subject matter which should be particularly effective as sold to the younger element. Supporting Wayne are Sheila Mannors, for the romance; and such western standbys as Frank McGlynn, Jr., Jack Curtis and Yakima Canutt.

Two song numbers, effectively rendered by a cowboy group, and a third, sung by Wayne to Miss Mannors, are tuneful and add to the picture. They are "Westward Ho," "The Vigilantes" and "The Girl I Loved Long Ago." It may be effective selling to have these numbers broadcast from the theatre lobby over loud-speakers.

The story spans 15 years. A man, his wife and two small sons are bound for the gold country of California, examples of those hardy pioneers who pushed the American frontier westward in the middle of the 19th century. Trail raiders, led by Curtis and Canutt, take the pioneers' cattle, burn their wagons, kill the man and woman, and take the younger of the two small boys with them. The other boy escapes.

Years later, Wayne, the one who escaped, has dedicated himself to ridding the state of outlaws and finding his brother and the murderers of his parents. The state authorities cannot supply him with men and horses, and he organizes, on his own, the Vigilantes, a group of men who have had disagreeable experiences with the outlaws. Wearing all the same garb, all mounted on white horses, the Vigilantes ride herd on the outlaws, bringing in first one, then another outlaw band.

Wayne deliberately joins a group of pioneers, headed by the father of Miss Mannors. Romance begins as Wayne helps them during a raid by the Curtis-Canutt gang, through the cleverness of McGlynn, who is Wayne's kidnaped brother, although neither of them knows the other. Then follows fast action, against a beautiful western background, highlighted by the appearances of the large troop of Vigilantes on white horses, until it is finally revealed to McGlynn by Miss Mannors that Wayne is his brother, just after Wayne has been sent into a trap. McGlynn rides after and saves him, and as the Vigilantes swoop down and capture the gang, McGlynn is killed, but Wayne evens the score with the men who killed his parents. The romance closes the film.—Aaronson, New York.

Edited by Carl Pierson. Cameraman, Archie Stout. Recorded by Dave Stonert. Release date, September 1, 1935. Running time, 60 minutes. General audience classification.

Little Big Shot

(Warner)

Melodrama

For entertainment and showmanship purposes, this fulfills two purposes. In character the show is a gangster menaced tear jerker, in which the excitement and danger of one is blended with the emotional heart appeal of the other. Easily adaptable to the type of showmanship ordinarily given to a picture which merges these qualities, it also presents, in Sybil Jason, a promising new juvenile starlette. A clever mimic whose imitations in this picture account for many of the laughs, her adaptability to a rather difficult dramatic role is indicative of a bright future.

Steve and Mortimer, playing for comedy, are a pair of cop-dodging pitchmen plying the highways and byways of New York's bright light area. While they are putting on the dog with an old pal, Gibbs, and his daughter Gloria in a swank cafe, Gibbs leaves the child to them as he believes their tall tales of great affluence. When Gibbs is murdered by Norton's gangsters as he leaves the cafe, the grafters are forced to take care of little Gloria. A pair of harum scarum sharpers, they're up against a tough proposition, a condition not made any too easy by the ironic remarks of Jean, Steve's girl friend.

In sequences that tug at the heart, Steve tries to get Gloria into an orphan home. Unsuccessful, the pair are compelled to take care of the child. Her money making imitation antics and singing on the streets convince the boys that she'll be a swell come-on for their pitch business.

Steve, ribbed by gangster Doré in a phoney crap game that turns out to be legitimate, swears to take care of Doré when that worthy refuses to pay off. Several dramatic situations involving the child, grifters and Jean precede the killing of Doré and the placing of Gloria in the home. His threats to kill Doré having fastened suspicion on him, Norton, anxious to get him out of the way, kidnaps the child as a sure way of bringing Steve to his hideout. But Steve has tipped off Mortimer and Jean as to where he is going. They in turn notify the police. Following a roaring gun battle in which the mugs are wiped out, Steve and Jean, married, adopt Gloria, and with Mortimer as chief cook and bottle washer open up a roadside hot dog stand in the beautiful country they always have promised the child.

Although there is much in this picture in both story and personal value and readily lends itself to business stimulating exploitation, the teaser value of the title in its relation to the introduction of a new face looms as one of the most compelling features.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Wings Over Mt. Everest

Thrilling

A thrilling adventure in the air and the motion picture is this camera record of the notable flight of last year when a group of British experts, in science and the airplane, flew over the Himalaya Mountains of Asia in two planes, and finally, garbed like monsters in oxygen tanks and flying suits, they soared over Mt. Everest, the highest peak in the world, a height never before reached by man despite many attempts on foot. Piecing together fragments of the gigantic aerial picture which was taken of the entire flight, this makes a momentous camera record. But perhaps as much as anything else responsible for the strength of the short subject is the splendid job of narration handled by the ace of Fox Movietone News, Lowell Thomas. He puts life and drama and thrill into the subject over and above that inherent in the picture itself. An excellent subject which should be worth special exhibitor attention.—Running time, 22 minutes.

Thicker Than Water

Fine Comedy

One of the last short comedies to be made by Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy before they begin feature production, this is at the same time one of the best they have made. With several of their antics new to their audience, and supported by Daphne Pollard and James Finlayson, both amusing, the two are entertaining, partly by reason of a good deal of comedy in dialogue and situation. Hardy is Miss Pollard's husband, Laurel their boarder. When Hardy tries to assert himself, spending the family joint account money in the bank, everything goes wrong, most of it happening to Hardy, with Laurel's "able" assistance. A good comedy.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Dame Shy

Entertaining

There is lively and tuneful entertainment in this comedy subject, featuring Buster West and Tom Patricola, as the two impossible gobs, with a hankering for the company of the girls, an insatiable good humor and an amazing ability to do tricks with their feet in eccentric dances all their own, especially West. The boys arrive with the fleet, in the brig, play a trick on the tough petty officer who landed them there, and are ordered to stay aboard. But they have a date, and go anyway—to the Daffyland cafe, where Johnny Johnson and his orchestra are playing. They "meet" the officer, steal his and his pal's girls and land in the brig again, after exhibiting their amusing and lively stepping skill. An entertaining comedy number.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Magic of Music

Tuneful

Tuneful and entertaining is this orchestra number, in which is featured Dick Himber and his band. Guest at a party, Himber entertains with sleight-of-hand, and finally at the request of another guest, he conjures up his musicians, seen in miniature on a table top, and they play for the assembled group, while various specialists, with the orchestra for accompaniment, dance and sing. The subject on the whole is generally entertaining.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Light Fantastic

Fair Comedy

There are a number of laugh-provoking moments in this comedy, featuring Ernest Truex, diminutive comedian. This time he seeks to overcome the greatest obstacle to complete happiness with his wife—his inability to dance. A dentist, he makes a bargain with a young and attractive woman. He will fix her teeth if she will teach him to dance. The arrangement runs into difficulty with the woman's jealous—and large—husband, while Truex's wife is herself a bit suspicious. Complications come thick and fast both in his office and his home when he tries to take his lessons. Eventually everything comes out all right when he proves to his wife that he can dance the tango.—Running time, 18 minutes.

A Language All My Own

(Paramount)

Fair

A fair Betty Boop cartoon number, in which Betty, stage entertainer, sings her own special song, which has to do with her last name to a large extent. She sings it in the United States, hops into her airplane and rushes off to Japan, where she is royally greeted and sings her song again, to an enthusiastic Japanese audience. Fairly entertaining.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Perfect Tribute

(MGM)

Excellent

Recounting a famous story about Abraham Lincoln and his Gettysburg Address, this subject features Charles (Chic) Sale in the role of Lincoln, and his portrayal is one which should bring unequivocal audience appreciation. The incident on the train en route to Gettysburg, when Lincoln wrote his speech on a scrap of paper, his keen disappointment when his audience failed to applaud his speech as they did that of Evarts, and his learning, on a visit to a southern soldier in a Washington hospital, that the silence of his hearers at the conclusion of his address was "the perfect tribute," are pictured in striking fashion. Told in a manner which is moving, dramatic and completely human, the subject should be billed equally with any feature by any exhibitor.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Historic Mexico City

(FitzPatrick-MGM)

Excellent

Another excellent number of the FitzPatrick Travel Talks series, and done in Technicolor this pictorially, and most favorably, tells of Mexico City, recounts something of its interesting history, and goes into the immediately surrounding country for a glimpse of the countryside. The traditional and exciting bull fight is seen, a few of the finest pieces of architecture, and something of the types of people inhabiting the Mexican capital. The color adds immeasurably to the subject as a whole, and the short is worthy of exhibitor attention.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Jungle Waters

Exciting

There is a thrill and excitement in this number of the Grantland Rice Sportlights series, picturing the highly novel manner in which Ross Allen earns his living. In the Florida swamps he captures, single and bare-handed, snakes, turtles, alligators, both young and adult, and other inhabitants of the water. An amazing swimmer, able to swim under water almost with the ease and power of the animals he captures, he goes out in his canoe on his daily rounds. There is a real thrill in his successful final tussle with an alligator, which follows a fight to death between two of the great beasts.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Basketball Technique

(MGM)

Good

One of the MGM Sports Parade group, this has entertaining accompanying explanatory dialogue by Pete Smith and pictures what there really can be to the much-played game of basketball. That it takes skill of the highest order, team work of the best, and plenty of speed, strength and marksmanship, is amply demonstrated. With star players from U.C.L.A., Fordham and Iowa State as the expert demonstrators, the subject should have appeal for all men and boys, and some women, who should be interested in a display of unquestioned skill.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Stop That Noise

Average

An average, and reasonably enertaining cartoon of the Betty Boop group, in which our little heroine, a city dweller, becomes fed up with the combined noise of the elevated, street traffic and neighboring steel workers at their riveting. She goes to the "peaceful" country, but when first the ducks, then the bees and mosquitos and cows make themselves heard—and felt—she is only too glad to return hurriedly to the peace and "quiet" of her city apartment.—Running time 7 minutes.

STUDIOS TURN TO HISTORY FOR THRILLERS
LOCATION TROUPE FINDS PLENTY OF DRAMA
PRICE "WAR" BEGUN IN DOWNTOWN LOS ANGELES
EIGHT PICTURES START, ONLY SEVEN FINISHED

Following the ban on gangster films, studios were hard put to find a substitute background of equal color, speed and excitement. The G-Man cycle did nobly to fill the gap, but the very fact that very nearly all studios greeted the new background with wild enthusiasm, quickly made activities of the Government men a somewhat twice-told tale.

Now a new movement is underway. Studios are searching far afield for action tales with colorful backgrounds, and with emphasis upon bad men made more or less safe from censors by the veil of centuries.

MGM is making "The Robin Hood of El Dorado," rousing tale of the bandit Murietta; "Mutiny on the Bounty," "A Tale of Two Cities" and "China Seas." Bad men are swarming all over the United Artists lot for Sam Goldwyn's "Barbary Coast." Warner has "Captain Blood," a dashing tale of pirates, as well as "La Fitte, the Pirate." High adventure also rules "Anthony Adverse," "The Skipper of the Ispahan," "The Charge of the Light Brigade," "Legionaire," "Frisco Kid," tale of early San Francisco, and Victor Hugo's "Ninety Three," which deals with the days just before the French Revolution.

RKO-Radio, having just completed "She," soon will release "The Three Musketeers" and "The Last Days of Pompeii," all of which combine plenty of skullduggery with romance. Reliance will release "The Last of the Mohicans" through United Artists. Walter Wanger has plenty of villains in "Clipper Ship."

Universal is remaking "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "The Phantom of the Opera," and has "East of Java" in addition to the usual list of shudder films headed by "The Hang Over Murders."

Paramount has bad men to burn in "Rose of the Rancho."

Fox has "Dante's Inferno," with double dealing and disaster running all the way through. There is some handsome villainy in "The Farmer Takes a Wife" and in "Way Down East," and pleasing tension is promised for "Ramona," now scheduled as one of the big features of Twentieth Century-Fox. "Ivanhoe" will combine spectacle with exploits no screen gangster could get away with, but exploits no censor board would think of banning as unfit fare for the youth of 1935.

Experiences of the company which made "Stormy" for Universal on location in Arizona are probably as dramatic as the picture itself will be when it reaches the screen.

The troupe journeyed into the desert 104 miles back of Flagstaff, the nearest railroad station. They headquartered at Tuber City, which is the Government trading post in the Hopi reservation.

During the three weeks on location, they suffered some of the handicaps and privations which the pioneers endured. On three different days their water truck broke down while traveling the 20 miles which separated the working company from headquarters. With the mercury at around 130 degrees, and no shade, tongues swelled and throats parched. Later came cloudbursts which left trucks and cars stalled in mud. Then the sun came out, hotter than ever.

Several cases of sunstroke were reported, but no serious illness overtook any of the company, which included, besides Director Louis Friedlander, Noah Beery, Jr., Fred Kohler, J. Farrell Macdonald, Gene Rogers and Raymond Hatton.

Sidney R. Kent cleared up business in connection with the newly formed Twentieth Century-Fox organization and planed out for New York. . . . With Mr. Kent's departure, the future status of Jesse L. Lasky at that studio continued to remain an unknown quantity. . . . A new labor organization is being formed in Hollywood under the name of National Association of American Employees. According to reports the body will fight the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. The organization is soliciting members from various studio crafts. . . . A price slashing "war" is in swing in Downtown Los Angeles. Three houses dropped from 25 cent admissions to 15 following the issuing of 10 cent service charge passes by the Million Dollar. The war is limited to subsequent run houses. . . . Larry Kent, brother of Sidney R., has joined Fox West Coast as assistant to Charles Skouras. Kent fills the post vacated some time ago by Reeves Espy. . . . Darryl Zanuck, sitting firmly in the 20th Century-Fox saddle, has begun a thorough reorganization of personnel. Several story properties have been indefinitely shelved and shifts in the various departments are taking place each day. . . . Fifty writers have been added to the membership roster of the Screen Writers' Guild, bringing the total to 789. . . . Bill Pine, Paramount publicity and advertising head on the West Coast, planed to Manhattan for home office conferences. . . . High volume sound came up for discussion at a meeting of technicians, producers and other branches of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Addresses were delivered by M. A. Lightman, Memphis exhibitor, Director Victor Schertzinger and Douglas Shearer of MGM.

Production Activity Slackens

Necessity of catching up with itself caused a temporary slackening of production activity in the past week. With stage space at a premium, and producers finding it extremely difficult to arrange supporting player assignments, the number of new pictures going into work took a noticeable drop, as did the number of those actually in production. For the first time in several weeks, as eight pictures were completed and but seven started, finished work ran ahead of newly started production.

Universal, with three, was the only company to start more than one picture. First to start, "Hangover Murders" will present Sally Eilers, Robert Young, Reginald Denny, Edward Arnold, Frank Lawton, Gregory Ratoff, Robert Armstrong, Jack LaRue, Arthur Treacher, Beulah Bondi and Edward Brophy. James Whale is directing. With "Offside" as the title, Universal's annual football picture got underway. It will feature a number of noted football players. The picture names included are Charles Farrell, June Martell, Andy Devine, Phyllis Fraser, J. Farrell MacDonald, Eddie Nugent and Murray Kinnel. Hamilton MacFadden is directing. The third picture, "Three Kids and a Queen," will present May Robson and Frankie Darro in the principal roles. Edward Ludwig is directing.

At MGM "In the Bag" started. With Charles Reisner directing, the present cast lists Jack Benny, Stuart Erwin, Una Merkel, Mary Carlisle and Harvey Stephens.

Paramount's new activity is the long waited Harold Lloyd picture, "The Milky Way." The supporting cast includes Adolphe Menjou, William Frawley, Ida Lupino, Roscoe Karns, William Gargan, Brian Donlevy, Lionel Stander and Sally Blane. Leo McCarey is directing.

"Freckles," a Gene Stratton Porter story, went into work at Radio. The cast is made up of Carol Stone, Virginia Weidler, Addison Richards, Lumsden Hare, James Bush and Richard Alexander. Direction is by Edward Killy and William Hamilton.

Work began at Warner on "Lady of the Lucky Legs," a murder mystery. Warren William is starred, the support consisting of Patricia Ellis, Lyle Talbot, Verree Teasdale, Peggy Shannon, Porter Hall, Allen Jenkins and Olin Howard. Archie Mayo is directing.

Two Finish Pair Each

Two companies, Radio and Warner, each finished two pictures. Seemingly the more important of the Radio pair is "The Last Days of Pompeii." In this, which Ernest B. Schoedsack directed, are seen Preston Foster, Alan Hale, Basil Rathbone, Louis Calherne, John Wood, Dorothy Wilson, David Holt, Wyrley Birch, Gloria Shea, Frank Conray, William V. Mong and Murray Kinnell. Also transferred to the cutting room was "Powder Smoke Range," a western. It presents Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson, Bob Steele, Tom Tyler, Guinn Williams, Boots Mallory, Sam Hardy and Ray Mayer. Wallace Fox directed.

Warners' completed pair are "From This Dark Stairway" and "Living Up to Lizzie." In the first, directed by Frank McDonald, will be seen Lynn Aker, Ricardo Cortez, Frank Reicher, Mary Treen, Mary Astor, Robert Strange, Anita Kerry, John Eldredge, Johnny Arthur, Gordon Ellitt and Phillip Reed. The second features Warren Hull, Margaret Lindsay, Ruth Donnelly, Anita Louise, Frank Albertson, Ronnie Cosby, Arthur Treacher and Lillian Kemble Cooper. Arthur G. Collins directed.

Fox completed "The Gay Deception." It presents Francis Lederer, Frances Dee, Benita Hume, Alan Mowbray, Lennox Pawle, Akim Tamiroff, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Richard Carle, Paul Hurst, Robert Creig, Luis Alberni and Lionel Stander. William Wyler directed.

At MGM shooting finished on "Glitter." Joan Crawford and Brian Aherne have the leads, with Frank Morgan, Eric Blore, Arthur Treacher, Aline MacMahon, Jessie Ralph, Fred Keating, Henry Kolker, Frank Shields, Hilda Vaugh, Vince Barnett, Edward Brophy and Marion Clayton in support. W. S. Van Dyke directed.

Last of the finished pictures is Goldwyn's "Dark Angel." The cast includes Fredric March, Herbert Marshall, Merle Oberon, Janet Beecher, John Halliday, Claude Allister, Henrietta Grossman, George Breakstone, Olaf Hytten and Holmes Herbert. Sydney Franklin directed.

THE GAY DECEPTION

Fox

A smart, swanky comedy romance, this seems to be spun out of the materials in story value and personnel that make for intriguing entertainment and peppy showmanship. It's the story of a girl who suddenly wins a lot of money and is anxious for a fling without knowing just how to go about it. Established in a ritzy hotel, nobody gives her a tumble until the bellboy appears, and then comes the reason for the title.

Francis Lederer, last seen in "Pursuit of Happiness" and "Romance in Manhattan," and Frances Dee, currently in "Becky Sharp," are cast in the leading roles. The character of parts assigned to both is of the type in which they have demonstrated their best screen value. Support includes Benita Hume, who has appeared recently in several British productions; Alan Mowbray; Lennox Pawle, seen in "Copperfield;" Akim Tamiroff, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Richard Carle, Luis Alberni, currently in "Love Me Forever," Robert Greig, Paul Hurst, Barbara Freitchie, Lenita Lane and Lionel Stander, soon to be seen in an attention-creating role in "We're in the Money."

The production is an original screen play by Stephen Avery and Don Hartman, Avery being credited with the adaptation of Lederer's "Pursuit of Happiness;" Hartman, the author of "Romance in Manhattan." Direction is by William Wyler, last credited with "The Good Fairy."

Brilliant settings and costumings suggest a line of exploitation which, in stressing production values, should be of additional worth in stimulating interest in the story. From a name value point of view, Lederer's popularity among the women should not be overlooked, nor should the prestige that has accrued to him as a result of his two most recent previous pictures.

DR. SOCRATES

If there were nothing else in this production, its star, player, author and director credits should intrigue showmanship interest. Originally authored by W. R. Burnett, whose "Little Caesar" inaugurated the gangster vogue, it appeared in Saturday Evening Post. Gangster in motive, it deals with that entertainment quality in a unique and topical way—a physician is forced to minister to wounded thugs, but finally, to the tune of a roar gun battle, hands them over to the G-men.

It features the big three of "Black Fury"—Paul Muni, the supergangster of "Scarface" and the dramatic star of "I'm a Fugitive" and "Bordertown," Ann Dvorak and Barton MacLane. The supporting cast is composed of both familiar and not very well known names, Robert Barrat, Grace Stafford, Mayo Methot, Raymond Brown, Helen Lowell, Ralph Remley, Carl Stockdale, John Kelly, Hal K. Dawson, John Eldredge and Samuel Hinds. The picture is being directed by William Dieterle, who in addition to his many Warner credits was also director of the forthcoming "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The story, in which are combined all the elements of previous productions which have established Muni in the vanguard of his type character actor, is a meaty, action-packed melodrama. Undoubtedly, through the medium of its prior publication, many patrons have read it or are familiar with it. Yet, while being of the fashion hinted, it is also a deep human interest yarn, as its action and development continually focus attention on the lead player, in a manner calculated to stir general sympathy. Made the victim of intolerance, fear and suspicion, he puts in a novel twist to the G-man theme that should result in comedy and that should provide exhibitors with a fresh stimulus to sell a star and type of entertainment in aggressive manner.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND

Paramount

By whatever more dignified or less hackneyed classification in which modern producers seek to establish them, this type of picture is still the good old-fashioned western that continuing legions of theatre goers adequately demonstrate they appreciate. "Wanderer of the Wasteland" is one of the best of the works of that outstanding writer of outdoor adventure, Zane Grey. The title is fully explanatory. It's a story of a wanderer of the desert, a young man, who, believing that he has killed his brother, flies to bad land havens. An outlaw, then a scourge of outlaws, in love with a girl he met years previously, befriended by an old prospector, holder of the secret of a fabulously wealthy hidden mine, love dictates that he give himself up. But a thrilling gun battle, in which the girl and boy fight back to back to save the prospector, intervenes before the boy learns he is not guilty of any crime.

This screen play is by Stuart Anthony, who has been associated with many of the recent Charlie Chan pictures, and direction is by Otho Lovering.

Dean Jagger and Gail Patrick, seen often in Paramount Pictures, have the leading roles. The supporting cast includes Edward Ellis; Benny Baker, noted stage and radio personality; Buster Crabbe, Trixie Friganza, Monte Blue and Fuzzy Knight in the featured parts. Other players are Charles Waldron, Anna Q. Nilsson, Tammany Young, Alfred Delcambre and Pat O'Malley.

Lending itself readily, in production values, story content and personnel, to the type of exploitation making for western popularity, the type of accompanying showmanship should not be difficult to apply.

TWO BLACK SHEEP

Republic

Strength of cast names and the manner in which this title explains the character of the story assume a more than usual importance in exploiting this picture. It actually is the story of two black sheep as that term is commonly employed. Based on a published story by Warwick Deeping for which the screen play was prepared by Jefferson Parker, it deals with a human interest premise. The man, an ex-convict, normal but sensitive, embittered by the rigid disregard with which his onetime associates greet him, decides to start life anew in southern France. There, through a chance meeting with the child daughter of a man-crazy, high flying woman, he finds romance with a nursemaid. But as the child's nurse is jailed for framed-up theft and the mother dies, the man exerts his efforts towards making her prison stay as bearable as possible, meantime pointing out that there is happiness ahead for the trio.

Otto Kruger will be seen in the leading role and Martha Sleeper as the girl with whom he falls in love. Minna Gombel is the fast living employer and Ferdinand Munier her aged gay cavalier companion. Cora Sue Collins is the child. Supporting roles are filled by Fred Walton, Robert Warwick, William P. Carlton, Margaret Seddon and Harold Nelson.

The picture is being directed by Arthur Lubin, recently credited with "A Successful Failure." As effort is being made to capitalize upon story quality, it appears to be the kind of picture that will best be sold through smartly presented advertising and publicity and comparatively little attention to ballyhoo other than as suggested by the title.

KING SOLOMON OF BROADWAY

Universal

In content this is a comedy drama, music and dance tinged story of dangerous life on New York's colorful Great White Way. It's a story of a night club-dance palace operator who pledged his establishment even though a vicious killing gangster owns it; of an exotic, voluptuous night club queen; a society girl, who, anxious for the thrill of life, takes her fun and romance where she can find it; a band leader who is a singing dancing whizz, and a decrepit old bag of bones who suddenly metamorphoses into a man of action.

The yarn is an original by Albert J. Cohen and Robert T. Shannon, with screen play by Harry Clork and Doris Malloy, a group of writers who have teamed on several popular pictures. Direction is by Alan Crosland, recently credited with "Mr. Dynamite" and "Lady Tubbs."

In the title role, which is of unusual exploitation value inasmuch as the lead character is confronted with several situations that would have tried the judgment of the original Solomon, Edmund Lowe will be seen. He is the center of most of the dramatic and comic action. The support includes several veteran and a few newer players. Dorothy Page, noted radio broadcast figure and seen in "Manhattan Moon," plays the night club queen role, with Pinky Tomlin as the singing, dancing, mysterious, contest winning master of ceremonies. Louise Henry, currently in "In Old Kentucky" with Will Rogers, plays the part of the society girl, and Charles Grapewin is the old fellow whose longing for the thrill and excitement of youth is the man of the hour. Edward Pawley, last in "G-Men," is the murderous gangster, and Bradley Page, Arthur Vinton and Clyde Dilson are the gamblers to whom Lowe pledges Pawley's property.

Player Changes Name

Kay Linaker, Warner contract player, formerly on the stage, has changed her name for screen purposes to Lynn Acker.

There may be High Fidelity in the film, but unless the sound head can pick it off without loss, distortion or flutter, High Fidelity might as well not be there at all.

To enable you to give your audiences everything that is in the sound record, the RCA Photophone Sound Head uses a number of novel mechanical and optical devices. These carry the film past the scanning light beam at the most constant speed possible, to keep the tone from wavering. They maintain the film in a constant plane, because if it moves out of that plane by as much as four thousandths of an inch, the high notes are weakened or cut off, robbing the sound of its faithfulness. They eliminate any pull of sprocket teeth on the film as it flows past the beam, because otherwise the teeth would set up a flutter that would be objectionable.

Other design features of this perfect sound head are: Easy installation; long life; convenient to operate and maintain; entirely self-contained.

And remember that every RCA Photophone installation is sold outright, on easy terms, and is accompanied by a maintenance and emergency service that is swift, skilled, and inexpensive.

HIGH FIDELITY FEATURES

1. Unique, simple Rotary Stabilizer, entirely enclosed, needing no adjustments, keeps film at constant speed past scanning beam by governing speed of drum over which film passes.
2. The same drum also maintains the film accurately in the focus of the light beam. What could be simpler? No springs or complicated film-scratching gadgets.
3. Every shaft runs on ball bearings. This is exclusive with RCA Photophone. Friction on sprocket teeth is minimized, sprockets last longer, bearings last indefinitely. Inferior, cheaper plain bearings would mean expensive repairs, interrupted service.
4. Motor is built-in and drives direct without noisy chains or slipping belts. It is located in front, out of way of projectionist.

SOUND SENSE

People will not, as a rule, go far out of their way to show their preference for a theatre. But they will go to a theatre whose sound they like best, if other factors are more or less equal. That is why RCA Photophone High Fidelity equipment makes a difference at the box office.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 276 (one of a special group on sound).—(A) Suppose during the operation of the sound equipment, a "motor boating" noise suddenly developed. Where would you first look for its cause, and what remedy would you apply? (B) Suppose during a changeover the fader switch controlling a fader relay is depressed, and no sound is obtained from the incoming projector. Where is the first place to look for the trouble? What usually can be done in such an emergency to keep the show running?

Answer to Question No. 270

Bluebook School Question No. 270 was: (A) What care should be given the sound reproducing (exciter lamp) optical system? (B) What effect will a dirty sound gate mechanism and aperture have on reproduced sound? (C) How often should the sound gate aperture, film track, etc., be cleaned? What means should be employed in its cleaning?

The engineers who made out this question, say.

"(A) Extreme care should be exercised not to shift the position of the optical system, since any such shift would alter the focus of the light beam on the film sound track. Both the rear condenser lens and the objective at the front end of the optical assembly should be thoroughly cleaned before the beginning of the run each day, using a soft, lint-free cloth. Kleenex paper may also be used for this purpose.

"(B) If dirt be permitted to collect in the sound gate, flutter and raspiness will be noticeable in the sound projected by the speakers. Such accumulation may also result in low volume, or even complete loss of sound.

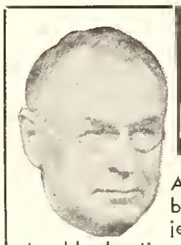
"(C) The sound gate should preferably be wiped out after projecting each reel. Only a soft, dry cloth free of all lint should be used for this purpose. If there be any deposit of emulsion or dirt that cannot be thus removed, some Carbona fluid may be applied to loosen the material. Sharp instruments must under no circumstances be employed to scrape such deposits off, as they may and probably will scratch and roughen the surface of the metal, whereupon tendency to accumulate such deposits will be increased."

The following projectionists gave satisfactory answers: S. Evans and C. Rau; C. Oldham; D. Danielson; H. Edwards; G. E. Doe; H. Van Vaulkenburg; R. V. Arntson; J. Wentworth; J. G. Paulsen; B. De Vietti; B. Doe; F. H. S. and P. Dalbey; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; J. R. Hickman, Jr., M. and J. DeVoy; L. Danielson; G. N. Guidotti and F. L. Saylor; P. Itt; J. Johnson and E. Hodson; B. L. Korda and R. D. Jackson; L. Grant and R. Geddings; B. H. Thaller and S. Spooner; R. Carmody, P. L. Stone and J. Stone; B. H. Sanders, J. Jensen, K. Y. Spencer and D. L. Lode; H. Hughes and E. Mantol; N. H. Porter and G. Hancock; D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; F. H. and L. Klar; F. Ferguson and D. Lally; P. L. Curley, T. Turk; L. W. Hess, B. B. Bauer and R. Colman; S. T. and M. Gibson; R. and K. Wells; T. N. Onby, D. Howard and J. Jurts; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; J. H. Farnsworth; H. K. Adams; P. and L. Felt; L. R. Doty; H. B. Otterman; O. Allbright; D. L. Sinklow; C. Mellinger and H. Pitchkey; T. Emmerson; N. U. Harrington; W. H. Allen, C. Glass and T. H. Barker; S. N. Rudolph.

Answering section A, H. Edwards says, "The exciter lamp optical system should be perfectly clean, including the lamp bulb itself, the outer surfaces of both front and rear lenses of the tube, all parts of the sound gate and its aperture, and the photocell.

"Of course the sound gate is not a part of the optical system, strictly speaking, but its functions and those of the actual optical system are so closely connected that they are in effect one. All glass surfaces should be wiped clean with either Kleenex paper or a very soft perfectly clean cloth free from lint. This should be done each day before the starting of the first show. Bi-weekly in all day theatres, the glass surfaces of the lamp should be washed with soap and water and polished thoroughly. Each morning the exciter lamp globe should be examined for darkening of the interior surface of the glass and sagging of the filament; also, its connections should be inspected, as they must be perfect or trouble will result.

"The sound gate parts must be kept scrupulously free from dust and dirt and must be examined after each reel for possible deposits of matter on the polished surfaces of the film track, removing them, if found, with a wet cloth. A dirty sound gate aperture may cause (a) loss of volume, (b) loss of sound quality, (c) flutter, and (d) complete loss of sound (though this would seldom be the case). These parts must be examined after each reel is projected, the aperture wiped and any deposits removed from the film track."



F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

Evans and Rau say, "Care of sound reproducing optical system should be to see that the exciter lamp is in good condition, its filament not sagged and its bulb thoroughly clean both inside and out, and that it is properly adjusted in its holder so that the light is properly focused upon the slit. The lenses of the optical assembly must be kept clean and polished so that all light will pass through and focus properly on the film sound track. See to it that the system is properly adjusted and that the sound gate, including its aperture, is scrupulously clean and free from all dust, oil, dirt or deposits of emulsion; also that the photo-cell is clean and set properly in its socket."

(B) Danielson says, "Noisy sound, flutter, possible complete loss of sound, possible scratching of the sound track, loss of high frequencies, loss of volume, gray hair for the projectionist."

De Vietti says, "A dirty sound gate mechanism and aperture will reduce volume as well as impair quality of sound. It may also cause noisy sound and even cause loss of sound entirely if the aperture have sufficient dust or dirt lodged therein. A dirty sound gate, if the dirt consist of deposits of emulsion, may scratch the sound band."

(C) C. Oldham says, "The sound gate aperture, film track, etc., should be cleaned after each projection of a film. The film track should be examined for possible emulsion deposits. A cloth moistened with water will remove deposits without injury to the polished surfaces. A clean, lintless cloth will serve well to remove dust, etcetera."

J. G. Paulsen says, "The sound gate, aperture, etc., should be examined for cleanliness after each reel is projected. Small particles of broken celluloid, wax, etc., may be deposited very rapidly, particularly if old film is projected. If the print is new and considerable wax is being deposited, it is well to use a cloth slightly dampened with kerosene. [Don't know about that. What do you chaps think of the kerosene suggestion?—F. H. R.] A dry, soft lintless cloth will serve otherwise, but for the aperture itself ye old pipe cleaner is best."

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended July 27, 1935, from 100 theatres in 18 major cities of the country reached $806,400, a decrease of $27,507 from the total of the preceding week, ended July 20, 1935, when 99 theatres in 18 major cities aggregated $833,907.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Dubuque, Iowa

Dear Herald:

They located this town on the west side of the Mississippi river in order to be in Iowa. If they had located it on the east bank it would have been in Illinois, which would have made it much easier for the playboys of Chicago to deliver their spirits fermenti without having to cross the river, for it's a doggone wet river at any time of the year.

We are told that the Government is planning on dredging the river so the barges and summer pleasure boats can use it, both for business (should there be any) and pleasure. In other words, it is planned to enlarge the "Pork Barrel" to include St. Paul and Minneapolis, the same as to include Sioux City on the Missouri.

The "Pork Barrel" used to be located down in the lower Mississippi and along the bayous where the alligators and bullfrogs live, but the "Barrel" was not large enough to hold all the "Pork" so they are going to enlarge it, but when the dredges get as far as Minneapolis they better turn around and hurry back or the channel will be filled with silt and sand before they get home.

We are told that these enterprises are going to cost hundreds of millions, but then, "big figures don't mean a thing," and the nearest thing to this school-boy proposition that we know of is that "Shelterbelt" to "bring rain." You recall that Barnum said there was one born every minute. Barnum was a pretty good showman.

No Sense in It

We called at New Hampton, Iowa, to see our old friend Earl Potter and found him sick in bed. We never see any darn sense in an exhibitor getting sick, although the most of 'em do, but we are glad to report that Earl was not very sick, which caused us to wonder if there wasn't a certain amount of—indifference in him (we wouldn't want to say "laziness," for that might make him sore). Well, anyhow, we were sorry to find him sick and we hope he soon gets well, for it is our opinion that the town of New Hampton needs him at their popular playhouse, although we surmise that Mrs. Potter could fill the bill to the satisfaction of everybody. Well, we had a mighty nice visit with them, anyhow. Mrs. Potter is related to Mr. Bloomer, who was kidnaped over at Monroe, Wis., that time and who paid something like seventy-five thousand dollars for the privilege of walking back home. The walking would have to be awfully good if we paid that much. The trouble with these present-day kidnapers is that they are being influenced too much by these depressing times; they should be remunerated according to their services.

Don't ever come over into Iowa without visiting Mr. and Mrs. Palmer, who operate the theatre at Postville. If you do you have missed the best part of your trip. We never think of visiting northeast Iowa without calling on these two delightful folks, and we have Postville marked on our visiting list as one of the bright spots in our vagabond wanderings. They had us up to their home the other night and we had ice cream 'n' everything and our conversation drifted to the motion picture business and we agreed that pictures are getting better and better all the while and we both expressed our thanks to the "Legion of Decency." We spent a very delightful evening.

Crooners and the Itch

We saw a fellow leaning up against a telephone pole yesterday scratching his back and we said to him: "Brother, how many more years do you have to go," and he replied, "Only six," and we told him if he wanted a cure to go across the street to that cafe and hear a crooner singing "Dear heart, my love grows stronger every day" and if that didn't cure him to try fighting a bull.

Shullsburg, Wisconsin

We came over here to see this crazy Irishman who operates the best theatre in the southwestern part of the state. His name is Lee and he would get awfully sore if you called him a Norwegian, but we have met some mighty nice Norwegian folk at that. He claims to have been born at Cork during the "Donnybrook Fair" and has voted the same ticket ever since (we didn't doubt that, for he looks like it).

He is the guy who said we were probably a "Squaw Man" when we called on him once before. He said a lot of things and he is still alive, which proves that we are blessed with a lamb-like disposition. Our gentleness is only exceeded by the length of our profane vocabulary. We went to his show last night and we are still wondering where all the customers came from, as there were more people at his show than there are in the entire town. Tonight he is playing Shirley Temple in "The Little Colonel" and we'll bet he will have 'em hanging on the rafters. Lee is also a baker and we advised him to put sugar in his doughnuts instead of sand, as sand was hard on the stomachs, and he said, "Oh, that's nothing, if they can stand this moonshine we have around here they can stand a little sand." We'll betcha that Mrs. Maloney and Mrs. Flarity will both be at the show tonight (should little Patrick and Michael get over the mumps). This boy Lee is a mighty swell guy.

As we understand the law of Wisconsin, those who are dispensing that lifesaving fluid which is bringing "prosperity" to the state can't use the word "Saloon," so they have substituted the word "Tavern," and whenever one sees the word "Tavern" over a door he can rest assured that he will find "prosperity" within, in small or large doses, as he chooses. Wisconsin ought to be awfully prosperous.

We came through Monroe today, and you may not know it, but it is claimed by Monroe people that it is the capital of the brick and Swiss cheese industry of the world. Had they confined their claims to Green county, Wisconsin, the claim might have gone unchallenged. We have been through some cheese sections, especially out in western Oregon, where similar claims are made and where brick and Swiss cheese are considered legal tender for all debts, both public and private.

Cheese with Positive Convictions

In Monroe they have some limburger cheese that has positive convictions of its own. You can't look a limburger cheese in the face and tell it anything, and when they put a chunk of it out in the backyard the boys get the pitchforks and start cleaning out the barn.

Limburger is a mighty economical cheese if you know how to use it. We put a small piece of it in our driver's vest pocket and he hasn't been hungry for two weeks. Limburger cheese is what makes these badgers so "strong." You never hear of a Badger guessing about anything, not even football.

We are glad that Wisconsin is still a part of the Union. If she wasn't, then what would become of the Prohibition Party.

When we get up north in the pinery country we are going to look up a good location for that "Shelterbelt."

"Movie Sweepstakes" Plans Key Branch System

"Movie Sweepstakes," newest business stimulator offered to exhibitors by Movie Sweepstakes, Inc., recently formed with Al Young as president and Jack Goetz and Arthur Gottlieb as vice-presidents, has established offices in New York at 245 West 55th Street, and in Philadelphia and Boston, and plans a system of branches in all key distribution cities. Joseph Vergesslich is general sales manager and William E. Raynor eastern division manager.

The company originated "Movie Sweepstakes" and has served notice it will prosecute infringements of its copyright. The device consists of a horse race on the screen, the holders of the names of the winning horses winning a cash prize. It is designated as a weekly attraction, and is now being operated at a number of theatres, including the United Theatres circuit on Long Island, the Paramount, Staten Island, and the Oceana, Brighton Beach, N. Y.

To Handle Spanish Films

World distribution on "Aguilas de America," Spanish film recently produced in Mexico by Cultural S. A., will be handled by Criterion Films, headed by David Strong. He will also distribute "Un Hombre Peligroso," Spanish film produced in Hollywood by Richard C. Kahn. Sack Amusement Enterprises will handle western United States distribution.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Ambassador

RED BLOOD OF COURAGE: Kermit Maynard, Ann Sheridan—Good northern picture that is O. K. for Saturday. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Chesterfield

SHOT IN THE DARK, A: Charles Starrett, Marion Shilling—Pretty good mystery drama. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

EIGHT BELLS: Ann Sothern, Ralph Bellamy—This picture should have box office value, but they say it is too hot, even though our cooling system keeps the theatre comfortable for them. I believe this one actually lacks story value; while it is well done, well produced, well cast, but not good entertainment. —W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

LAW BEYOND THE RANGE: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—This pleased the usual complement of western fans. Played July 13.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Fay Wray, Victor Jory—Very good; one of May Robson's best. Good for Friday-Saturday. Running time, 69 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PARTY WIRE: Jean Arthur, Victor Jory—A very funny comedy drama. We played it on a double bill, but it is good enough to stand alone in any house, if you want a true-to-life story of a party wire in a country town. The acting by the whole cast was fine. Clean fun and lots of it.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

PARTY WIRE: Jean Arthur, Victor Jory—My patrons enjoyed this picture. I would call it good entertainment for the average small town, because it deals with small town "snoopers" and would-be-highbrows.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

SWELL HEAD: Wallace Ford, Barbara Kent—just a fair picture. Baseball season is on, so if you ever want to get the best from this picture, this is your angle.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

UNWELCOME STRANGER, THE: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—Just another picture and a waste of time. Columbia sure has some poor ones and some good ones. Played July 4-5.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

UNWELCOME STRANGER, THE: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—A splendid program picture; both stars fine and some extra good kid actors. A very fine interesting story, clean and entertaining. Play it and your patrons will O. K. this report. Played July 18. —Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

First National

BIG HEARTED HERBERT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee, Patricia Ellis—Very good comedy; makes a good program picture. Average business. Running time, 66 minutes. Played July 10.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni, Karen Morley—While it is a real good picture, still it lacks women interest and appeal and failed to draw.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni, Karen Morley—The poorest two-day gross on any picture in the history of this theatre. Yet it was a Warner special that failed to gross film rental. Had plenty of squawks on this. Hard to understand, no story, no nothing, in fact.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

1790 Broadway, New York

CASE OF THE CURIOUS BRIDE: Warren William—These murder stories are getting too numerous It seems that every time you look around, you can see a murder story coming your way. They are all right once in a while, but when you get them thrown at you from each company, right and left, you feel like throwing up both hands and hollering for help. For the lov'a Pete, lay off them for awhile.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

G MEN, THE: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—Brought out the men, but the women stayed home. Didn't do much on this for some reason or other, although the picture has plenty of appeal for men patrons.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

G MEN, THE: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—A great picture. Fine acting, interesting story. Gave one hundred per cent satisfaction. Based on facts and not overdrawn. Every actor at their best, Cagney, Lindsay, Armstrong, Dvorak and all the rest right on the job in this one. Played July 21-22.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

G MEN, THE: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—Right up to the minute entertainment. Chock-full of excitement with plenty of comedy relief. Just an A 1 picture, to A 1 business. Excellent entertainment.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler —Too long, draggy in spots. Folks here do not care for Jolson. And as for Keeler, she is okay if she sticks to dancing. Picture was fairly good all around; failed at the box office.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—Some fine songs in this one; plenty of comedy and romance. Josephine Hutchinson was not as beautiful as we expected, but has a way with her. Frank McHugh furnishes some good comedy. Played June 8.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

IN CALIENTE: Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien—A real good picture. Lots of action, laughs and good music.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA: Josephine Hutchinson. Pat O'Brien—Comments divided on this one. Personally, thought it about an average program picture that did average business. Picture too draggy in spots. Picture well cast. Okay for midweek.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Ginger Rogers—This picture drew very well for us even though it was old. Dick is always fine, the Four Mills Brothers are great. Ginger Rogers appealing. All our patrons spoke of the picture as very entertaining. Played June 1—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Fox

BLACK SHEEP: Edmund Lowe, Claire Trevor, Tom Brown, Adriene Ames—This was a very good picture. Should have had more ballyhoo, something on type of "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round." Don't pass this up. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT: Warner Oland, "Pat" Paterson—Good mystery picture to excellent business. This picture was run on a double feature with RKO's "The Nitwits," which, of course, drew well on a mid week run. It's a little hard to follow all the characters, but it gives good satisfaction to the Charlie Chan fans, and will make money.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

COWBOY MILLIONAIRE: George O'Brien—Just another western where George O'Brien turns out to be the hero of the day. Average business. Running time, seven reels. Played July 3-4.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

DARING YOUNG MAN, THE: James Dunn, Mae Clarke—Only average program fare for one day showing, or Bargain Nights. Fox has made the most pitiful pictures this year, as well as some of the best. Would be okay if exhibitor had fifty per cent elimination, but try to get it.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—The weakest of the recent Will Rogers pictures. Star is not as prominently cast as usual and plot is weak. However, it has Will Rogers as star so that means a head-on start in business! Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 7-9.—G. E. Lancaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Bill is always good and draws well. The only feature bad about it was Alison Skipworth. My people don't like her and can't understand her talk. Played July 17.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn—On the whole this pleased better than last year's "Scandals" and drew about the same, which wasn't much. I can't understand why these pictures do not have more popular appeal unless it is lack of a good story to hold them together.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. General patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Very good. Did a nice business for three days. Fox has the pictures for any town. They have more pictures that mean box office profit than all the rest of the producers.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans, Ralph Bellamy—Good week-end program picture based on an old mining town. Our heat wave doesn't do any picture justice.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—Pretty good program picture that did not draw very good at the box office. Running time, 71 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—Very good program picture. Excellent acting by the cast. Average business. Running time, seven reels. Played July 5-6.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LADIES LOVE DANGER: Gilbert Roland, Mona Barrie—Humorous comedy with many serious sided situations, well done. Very good program picture. Average business. Running time, eight reels. Played June 21-22.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—Excellent picture that pleased everyone. Played this to best business in months. Played July 8.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore, Bill Robinson—Excellent. We played this late, but did a very good business. Little Shirley Temple is great. She is not only the sweetest little star on the screen, she is a real actress. I hope Fox will continue to give her good stories and support. Running time, 81 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Started out with a bang, but dropped off sharply. No matter how good any star is she can't carry the whole picture, and Shirley was not given adequate support in this. Don't mistake me, it is good, but not near as good as "Little Colonel" or "Bright Eyes," and your box office will tell you so, just as mine did. Played July 9-11.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. General patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti Gallian—Phew! A worse than average program picture that failed to do any business whatsoever.

Might be okay for double bill.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti Gallian—A swell picture from every angle. Played to average business. Running time, eight reels. Played June 7-8.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti Gallian—Here we have Warner Baxter back in the type of role that won him great popularity and the type of role in which our audiences prefer him. However, the material with which he has to work is so mediocre that the results are disappointing. Beautiful outdoor photography and tuneful music. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 11-13.—G. E. Lancaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—Fine little program picture that did well at the box office. This made a little money for us. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MGM

AGE OF INDISCRETION: May Robson, Madge Evans—Good picture of its type. Well liked by those who saw it. Average business. Running time, eight reels. Played June 23-25.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

BABY FACE HARRINGTON: Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel—Here is a picture that has but very little appeal to the small town audience. Personally I enjoyed Charles Butterworth and his line of comedy, but the picture if not run will never be missed.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

FLAME WITHIN, THE: Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall—Very good. Well dramatized and excellent acting. Played to average business. Running time, eight reels. Played June 19-20.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—Excellent, that's the word, excellent. You have a picture here that is in a class by itself. It should make money in every situation.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—Very good from the standpoint of entertainment, but lacking in drawing power. Played to average business. Running time, 11 reels. Played June 9-11.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye, Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel—We thought this a very fine musical, and so did most of our customers. The music was especially beautiful. We played the record, "When I Grow Too Old to Dream" and "The Night is Young" for weeks before the picture and they helped to make the picture especially effective. Played June 9.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery—A good picture, humorous and dramatic situations that kept the house rolling in laughter from start to finish. Average business. Running time, nine reels. Played July 7-9.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONE NEW YORK NIGHT: Franchot Tone, Una Merkel, Conrad Nagel—Good comedy photodrama spiced with mystery and thrills. Very well done. Played to average business. Running time, seven reels. Played June 26-27.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

PUBLIC HERO NO. 1: Lionel Barrymore, Jean Arthur, Chester Morris—Very good picture concerning "G" men and, of course, the usual amount of shootings. Heard many favorable comments on this. Business poor due to extreme hot weather. Running time, 89 minutes. Played July 13.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

RECKLESS: Jean Harlow, William Powell—A very fine picture. Good story. The two stars are always good in any picture they are in. The whole cast was extra good. We did not do the business we should, but no fault of the picture. Played July 14-15.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greensville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SHADOW OF DOUBT: Ricardo Cortez, Virginia Bruce—A dandy programmer that we used on a double bill, but strong enough to stand alone for a week-end feature. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 16-17.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

TIMES SQUARE LADY: Robert Taylor, Virginia Bruce—A western country girl comes from Iowa to New York to make good and makes New Yorkers take notice. Very good entertainment with enough comedy and seriousness coupled together to make it one of the leading program pictures of the year. Average business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played May 31-June 1.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan—By far the best but business handicapped by excessively hot weather. Running time, 88 minutes. Played July 11-13.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

INDIANA AND NEBRASKA ADD CONTRIBUTORS

From Indiana and Nebraska come new contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week. They are:

G. E. Lancaster, Huntington and Jefferson theatres, Huntington, Ind.

A. H. Records, Majestic theatre, Hebron, Neb.

The first reports from these showmen appear in this issue.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan—Entertainment that zooms to the heavens on the wings of romance. One of the best air pictures run this year. Very good. Average business. Running time, nine reels. Played June 16-18.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes, Brian Aherne, Madge Evans—Was afraid our people wouldn't like this so well, but it had quite an appeal. The Scotch dialect did not hurt the story any, and the name of Helen Hayes drew them in. The only criticism I could make of the picture was that Brian Aherne did not have enough looks and magnetism. Played June 2.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Monogram

HONEYMOON LIMITED: Neil Hamilton, Irene Hervey—A very good program picture. Played on a double bill and gave good satisfaction. Played July 12-13.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—It was a fine book, a fine picture and they're still raving about this one. Played to average business. Running time, eight reels. Played July 14-16.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

RAINBOW VALLEY: John Wayne, Lucille Brown—Nice western and very good for towns that like them and go for them.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

Paramount

COLLEGE SCANDAL: Arline Judge, Kent Taylor—Paramount sure is packing a lot of mystery and thrills in their latest offering. It had the audience gasping when the final sequence appeared on the screen. Very good. Average business, Running time, eight reels. Played July 10-11.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL: Richard Barthelmess—Good picture and draws good and pleases and that is what counts. The title is against it but after they are in they will be pleased.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft—An exceptionally good picture. Thrills, mystery and comedy. Lacked drawing power. Running time, eight reels. Played June 5-6.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—Done a nice business on Mae. Did not go so hot. They don't have enough box office clickers. Played July 10-12.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—As West is always a drawing card, enough said. Played to above average business. Running time, eight reels. Played June 30-July 2.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—One of the best of its kind presented the fans this year. Played to average business. Running time, seven reels. Played July 12-13.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields, Joan Bennett—Bing might have pulled them in, but Fields gave them their money's worth. A number of people who said they had never cared for Fields before, liked him in this very much. We had very good business for three days.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. General patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: W. C. Fields, Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—Sunday opening to the biggest Sunday in months, and held up strong for four days. If you ask me, this is a perfect picture; the cast are all of them one hundred per cent and the story is by far the best in a long. long time, and the picture, what a picture! Give this your longest and best playing time.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ONCE IN A BLUE MOON: Jimmy Savo, Michael Dalmatoff—Of all pictures this takes the cake. It did not please even the kids. Don't play it. Better pay for it. Played July 8.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

PEOPLE WILL TALK: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—With Ruggles in the cast how could a picture be a flop? The fans are still raving about this picture. Played to average business. Running time, seven reels. Played June 14-15.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

PEOPLE WILL TALK: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—A domestic comedy drama of the family type that audiences enjoy because of the effective blending of fun in action and dialogue. Dean Jagger as the leading man registers with the audiences. People are asking when we will have him again. The story moves swiftly with many unique and novel twists. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 21-22.—G. E. Lancaster, Jefferson Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer—Had a good attendance for a Sunday. Some liked it, others panned it. Personally, I did like it. Why have such distressing pictures and so many nuts.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer—Another glorious role for the star who won the 1934 Academy Award for the best performance of the year. Well done and well liked by those who witnessed the grand performance of this glorious star on our screen. Played to average business. Running time, 84 minutes. Played June 2-4.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—Drew better than average Sunday business, but had nobody on Monday. I think people expected another "Bolero" and were disappointed. Played June 30-July 1.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. General patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts—We fell down on this most excellent comedy, largely because of the hot weather. To our notion, Charles Laughton's portrayal of "Colonel" Ruggles is a masterpiece. Played July 17-18.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie—The fans went wild over this one, a picture which could honestly be called four shows in one, a musical, a mystery, a gang and a straight drama play. Played to average business. Running time, eight reels. Played June 12-13.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

CIMARRON: Richard Dix, Irene Dunne, Estelle Taylor, Edna May Oliver—This was a big success in its day, but as a reissue it is the bunk. The film we got was in poor shape. Sound track scratched and noisy and parts of the picture were evidently filmed without sound as the aperture was not standard. Taking everything into consideration, I do not believe it is worthwhile playing these old reissues, no matter how good they were in their day. Did just fair business here. Running time, 115 minutes. Played July 17.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Good picture, but not the best Wheeler-Woolsey. This team has a good following here and the fans were not disappointed. Quite thrilling in spots, due to murder mystery. No one can kick on these Wheeler-Woolsey pictures.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Excellent satisfaction to normal business. We would have done better had it not been for excessively hot weather. Playd July 10-11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—Ginger Rogers goes better with Astaire. Very average business. RKO has better ones than this.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—Good picture but a flop at the box office. I guess the hot weather was a good deal to blame. Running time, 90 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STRANGERS ALL: May Robson, Preston Foster—We played this on a Saturday night and many of our fans remained away. The show is okay, but better on any night than Saturday. Played July 6.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

VILLAGE TALE: Randolph Scott, Kay Johnson—This is a splendid program picture. Very interesting story and well acted by the stars and whole cast. Played on a double bill, but it would have stood alone and satisfied.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

VILLAGE TALE: Randolph Scott, Kay Johnson—The biggest flop we have had for a long time. This did not give satisfaction. Running time, 80 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

AFFAIRS OF CELLINI, THE: Constance Bennett, Fredric March, Frank Morgan, Fay Wray—Not so hot. This type of a picture never draws in a small town. Running time, 83 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CLIVE OF INDIA: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young, Colin Clive—Good picture for certain classes. Did only fair business; think hot weather affecting us.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

FOLIES BERGERE: Maurice Chevalier, Merle Oberon, Ann Sothern—Another good picture, well made and produced. Full of good entertainment, plus beautiful sets, smart costumes, wonderful music, etc. It's a really high class picture, but just did an average business. We lost money on the run.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

Universal

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN: Boris Karloff—Get them in on the opening day or you lose 'em. Opened strong but what a flop the second and third days. Will get by on short run.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

NIGHT LIFE OF THE GODS: Alan Mowbray, Irene Ware, Peggy Shannon—Say, this is a big picture and very nutty. I think it is over my head. One of the most impossible stories I have ever seen filmed. People laughed at it, and as I had another good picture with it the show gave satisfaction. You play it and tell me what the company was thinking about when they made it. The acting was fine. Played July 19-20.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

STONE OF SILVER CREEK: Buck Jones, Noel Francis—Pretty good western. It seems to me as if the Buck Jones westerns are getting poorer. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STONE OF SILVER CREEK: Buck Jones, Noel Francis—This is an extra good western picture, interesting story and good cast and the star is always good.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—Joe Brown's best for a long time. Hokum, grand comedy, enough heart interest, make this a bell ringer for any box office. Running time, 71 minutes. Played July 19-20.—G. E. Lancaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

STRANDED: Kay Francis, George Brent—Played this on a double bill and was okay. About average program fare but Kay Francis no panic at the box office. Just another of the hundreds of pictures for that "midweek spot."—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

LOST CITY, THE (Regal): William Boyd, Claudia Dell—Not so good. Advertised as a hundred years ahead of its time. After you see the picture you will find that today we at least have one-third of the numerous electrical concoctions that we now are actually using. Average business. Running time, eight reels. Played June 28-29.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS SERIES: Quite interesting. P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

UNCIVIL WARRIORS: 3 Stooges: Will get by okay in small towns. Plenty silly but seemed to get quite a few laughs.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan.

Educational

DOG SHOW, THE: Paul Terry-Toons—Pretty good. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FLYING OIL: Paul Terry-Toon—Farmer Alfalfa and the animals use a flying oil on the feet with most amusing results. It is extra good. Running time, 6 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. General patronage.

MODERN RED RIDING HOOD, A: Paul Terry-Toon—Be sure to put this on when you know you'll have lots of children. They will adore it. We used it with "Our Little Girl."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. General patronage.

OPERA NIGHT: Paul Terry-Toons—Pretty good cartoon comedy. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

OLD CAMP GROUND, THE: Song Hit Stories Series—Good song reel. Running time, 9 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SOUTH POLE OR BUST: Paul Terry-Toons—Good. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TAMING THE WILD: Treasure Chest Series—A fairly good filler. Running time, 1 reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

TARS AND STRIPES: Buster Keaton—Not much comedy, but the background of a naval station lends lots of "atmosphere" and puts it over. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. General patronage.

WHAT A NIGHT: Paul Terry-Toons Series—Good. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MGM

ANNIVERSARY TROUBLE: Our Gang—Pleased everyone. We like to use these "Gang" comedies on Saturday night, but find that all the kids and a lot of grown-ups always stay to see them the second time. If we do need the seats this is inconvenient, yet I can't blame folks for I usually watch Spanky the second time myself. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. General patronage.

DONKEY BASEBALL: Oddities Series—Good filler.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

GYPSY NIGHT: Musical Revues Series—Just a waste of time. "Filler" describes it completely.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MEMORIES AND MELODIES: Musical Revues—It's very seldom that I mention a short subject, but here is one I feel I must recommend to my exhibitor friends. In my humble opinion it's the best two-reeler produced this year. When you want to arrange a big program for a special occasion, just date this subject, and bill it above your feature. It has the most beautiful music, songs, color, etc., produced this year. You have a real short subject; step on it. —S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

OKAY TOOTS: Charley Chase—Keep this off top spot; only a few chuckles. Running time, 2 reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

TALE OF THE VIENNA WOODS: Happy Harmonies Series—One of the best cartoons we have ever shown. All in color. A deer and fawn have adventures in the woods. These cartoons are beautiful and one could see them over many times without tiring. —I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BABY BE GOOD: Betty Boop Cartoon—All right. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ALIBI BYE BYE: Clark & McCullough Series Just very ordinary. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. General patronage.

PARROTVILLE OLD FOLKS: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PICNIC PANIC: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Good cartoon. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

GOLDEN TOUCH, THE: Silly Symphonies—Very clever.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

GRASSHOPPER AND THE ANT, THE: Silly Symphony Series—These Silly Symphonies are hard to beat. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Vitaphone

BUDDY THE DENTIST: Looney Tunes—A good cartoon.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

HIS FIRST FLAME: Shemp Howard, Daphne Pollard—A poor comedy; the characters overact the slapstick part. The best part was a fire thrill.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

ONCE OVER LIGHTLY: Roscoe Ates—Very unfunny. Roscoe Ates stutters in a barber shop and a second barber has the hiccups, and about cuts his customers' throats. The thing ends up with a poker game. Never heard a single laugh.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

SPRINGTIME IN HOLLAND: Broadway Brevities Series 1934-35—Not five minutes of entertainment in this one. Warners have slipped badly on this series within the past few months. Played this on Sunday and was sorry. Running time, 20 minutes.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

STUFFY'S ERRAND OF MERCY: Pepper Pot Series—A very poor cartoon, I thought. Grotesque creatures go to get an orange for a sick girl. The only thing to me of interest was how they made the picture.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

VAUDEVILLE REEL NO. 4: Pepper Pot Series—Exceptionally good.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

LAW OF THE WILD: Rex, Rin Tin Tin, Jr., Ben Turpin, Bob Custer—Folks seem to like this serial. We thought the actors wooden, but the animals make up for any defects, and there is plenty of action, good photography, and sound very fine.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY MOUNTAIN: Ken Maynard, Verna Hillie—Starts out like a fine serial. Maynard is universally popular, which ought to put this one over. Running time, 20 minutes each episode.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

ROARING WEST (Chapter One): Buck Jones—Plenty of action and it is starting out good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

First Division in Deal With BIP

Harry Thomas, president of First Division Exchanges, Inc., has closed a deal with Arthur Dent, managing director of British International Pictures and vice-president of Alliance Pictures, Ltd., by which First Division will take over distribution in this country of 18 out of 25 pictures on the Alliance schedule. (Picture in Pictorial Section).

Under the deal First Division has the choice of any BIP product, which will be released in this country under the trade name of Alliance. The product will be distributed directly through First Division exchanges in the east and elsewhere through affiliated franchise holders. Two-thirds of the English company's product for 1935-36 will be made with the American market in mind. The deal runs for one year.

According to Mr. Thomas, where exchanges elsewhere in the country have dropped First Division affiliation because of the new policy of Republic Pictures that its distributors must confine themselves only to Republic releases, deals are being concluded with other exchanges in the key cities.

The 18 features for First Division release, and the star of each, are as follows: "Mimi," Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.; "Dance Band," Charles (Buddy) Rogers; "The Secret Agent," Greta Nissen; "Red Wagon," Charles Bickford; "It's a Bet," Helen Chandler; "McClusky the Sea Rover," Jack Doyle; "Crime on the Hill," Sally Blane; "Southern Maid," Bebe Daniels; "Love at Second Sight," Marian Marsh; "Elizabeth, the Virgin Queen," Matheson Lang; "Radio Parade of 1935," all star; "Give Her a Ring," Zelma O'Neal; "Girls Will Be Boys," Cyril Maude; "My Song Goes Round the World," Joseph Schmidt; "Freedom of the Seas," Zelma O'Neal; "Scotland Yard Mystery," Sir Gerald du Maurier; "The Great Defender," Matheson Lang; "Old Curiosity Shop," Elaine Benson.

Southeastern Owners To Meet August 11-13

The Southeastern Theatre Owners' Association will hold its annual summer convention at the Carling Hotel, Jacksonville, Fla., August 11-13. M. C. Moore of the Riverside theatre, Jacksonville, is chairman of the entertainment committee. Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will address the meeting on "We Need Each Other."

It is planned to make the meeting as much of an entertainment gathering as possible, since there will be no election of officers and only one business session, at which general matters will be discussed. Elaborate programs for the entertainment of the guests have been arranged, including deep sea fishing, golf tournaments and the like.

Exhibitors' Kin Die in Crash

Sympathy was expressed generally throughout the Intermountain western territory for George Smith, exhibitor, operating the Gem theatre at Magna, Utah, whose mother and brother were killed recently in an automobile collision. Another brother had died only recently on the Coast.

TRAVELERS

Walt Disney, producer of Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphonies cartoons, arrives in New York from a European vacation this week.

Italy Plans Tax To Aid Industry

Means of encouraging domestic production of motion pictures are being considered by the government of Italy, according to a report to the department of commerce at Washington from C. A. Livingood, commercial attache at Rome.

The plan said to be under consideration at the moment involves: removal of the present restriction on imports of films to the extent that imports would be allowed equal to the corresponding imports of 1934; elimination of the present "dubbing" tax of 25,000 lire (about $2,000) per film; establishment of a tax of 10 per cent of rental receipts on imported films, the tax not to be less than 15,000 lire per film; permission for an Italian producer to import three foreign films free of rental tax for every Italian film he produces.

It is said that the proposal to tax film rentals would have the double object of reducing the amount of money sent out of Italy and of providing funds for promoting the growth of the domestic industry. The report indicates that estimates on the amount to be derived from the rental tax vary widely, one official declaring the rentals on imported films total approximately 80,000,000 lire annually ($6,400,000), while another estimate places the figure at 120,000,000 lire annually.

It is indicated that distributors will be forced to pay something like twice the present "dubbing" tax under the proposed rental tax.

Court Rules Plaintiff Must Post Bond for Film

The United States court of appeals at San Francisco ruled last week that a motion picture company's films may not be tied up by a lawsuit unless the person bringing the action posts an adequate bond.

The court ordered the Los Angeles federal district court to stay its order impounding the Warner film, "Across the Pacific" unless adequate bond is posted by M. P. Echevarria, Filipino author, who charged that the picture infringed on a story written by him.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

HASTEN THE SWING

Discussed editorially last week, the swing back to old-time showmanship can be hastened in more ways than one by the cooperation of the producing companies. For instance:

Adoption generally of the conference plan recently inaugurated by Charles E. McCarthy, Fox Films advertising and publicity director, who brought to New York representative theatremen from various parts to sit in, analyze and aid in the layout of a selling campaign for "Dante's Inferno."

Another idea with merit embraces the sending out in return the men who make the press books for the necessary stimulation these workers would receive from visits in the field with theatremen, newspaper editors, leading merchants and other important contacts. Such trips should unquestionably mean more practical press books and better understanding of mutual problems.

The employment by all companies of high powered, knowledgeable exploiteers with savvy enough to work hand in hand with local managers is also recommended as another excellent means of stimulating grosses. Careful selection and sound handling of these field lieutenants would do much to remove managerial objections to this source of assistance.

These slants are of course but a few of the many that are helpful in bringing back the days when showmanship was held in much higher respect. Their adoption should do much to break up the "log-jam" that is hindering progress.

TOMORROW'S MANAGER

If on this page there has been little direct reference to the assistant manager, it is not because we do not value his position as highly or love him less. For he who truly rates the title of assistant is in effect a junior manager with many important responsibilities placed squarely upon his shoulders. And thus what is set down in the Round Table is written as well for his interest and information.

Today's assistant is tomorrow's manager and to bear us out further we are pleased to note the recent promotions of two theatremen from second-in-command to captain, so to speak.

The first is O. H. Bradbury, appointed last week to manager of the Lucas and Jenkins Georgia Theatre, in Atlanta, after serving for two years as assistant at the Fox, in the same city. The second, Gordon Spradley, starting as usher, now is upped to the post of manager at Wometco's Biltmore in Miami.

Congratulations of course are in order as is our wish that the good fortune of these members will serve to encourage other juniors striving mightily for their place in the sun.

STILL A GOOD STUNT

Writing in the New York Times Magazine on the occasion of the one hundred and twenty-fifth birthday of P. T. Barnum, his biographer, M. R. Werner, relates instances of exploitation put over by the "first master of the art of ballyhoo," back in the Sixties, to tilt grosses at his famed American Museum in New York. Describing one of the traffic-stopping street stunts originated by Barnum, Mr. Werner writes as follows:

". . . He once hired a man to place bricks along Broadway, one brick at Ann Street, another at Vesey, a third in front of the Astor House and a fourth in front of St. Paul's. The man carried a fifth brick and walking from brick to brick, methodically exchanged the one in his hand for one on the pavement without saying a word to anybody. At the end of every hour he presented a ticket at the museum door and walked through the building and out again to continue his bricklaying.

"Half an hour after the man began his rounds, hundreds were watching him, trying to understand his actions . . . and in the course of several days, thousands followed him into the museum, hoping to find the explanation inside . . . crowds so blocked the street that police had to intervene."

For the information of present day theatremen who look askance upon any revival of hoary, oldtime exploitation chestnuts, we call attention to the fact that in the Spring of 1935, some seventy odd years later, Bill Hendricks pulled the same stunt on the streets of Memphis with equally gratifying results.

Cahill Asks Folks To Name 12 Errors

Up in Brockton, Mass., Manager J. J. Cahill, at the Brockton, promoted a gag on "Goin' to Town" that served to give the locals a chance to check on their table manners. Table was set completely for a dinner party in window of leading furniture store and West (in cutout) on lounge invited the folks to find the 12 social errors purposely made in the setting of the table. Buildup was carried on large poster that included theatre credits, and pairs of passes were offered to the first 10 submitting a correct list of the errors.

Also intriguing was a lobby idea, wherein cutout of West was frozen in a 200-pound cake of ice (see photo), the gag arranged through local ice company. Patrons were asked to submit guesses on how long it would take to melt the ice block, guessing blanks given out at the box office and a ballot box planted for the answers.

Round Tablers Stress Shorts Exploitation

Some late instances of what members are doing to put over their surrounding short subjects exploitation are detailed below. The campaigns are forwarded by Louie Charninsky of the Capitol, Dallas, Texas, and Russ Hardwick, of the Lyceum, Covis, N. M.

Plugs Local Girl's Debut

On the strength of her former residence in Dallas, the appearance of a child star, Gloria Brown, in a two-reel Fox short "It Never Rains" gave Louie Charninsky sufficient latitude to put on a citywide drive.

As the child's father and grandfather publish a Dallas suburban paper, Charninsky wangled plenty of page one stuff, a double truck and promoted space in the dailies.

The Dallas member also reports success on the campaign put behind "Fish from Hell," this short being given half the space in regular ads in addition to more than the usual publicity breaks allotted the surrounding unit.

Lobby was atmospheric with stuffed sharks, turtles, tarpons, etc., accompanying photo showing Louie out front in the midst of his display. Postcards were mailed to members of local angler club and barker dressed as deep sea fisherman did a bit of pitching on the thrills in the picture.

Hardwick Plants Special Ads To Plug "Good Little Monkeys"

Comparing its entertainment value with the recent popularity of "Three Little Pigs," Russ Hardwick sold "Good Little Monkeys" at the Lyceum, Covis, N. M., with a series of one-column box type ads.

The heads especially were designed to attract immediate attention. For instance, "Dessert Tops Off a Good Meal," the inference being obvious. Copy for another head ran thusly, "You Can't Sell Peanuts at the End of a Parade," in which Russ set forth the high quality of the short as his reason for putting on the advance campaign.

Browning Suggests Summer Co-op Plan

To associate shows and shopping in the public mind, to stimulate business for the theatre and the store with which the stunt is tied in, Harry Browning, M and P Theatres ad head, suggests a summer cooperative discount merchandising plan worked as follows:

Theatre makes agreement with local store to issue with every paid admission a coupon entitling bearer to a 10 percent discount on any article in the store priced at one dollar or more, with the possible exception of certain articles noted on the coupon. Only one coupon may be applied to the purchase of any one article which Browning says, should be an incentive to more sales.

The discount period may run for 30 or 60 days and to make it more appealing arrangements should be made if possible for the participating merchant to give away some grand prizes on the last day of the period. Where this is done coupon stubs are numbered with patron retaining stub with duplicate number and public drawing held at the theatre for prizes.

The public derives various benefits, says Browning, with an actual saving of 10 percent on purchases, opportunity to enjoy the show and secure discount coupon without extra charge. Theatre also gains by obtaining free lineage in merchant's ads as well as in publicity planted by him, in window and counter displays, on delivery trucks and heralds in all outgoing packages, heralds of course also advertising current shows.

Merchant gets a break by having a lot of extra patronage as the stunt is tied up exclusively with one establishment, which of course should be one doing a big enough business to make the tieup worthwhile. Store also gets a break in theatre publicity, on back of coupons and in other ways unavailable through ordinary channels.

The M and P ads head also suggests girl in lobby to distribute the coupons to be identified with chest band. Girl is supplied by merchant.

QUIGLEY JUNE BRONZE PRESENTED TO SHANNON

Winner Receives Plaque from Senator Frank J. Harris; Managers Attend Ceremony

by JOE FELDMAN

Advertising Director
Pittsburgh Zone, Warner Bros. Theatres

Before a group of 40 theatre managers, State Senator Frank J. Harris presented the Quigley June Bronze Plaque to Chuck Shannon, Manager of Warner Bros.' Hollywood Theatre in Pittsburgh for his outstanding campaign on "Naughty Marietta."

In his presentation address Senator Harris stressed the point that in spite of the fact that the Hollywood Theatre is only a partial operation and operates on a budget of $12 per week, Shannon was able, by the exercise of sheer ingenuity and intensive energy to put out a campaign that would have done credit to a house that spent much more on exploitation.

Emphasizes Personal Qualities

He further brought out the point that it was not the material the man had on hand which enabled him to do a good or bad job, but the qualities of the man himself.

The Senator said he felt certain if a man could exercise the application and intelligence Chuck Shannon had put into this campaign, he was guaranteed a real future in the business which above all requires ingenuity and hard work for success.

Zone Manager Harry Kalmine expressed his pleasure that another one of his boys should have made so outstanding a showing in this international competition, and climaxed the presentation with the announcement that Shannon was in line for the next promotion in the ranks.

Chuck Shannon modestly responded with the comment that he felt his training in the Pittsburgh Zone as much as his effort was responsible for his success in winning the plaque. He gave special thanks to his District Manager, C. J. Latta, for his inspiration and encouragement.

To each child leaving theatre a piece of promoted birthday cake was given. Another store put on a Shirley Temple Essay Contest, offering dolls to those youngsters who submitted best essay on "the Shirley Temple picture I like best." Johnny McManus at Loew's Midland, Kansas City, Mo., tied in with largest amusement park in city for an "Escape Me Never" dance contest with passes as prizes. One-sheets plugging the stunt were placed in conspicuous locations throughout park which cooperated with screen ads. Laundry furnished imprinted shirt bands with picture copy, jumbo telegrams were planted in branch windows and news trucks bannered.

Papers cooperated with stories on progress of picture and opening night featured players were brought to theatre in a body in special cars preceded by police escort. Half hour broadcast, introducing local celebrities was held in lobby and the red carpets were taken out of the moth balls and laid out front.

Mayor and city officials were invited to opening and introduced from stage, and later cheer leaders from high schools did their stuff. Accompanying photo shows bannered street car a reported first for Bridgeport.

Together with his campaign on "The Band Concert," Manager George Nealans staged a Mickey Mouse anniversary party at the Alabama, Birmingham, Ala., with a lot of excellent exploitations to publicize his show, one of the highlights being four gold and silver medals designed by Walt Disney offered to the two boys and two girls making the highest and next highest graduating grades in the grammar schools. Medals were on display in prominent downtown spot, pictured and publicized in the papers and awarded by the City Commissioner of Education.

City Commission passed a resolution declaring a Mickey Mouse Club Week and Fox studio arranged picture of Shirley Temple with enlarged Club registration card, copies of both stunts placed in all co-op windows, one of which is illustrated in accompanying photo.

Whistles, paper hats, balloons, Mouse booklets, toy telephones, candy and gum were promoted and given away at the party, full page co-op put across and a big show put on with 50 members of the Club joined by the pupils of city's largest dancing school.

ASKS PERCENT ON GROSSES

In a number of recent issues, there have appeared opinions from different members on the weaknesses of the usual bonus drive. Here follows further discussion by a Round Tabler who by long experience is competent to speak on the subject. For obvious reasons, he has requested his identity not be divulged.

Dear Mike:

I first want to go on record as supporting all the articles that have been printed in the HERALD favoring the "Percentage Plan."

There is little I can say that will not reiterate that which has already been written but I would like to call attention to a few evils which I know exist and which will have to be corrected before the Manager can get a square deal, from such a scheme or by any other plan, whereby the Manager might share in the Profits or Grosses.

First of all, the "Percentage of Profits" idea is a shaky one. That is, in chain organizations here are just a few of the things they do to make your books show a loss or a small profit—while the Home Office shows an entirely different setup.

Can Adjust Fixed Charges

Home Office bookers and buyers usually make the deals for pictures. Pictures are paid for at the figures sent you from your Home Office. What is to prevent the Home Office from chiseling a bit by charging you 5% more for the feature, on a good week?

Fixed charges can easily be adjusted so that your "nut" is a lot higher than it need be. Naturally, this tends to reduce your profit, if any; in other words, there are too many ways in which your profit can be cut down to seriously affect and cut into your percentage of same.

Personally, I am in favor of the "Percentage Plan," based upon grosses.

I understand there are some plans, now in effect, whereby your gross quota is set up on a 13-week basis—based against the year previous.

Product availability, time of the year, weather, etc., are all brought into consideration and the gross is what counts, regardless of Profit or Loss.

I do not mean to say that a Manager should receive a percentage of the gross, if the theatre is losing heavily. But, if a Manager can bring his gross up and improve over the previous year or a certain given quota, he should be compensated for it. He should not be penalized for exorbitant film rentals or Home Office charges, over which he has no control.

In the average theatre operation today, the manager is—without question or doubt—the lowest paid employee. Yet his is the responsibility of making that theatre pay.

Much has been written about this so hardly anything new can be cast upon. I believe it is just a matter of time before Home Office officials will realize that some sort of Percentage Plan, set up on a fair, equitable basis, should be put into effect—as I cannot readily make myself believe that our officials and executives are so shortsighted that they cannot understand, comprehend or fully realize the necessity of such a plan, to say nothing of the profit to them.

Why is it that theatre organizations will go and contract some radio name or some other freak attraction and invest all kinds of money in it in the hope of increasing their gross or making a very small profit; and in most cases, they find to their dismay that they invested money in something that set them only deeper in the red.

A theatre manager will go out and invest time, brains and energy and through some unusual stunt or bit of advertising put over a picture and probably make a few hundred dollars extra profit at no additional expense. Is he getting a bonus or percentage for that? He is not. If business is bad, however, but through no fault of his own—he is immediately condemned.

The answer to this is evident to all of us.

After all, most theatre managers are interested in the future of the business just as much, if not more so than the executives who control it. They are interested and want to see the business grow. The managers and manpower, available in the theatre, are a vital part of the industry today. Let them grow; and as they grow, business will grow with them.

Upper trough should conceal feedline with punctured holes and should be deep enough so that water will permit smooth flow. . . . Lower trough should be deep enough to hold reserve supply of water to prevent splashing. . . . Heavy duty motor and good self-priming suction pump is necessary to lift the volume of water. It is advisable to place centrifugal pump and motor under lower trough if possible.

Predetermine quantity of water to pass over fall and select pump of such capacity. The display illustrated is about three sheet size and ten gallons a minute flow over the falls. . . . Do not use a pipe of small diameter; use large pipe and place a valve in intake line so volume and force of water can be controlled.

Face of display is Marshtile and the chrome dividers are really grooved tracks fastened to a wood frame and tile inserted into the grooves. Because of this, the color scheme can be changed by merely putting out the Marshtile and sliding into the same grooves strips of the new color scheme selected.

A QUIGLEY AWARD, to be known as a "Quigley Bronze", will be presented each month during 1935 for the campaign selected as second best by the Judges from all those submitted to Managers' Round Table Club on any single picture played between the first and last days of that month. . . .

THE QUIGLEY GRAND AWARD will be presented at the end of 1935 to the winner whose campaign is selected by the judges as the most meritorious of all those awarded the monthly plaques during 1935.

THE QUIGLEY SECOND GRAND AWARD will be presented at the end of 1935 to the winner whose campaign is selected by the judges as the second best of all those awarded the monthly plaques during 1935. . . .

THEATREMEN everywhere in the world are eligible. Campaigns may be on domestic or foreign product from major or independent producers. Entries from foreign lands are especially invited and will be accepted for consideration during the month they are received. . . .

VISUAL EVIDENCE must accompany every entry, such as tear sheets, photos, heralds, etc., etc. This ruling must be obeyed. . . .

EQUAL CONSIDERATION will be given every campaign. Theatremen with small budgets will receive the same break. Remember—"it's what you do, not how much you spend."

CAMPAIGNS should be forwarded as soon as possible. They may be mailed after the last day of the month on pictures that have played during the month. This includes attractions played on last days of month and first days of following. . . .

LEWIS VAUGHAN
manages the Fox Wichita Theatre in Wichita, Kansas, starting in as a projectionist working for Glen Dickinson, Midwest and Fox Midwest Theatres. While Lewis started in as an operator he took up theatre display and worked for an outdoor poster plant as commercial artist. Returned to theatre work managing the Liberty Theatre in Marysville, thence to Parsons, Kansas, and then to his present assignment.

acts as assistant manager of the Paramount Theatre in Hamilton, Ohio, having started as an usher at the tender age of twelve. Bill later moved to a legit house which burned down and then he went over to the Regent in Hamilton, thence to the Paramount as chief of service and later promoted to his present job. He has been at the Paramount for four years.

is in Brooklyn, in the capacity of assistant manager at Loew's Century. George started as office boy for Loew's, became assistant booker in their vaudeville department, was transferred to MGM in Hollywood as press agent, assistant director and in charge of radio programs at the studios for four years, after which he returned to New York and his present job. Well, George, you certainly know enough phases of this business and remember we'd like to know what's going on at the Century.

managers the Palace Theatre in Tarentum, Penna. Since you're the first member to join from your town, Bill, a lot rests on your shoulders. We'll hold you responsible for keeping us posted on what's what in your territory. Remember your obligation to the club just begins when you sign the application blank. We expect to hear from you.

is another one of the Randforce Circuit to join the club from Brooklyn where he manages the Cross Bay Theatre. All the boys are particularly good friends of ours, George, and stop in all the time to get acquainted, so we're counting on your putting in an early appearance.

is well-known around these parts, for he manages the 8th Street Playhouse for Rugoff and Becker. We've been after Mike to send us an article on the art theatre, about which he knows plenty and here's hoping that this gentle reminder will spur him into action.

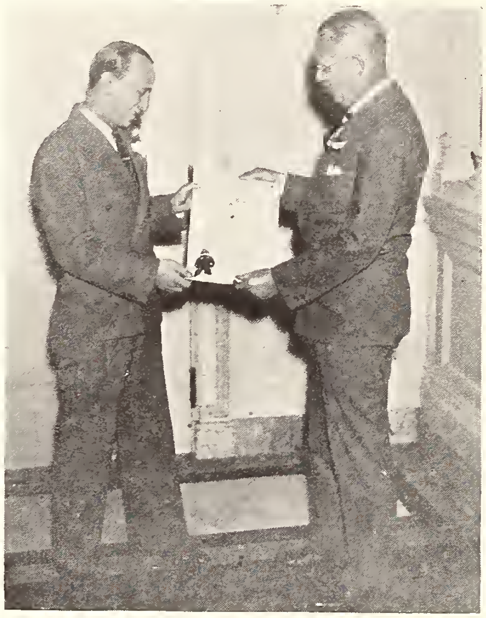
acts as the assistant manager of the RKO Dyker Theatre in Brooklyn and comes well recommended by his boss. Harold was formerly assistant at the RKO Tilyou, so it looks as though he ought to know his Brooklyn pretty well. We shall expect to hear what's being done at the Dyker, so don't fail us.



It's Colonel Simons now as Mayor Beach of Hartford presents the Kentucky Commission to Jack Simons, Poli Theatre.

is the assistant manager of the Bromley Theatre in Philadelphia and with Joe Feldman's okay on his application blank, he ought to be good. Dave says he always wanted to write scenarios and still has the yen, he's a member of an amateur dramatic club and has written a syndicated movie chatter column for seven local sheets. Dave seems to have worked in a number of Philadelphia Warner houses on the service staff and as assistant, and says he derives a lot of pleasure from effective street ballys. So do we all, David, how about telling us what's what at the Bromley?

manages the Supreme Theatre in Brooklyn for the Randforce Circuit and we extend the same invitation to come in and say hello as we did to his sidekick, George King. which one of you will be in first?

is out in Wichita, Kansas, assisting at the Fox Wichita Theatre. Derald entered show business in a very novel way; he had a fight in the theatre alley, won it and the manager who was watching the fracas took him in and offered him a job. Hart seems to have run the gamut of theatre business, ushering, doorman, operator, publicity, assistant and hopes to keep on going up, and we second the motion for him.

needs no introduction to these pages, for his work as exploitation manager of the Strand and Arabian Theatres in Laurel, Miss., have appeared often. Austin started as usher and operator until the house closed. Later worked for Saenger in Vicksburg, Miss., and then became interested in commercial art and has been at it ever since. We've run some mighty fine samples of the art work he's turning out at his house and anticipate showing plenty more of it.

is up in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, managing the Majestic Theatre there. We have a few Round Tablers from your parts, Harold, and some of them have stopped by this vacation period to pay us a visit. What's chance of your coming down and stopping in the Club?

is at Wauneta, Neb., acting as assistant manager of the Crystal Theatre there. Dr. F. Rider, manager, okays his membership and Keith says joining the Club is something that he has been threatening to do for some time past. You're more than welcome in our midst, McCallum, and we'd be very glad to hear from you.

manages and owns his own show, working out of Houston, Texas. Dacus has two portable sound projectors together with a complete magic vaudeville act and handles the whole things, going from town to town. A mighty broad experience, we'd say, and it's nice to hear that you find the HERALD so interesting.

"BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936" was shown in rough-cut form to a group of M-G-M Studio officials, publicity men and a few newspaper people sworn to secrecy!

WE KNEW IN ADVANCE that we had a swell-show-in-the-making, but frankly we had no conception that the assembled picture would cause every person in that projection room to say: "It is positively the greatest entertainment ever put on the motion picture screen!"

THOSE ARE STRONG WORDS and until you see for yourself, you naturally will not take them for granted. BUT—

THE THING TO REMEMBER right now is that M-G-M is hitting a New Season stride not duplicated ever in the history of our business. You know about those completed, in the-bag, nationally advertised hits— "CHINA SEAS" (Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery); "ANNA KARENINA" (Garbo, Fredric March, Freddie Bartholomew.)

AND NOW "BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936"! That's not all. As the final scenes are being taken for RONALD COLMAN in "A TALE OF TWO CITIES" the West Coast is rumbling with inside-reports of another M-G-M GIANT! 1935-36 is a foregone conclusion. On Lotteries

A PLAGUE fever of lottery attractions is running through the theatres of the land. It began in marginal lesser houses and now extends in all directions, including large circuits.

Able showmen in all classifications denounce the screen lottery—and adopt it. The plea, as usual for transgressions of the sort, is that it is forced upon them by competition, that it bolsters box office grosses.

Not so long ago some of the same showmen who are now running lotteries by various evasive devices and schemes were crying aloud that block booking was forcing them to run immoral pictures, pictures invasive of the goodwill of their theatres and of their standing in the community. They were victims of sin that originated in Hollywood. Hollywood, of course, at the moment defended its products in various ways, including the oft-repeated assertion that their pictures were in the tempo of the times, that competition forced them to be snappy, that the box office demanded that sort of product. Hollywood it chanced was wrong. A reformed product, aligned with the commonly accepted standards of American decency, by its success, has proved the case.

Now it is entirely possible that many an exhibitor can make an honest case in behalf of a policy which converts his theatre into a community gambling house. He can prove that because the Bijou and the Empress up and down the street are doing it that he has to do it. Maybe he does. But all of them do not.

THE immediate effect is, or is expected to be, big box office business—throngs seeking lucky numbers and coming back to see if they win. It is manifest that there can be few winners if there is to be a profit. Losers are in the majority and they are disappointed. They buy their disappointment at the box office, where once they shopped for entertainment. The association of ideas tends toward the creation of a community state of mind that will presently be something less than zero as an asset.

It will immediately be argued that the motion picture theatre is merely following a public trend evidenced by the vast sales of Irish sweepstakes tickets and the like in this country and that there has been nothing but publicity and a lot of cheering for the winners in consequence. The millions lost get no publicity. The newspapers have not yet found a story of the impecunious clerk who denied his babies milk and postponed his wife's operation because he couldn't save money while buying sweepstakes tickets, but there are plenty of such stories to be had. But more immediately and practically to the point is the fact that the sweepstakes are "over there," whereas the motion picture theatre with its lottery stays right in the home town, must live with public opinion of its own making.

THE slickers who follow the circus and the carnivals are notoriously and congenitally in bad with the home-town boys. It is healthy for them to move on. But the lottery devices now coursing through the theatres of the land are carnival gambling schemes, no matter how they may flaunt "copyrights" and garlands of phraseology intended to create an aroma of legality and implied propriety. Hit and run games are played better by those who can run. A theatre is stationary.

Also be it remembered that the motion picture arose to dominance of the amusement world because it was the most amusement for the least money, for everybody. The screen has become great by delivery of value for the money. The screen lottery is a promise of something for nothing—for the few—and is precisely as sincere as those old-time mail order advertisements starting with a big display line reading "Free."

Today's lottery profits at the box office are almost certain to cost in direct loss on the tomorrow when the fever has run its course.

Another phase that might as well be weighed along with the other elements of the policy, is the effect upon the status of the motion picture as merchandise. There is indeed little point to intelligent booking of superior product, if the box office draw is to depend on lucky numbers, if the audience is there not to see a show but to wait for the drawing. If the theatre insists on black tent and carnival policy, it can expect eventual delivery of film merchandise made to carnival level. That might make emergence from the policy, a return to the amusement business, a shade more difficult.

TAX-MAKING days are upon us. The New Deal's deals so far and the deals that it is misdealing now and tomorrow are going to share such wealth as the tax-makers can bring to the attention of the Internal Revenue Department. The motion picture theatre, which by lottery operation puts itself in the delicate social position of the gentleman with the plaid vest and the ivory dice on his watch chain, will be inviting special arrangements.

We shall have indeed an anomalous situation if, after all, the Decency comes in the can from Hollywood and arrives to contend with home-made sin.

The exhibitor, the circuit operator, and the producer-distributor who rules circuits and make decisions of policy, all alike, have a perfect right, to be sure, to make those decisions and make their houses into gambling joints, if they like. This is because it seems that man was given free will for the express purpose of letting him take the high road to hell, under his own power, if he wants to.

Meanwhile the theatre which survives will be the theatre of amusement—and amusement consistent with the commonweal.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Color Process Race

A contest for dominance of the British color film market looms as Technicolor invades England in opposition to Dufaycolor with plans ratified for a subsidiary which immediately will construct a plant in London. At the same time, Dufaycolor, a French and English development, is staging a counter-invasion in the United States.

Technicolor, Ltd., capitalized at $1,600,000 by London Films, Gerrard Industries and Sir Adrian Baillie, gives a half interest to the American parent company for use of its patents, processes and the like.

Meanwhile American Technicolor will send equipment to London Film for the first full-length three-color production to be made in England. Also, Walt Disney reveals further plans for feature production in tints, and the Russians, too, show an interest. See page 13.

Legislation

Repercussions to pending and newly enacted legislation came from the east, the west and south as proponents and opponents continued through the week to advance their pet measures to enactment, and as one or another of the two groups elsewhere were defeated by action of the lawmakers.

In Wisconsin, distributors met defeat in their fight to prevent enactment of a bill barring designated playdates. A similar law in Ohio is now being contested in the courts by the distributors.

Distributors were warring against New York City's demands for payment by them of the two per cent sales tax, their defense being the licensing status of the motion picture, which, they held, removed the product from the classification of sales. In North Carolina, Missouri and Washington, too, they continued refusal to pay the tax.

The Senate on Wednesday passed the Duffy copyright bill. House action this session is doubted.

Alabama was making progress in abolishing the state blue laws, as legislatures elsewhere proceeded to consider new motion picture measures. The story is on page 14.

Script Approval Plan

Following inquiries from British producers concerning steps required to have their scripts and pictures examined by the New York department of the Production Code Administration of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, MOTION PICTURE HERALD finds the procedure for obtaining a Code Certificate to be as follows:

Communications are to be addressed to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., 28 West 44th Street, New York City.

If the picture has not been filmed, the script should be submitted to the Production Code Administration where a tentative code number will be assigned to it. The script is read and recommendations are made relative to whether the theme of the story is in conformity with the Production Code; whether or not certain deletions should be made in scenes of action or dialogue; whether the script is thematically rejected.

In event the script is approved in its entirety or approved with deletions, a letter is written to the representative of the British producer in the United States, who, if the script is approved, proceeds to film the picture, or, in the event certain deletions are made, a conference is held where the various deletions are discussed. After the picture has been completed, it is sent to the local representative in New York, and the picture is reviewed by the members of the Code Administration in New York to determine whether or not a Code Certificate of Approval should be issued. If the theme, dialogue and action are in conformity with the Production Code, a Code Certificate of Approval, bearing the same number tentatively assigned to the script, is issued.

Should a script, picture, or part of a picture, be rejected, a conference may be held and if an agreement cannot be reached, appeal may be made to the board of directors of the Association.

"Ecstasy" Burns

On June 26 a federal court jury in New York looked at "Ecstasy," a Czechoslovakian film, and decided it was obscene, unfit for American exhibition. The defense at once announced its intention of appealing.

On July 6 the clerk of the court signed an order authorizing U. S. Marshal Raymond Mulligan to destroy the print. Notice of appeal was filed July 25. Two days later, as the defense attorney was serving a certification of the appeal on Mr. Mulligan, he learned that the film had been burned at the Barge Office, an hour before.

Experts on federal court procedure are advising Samuel Cummings, of Eureka Productions, Inc., the importer, to sue the U. S. marshal. Mr. Cummings says the print cost him $5,300.

Buyers Combine

Following quickly the organization in New York last week by 72 theatre owners of one of the largest cooperative buying combinations ever effected by independents, 10 owners in the South this week took similar action while 40 others met in Philadelphia for the same purpose—that of uniting for mutual protection against the alleged discrimination by large distributors and the socalled aggressiveness of their circuit competitors; their club, of course, being buying power. The movement, one of the big matters of the day in independent theatre operation, is described on page 17.

Selling the Papers

Seventy St. Louis exhibitors, firm believers in the law of reciprocity, have served notice on the three local daily newspapers that unless the papers buy advertising space on their screens they will no longer buy advertising space in the newspapers.

This situation, unique in the annals of exhibitor-press relations, which have been strained on occasion for many another reason, is reported on page 18.

Upturn Thrills Press

Sensational gains made by motion picture stock and bond issues caused Wall Street and the financial and news press to turn the spotlight of public attention on the motion picture industry, resulting in the observations, expressed with much enthusiasm, that the upturn clearly mirrored "improved conditions in the industry" and that "most of the major producers have met and are now successfully hurdling their financial difficulties." The story is told on page 61.

Fox "Dilution"

Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, this week received a questionnaire from the committee of Fox Film minority stockholders in connection with their fight to prevent what they describe as a "dilution" of their stock by "insiders" in the proposed reorganization.

The committee objected to a number of things, chiefly to an exchange value given Class B shares which is double that of Class A stock. Counsel for the committee talked of "legal redress."

Another development was the filing of a $20,950,000 suit by William Fox on Wednesday against Fox Film Corporation, Fox Theatres, General Theatres Equipment, Inc., Chase National Bank and Chase Securities Corporation. Stories on pages 29 and 30.

16mm. Referendum

Nineteen nations having national standards organizations will be asked to decide whether the German or American specifications for 16-mm. manufacture should be adopted as the single standard for the world.

The referendum will be conducted by the International Standards Association, at Basle, Switzerland, through a secretariat composed of the German standards organization.

The decision and procedure were accepted by delegates at the Paris conference to the international standards and photography meetings in July, as the only feasible way in which the question could be decided regularly and impartially.

George Friedl, Jr., and J. W. McNair, the American Standards Association delegates to the 16-mm. discussion, this week reported the results. See page 28.

Cameras to War

American newsreels are not resting the while Haile Selassie's tribesmen and Benito Mussolini's shirted Fascists are rustling about the Abyssinian frontier in preparation for the threatening Italo-Ethiopian conflict. They're scurrying off to the front line to cover for the first time by sound a war of the first class.

Truman Talley, general manager, has dispatched a Fox Movietone Ethiopian Expedition, in command of Laurence Stallings, editor, to the scene.

Paramount's camera army, too, was descending on the field of prospective battle.

The preparations that have been made are the most extensive and expensive since the World War, and are reported in detail on page 15.

No Lotteries

Quigley Publications, effective with this issue of Motion Picture Herald, will accept no advertising pertaining to the exploitation of lotteries or cash prize chance schemes. The editorial page this week presents a discussion of the subject.

Sunday Salaries

The vote of Actors' Equity Association for Sunday stage performances need not be a source of worry to motion pictures, for the time being at least, because the sanction is conditional on double pay for Sabbath showings for actors and chorus members, which few "legitimate" managers, if any, are willing to concede.

More than 49 per cent of the votes cast in the nationwide ballot favored the proposal, while 38 per cent rejected it outright.

Assailing Equity, the League of New York Theatres, victor in a legislative battle for Sunday drama, calls the vote a "devious referendum" and considers it another blow. The account is on page 27.

Talkers' 9th Birthday

The ninth birthday of the talking motion picture is being observed this week. It was on August 5, 1926, that "Don Juan," Warner feature with John Barrymore, silent except for a synchronized score, had its premiere at the Warner theatre on Broadway, formerly the Piccadilly.

On that first program were an address by Will H. Hays, opera arias sung by Marion Talley and Giovanni Martinelli, and a violin solo by Mischa Elman.

But at the time of that meager introduction to the "talkies," Warner was preparing Al Jolson's talking picture "The Jazz Singer," released at the turn of the new year, January 27th.

Elstree's Rival

A new British Hollywood, to rival Elstree, is in the making in Buckinghamshire. London Film is building at Denham; a few miles away, at Iver Heath, the new Pinewood Studios are to rise; and between the two will be Technicolor's new plant.

If the trend toward color follows present indications, the gravitation toward "Buck" will be all the more pronounced, writes Bruce Allan, the HERALD'S London correspondent, on page 68.

After Giveaways?

What is the theatre operator going to do when the "deluge of giveaways dies a natural death?" The question is posed by "Bunny" Bryan, manager and publicity director of Balaban & Katz's Pantheon theatre in Chicago, in an article in this issue (Page 59.)

Business on giveaway nights is already falling off, writes Mr. Bryan, after a large increase in the first few weeks, all of which points to the fact that the exhibitor eventually must come face to face with the problem that will arise when the novelty of the gift night is over.

Perhaps, he suggests, the answer lies in the unusual picture, with campaigns to draw the special audience.

Where It Goes

Six items cost the motion picture industry nearly one-half a billion dollars every year: Taxes, $100,000,000; insurance, $30,000,000; new theatre construction, $13,500,000; theatre accessories, $22,500,000; advertising and exploitation, $70,000,000; production, studio maintenance and studio payrolls, $241,500,000.

These and other observations of the expenditures and statistical construction of the motion picture were made by the Association of Motion Picture Producers in Hollywood.

The percentage of world's films made in the United States (75 per cent), weekly attendance in this country (70,000,000) and the number of persons employed (270,000), were calculated, too. See page 31.

Still Codedoggling

Congress may yet find a solution to permit industries to set up voluntary trade practice agreements which would hold up against promiscuous violations, and is preparing itself to act on a general revision of the Federal Trade Commission Act, which may be urged in a special message from the President, in order to permit the development of such voluntary codes on a basis comparable to the outlawed recovery codes.

Already some 40 industries, including the motion picture, have talked to Washington about voluntary agreements and Presidential advisers are said to be urging his enlistment in the cause of an internal reorganization of the Federal Trade Commission and the granting to it of powers that will enable it to properly handle voluntary trade practice agreements.

Developments in this connection are reported on page 39.

COLOR FIRMS IN RACE TO CAPTURE MARKETS

Technicolor Rushes Plans for Plant in London, While Dufaycolor from England Maps Counter-Invasion of America

Invasion of England by American Technicolor through immediate construction of a plant in London and a counter-invasion by Dufaycolor in America presage a fight for control of the competitive color market in both countries, the world's two largest film customers. While Technicolor is preparing to extend its scope in Europe after the London laboratory has been completed, Dufaycolor, if its plans materialize, will become an important factor in the development of color films on this side.

The board of directors of the Technicolor parent company in America has approved arrangements completed by Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, head of the concern, for development in England. The board also ratified financing plans whereby Technicolor, Ltd., the English affiliate, is capitalized at 320,000 pounds, or $1,600,000 owned equally by the American Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation and the British interests. All the required capital was supplied by the British, the American parent company acquiring its 50 per cent stock ownership for licenses under its patents, secret processes and similar resources.

While the London plant is under construction, British color production will be serviced by Technicolor from Hollywood. Alexander Korda, managing director of London Film Productions, Ltd., is the first to take advantage of the new facilities and has signed a contract for the first full-length Technicolor feature to be made in England. A contract with Herbert Wilcox of British & Dominions for another feature is expected to be closed in a few days, said Dr. Kalmus.

Those supplying the finances for British Technicolor include London Film, Gerrard Industries, Ltd., a company controlled by the Prudential Life Assurance Company, and Sir Adrian Baillie, Bombay producer. Dr. Kalmus has been elected chairman of the British subsidiary.

Dufaycolor Building at Elstree

Meanwhile Dufaycolor, with color plants at Elstree and Wembley, both near London, and a research laboratory in New York, is building a factory for film base production at Elstree. For the time being, the English concern is limiting its activity in this country to commercial and amateur film development, although in England this year British International Pictures produced "Radio Parade of 1935" and "Autumn Leaves" with Dufaycolor sequences. The concern is making contacts with American film companies looking to the use of the process in professional film production.

The chief obstacle to the rapid progress of Dufaycolor in America is that it cannot compete in price with Technicolor, since the Technicolor Company has its facilities here and the English company must import its base. However, one advantage claimed for Dufaycolor is that it permits speedier production and thus lends toward its ultimate use in newsreels. Fox Movietone used the process in films of the King's Jubilee.

Dufaycolor, a reversed process, does not require any special laboratory, and can be used by any film plant. The process takes its name from Louis Dufay, who has been associated from the earliest days with efforts to produce color-screen film rather than plates, so that motion pictures could be projected in natural colors. Its development has been French and English. The parent companies are Dufay Color, Ltd., and Spicer Du-Fay, Ltd., of which F. Sidney Cotton is general manager and board chairman. Mr. Cotton, now in New York, also is president of the American subsidiary, Dufaycolor, Inc. Walter H. Carson is vice-president in charge for America, and Leslie R. Naftzger, London and Paris attorney, also is vice-president of the American concern.

Dufaycolor has reached a point where it makes three-tone color films on negative that runs in ordinary black and white cameras, both moving and still, and is now experimenting so that color pictures can be printed from the negative on paper. Mr. Carson regards the reproduction on paper as especially important for advertising and lithographing purposes. The only difference is that slightly greater exposure is required in the filming, he said.

The process is described in a new booklet issued by the company. A microscopically fine color screen is printed on the film base before the application of the emulsion. The screen is so fine that 750 lines of blue and equal number of lines of green are printed to each inch of film and over this at a 90-degree angle the red lines are printed. This gives approximately 1,000,000 three-color elements to the square inch.

Shipping Equipment to England

While the British Technicolor laboratory will be rushed to completion early next year, the American plant will ship the necessary equipment and cameras to England to enable London Film to start its three-color picture. Mrs. Natalie Kalmus, wife of the head of the company, who served as color director on all important Technicolor films, will go to England as color director of the feature, which will star Laurence Olivier.

Dr. Kalmus, returning from a six-week visit in England during which he concluded negotiations, reported the film industry there and the public "are fast becoming color conscious, further stimulated by the immediate success of 'Becky Sharp'," which recently had its London premiere. He predicted this reaction "is due to bring about extensive color film production in Britain."

Dr. Kalmus emphasized that the British plant will be open to the entire British industry for photographic service and print manufacture, and will continue the policy of the American company to at all times deal with all customers on an equal basis and not to accord anyone preferential treatment.

Technicolor Board Ratifies Plans for British Field Development; Dufaycolor Building Film Base Factory at Elstree

"I found an exceedingly lively interest in color among British producers," reported Dr. Kalmus.

Will Train Specialists in U. S.

Specialists for the key technical positions at the British plant will be trained in Hollywood.

"The Technicolor process, in its present three-component stage, has reached a point of excellence beyond the producers' present capabilities of realization on the screen," Dr. Kalmus believes, "just as the early sound pictures were no criterion of what the producers have since done with the sound process."

Mr. Korda said the same guiding principle will prevail at the London Film studios being built at Denham, which in their construction, and especially in their light equipment, will be the first in the world to take into account that in the future a large percentage of the most important pictures will be made in color. He said all the facilities of these studios will be available for rental to the entire British film industry, and that the stages, part of which are completed, are already open for rental.

It was reported this week that Pinewood Studios, Ltd., is planning its new plant for extensive Technicolor production. One of its stages will be used by British National Films which plans color features.

Disney Planning Features

In New York last week, Walt Disney, returning from nine weeks in Europe, revealed plans to produce an all-Technicolor animated feature every 18 months or two years, in addition to his annual quota of 18 short subjects. Mr. Disney said he had reduced the usual number of shorts to permit feature production and that his first feature-length cartoon, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," in seven reels, will be completed in 15 months. It has been in preparation for some time. Whether other animated features will be made depends on the success of the first, he explained, but he has in mind "Bambi," based on Felix Salter's tale of a fawn, for feature treatment in color.

Boris Z. Shumiatsky, president and general manager of the Soviet motion picture industry, said in New York the other day before sailing, after six weeks in Hollywood, that he had viewed "Becky Sharp" with much interest, adding he thought it would "mark a turning point in the history of the cinema." The Russians, he said, were working on color processes of their own and are completing their first color film. He indicated that a patent interchange might be attempted with other countries developing color film.

SENATE PASSES COPYRIGHT BILL; DESIGNATED PLAYDATES BANNED

Independents in Wisconsin Win Fight Against Specified Playdates; Ohio Law Tied Up in Courts by Distributors

Effects of state and national legislative procedure this week ranged from a victory for independent exhibitors over distributors in Wisconsin with the enactment of a law banning designated playdates, to the passage on Wednesday, by the Senate, of the Copyright Bill, thereby threatening to disturb the system of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers for collecting fines for music tax violations.

Nor was the interest of the distributors in legislative matters confined solely to Wisconsin's new designated playdate ban. In New York they evidenced hostility to the city's demand that their exchanges pay the 2 per cent sales tax. The distributors are persistent in their refusal to pay the tax from rentals accruing to exchanges from exhibitors, on the grounds that motion pictures and the advertising accessories accompanying them are not sold but leased.

In New York the authorities officially notified United Artists and Universal of the assessment. This first attempt to make a collection brought a concerted distributor protest to the City Hall office of Comptroller Frank J. Taylor, who was told that the distributors are prepared to test the legality in supreme court.

Too, from a New York meeting of distributors' legal chiefs came word that the same attitude would continue to apply toward sales taxes in North Carolina, Missouri and Washington.

Copyright Bill Passed

Passage of the revised Duffy copyright bill, making the United States a party to the International Copyright Convention, was voted by the Senate at Washington on Wednesday after a week of desultory consideration.

Prepared by the State Department, the measure was changed in but few respects by the Senate. The most important amendment was one obtained by Senator Borah of Idaho, giving the court discretion in the issuance of injunctions against the showings of completed films.

The original bill prohibited such injunctions, but the revision permits them where the plaintiff can show that the defendant is not financially able to pay adequate damages for infringement or had begun production with knowledge of the existence of a copyright.

There was considerable opposition by Senators Wagner and Copeland, particularly to the $250 minimum damage clause, but the senators realized that no success could attend efforts to block the bill.

The big fight on the measure will come in the House, which probably will not take up the matter this session.

A strong defense of the ASCAP by Senator Wagner of New York preluded the presentation of his objections to the bill, which won an agreement that the provisions for the $250 damage minimum would be amended to require the courts to award punitive damages additionally to discourage infringement.

Senator Wagner also complained of the provision giving the buyer the right to produce a picture, the right also to exhibit it, contending that the two rights should be acquired separately, so that in the case of a play running on Broadway, the holder of the right to produce the film would not be able to show his picture in competition with the original presentation.

La Follette Signs Playdate Bill

With the affixing of Governor Phil La Follette's signature, Wisconsin enacted the new law prohibiting motion picture distributors from requiring exhibitors to show pictures on specified days. Penalties are provided, a $25 to $300 fine applying for the first offense and $300 to $500 for subsequent offenses, with the secretary of state having the power to revoke the license of any distributor.

The Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan fought for the legislation on the ground that its members were penalized by contractual conditions which required them to exhibit pictures on weekends and guarantee distributors a certain percentage of the receipts

Ohio a few months ago had enacted a similar prohibition, but the distributors charged it was unconstitutional and proceeded to the courts for a test, making the law temporarily inactive.

Alabama Blue Law Repeal Seen

Following the victory of the liberals in Pennsylvania, last month, Alabama is expected to be the second state this year to repeal its "blue" laws, the Temperance Committee of the Alabama senate this week having overriden its chairman, Senator J. Miller Bonner, in giving a favorable report on the Lusk house bill which would suspend all city Sunday laws until after city councils had conducted a referendum. If no referendum is called the act automatically would repeal the blue laws in that community.

Circuit exhibitors, among others in Massachusetts, won out along two state legislative fronts late last week, when the Senate killed the proposal to control billboard advertising through a state director and also killed the proposal to reconsider the recently passed bill to tax incomes of corporations and individuals an additional ten per cent. If the bill had been reconsidered Senator Langone said he would have offered an amendment of a chain store tax, which would have involved circuit houses.

The legislature in Tennessee received an amendment to the 10 per cent amusement tax bill now pending which would exempt tickets selling for 25 cents or less, instead of having the proposed levy apply to all admissions.

Exchanges, Circuits For 2,000 Foot Reel

Distribution and circuit executives in New York this week registered a favorable reaction to the recommendation of the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences that a standard 2,000-foot reel be adopted.

Circuit heads saw in the recommendation an opportunity for improved projection methods and new economies. Distributors pointed to one problem in the restrictions to 1,000 foot film length shipments in force in some foreign countries.

U. S. Asks for Injunction In St. Louis Antitrust Suit

Federal authorities at St. Louis this week asked an injunction to restrain distributors and other defendants in the Government's antitrust action, slated for trial September 30th, from practising in their 1935-36 contracts certain of the complaints listed by the Government in its original suit.

The new suit requested an order to the defendants to show cause on August 19 why a preliminary injunction should not be issued. On final hearing a court decree granting a perpetual injunction against the alleged conspiracy is asked.

Defendants in the injunction suit are Warner Brothers, Inc.; Vitaphone Corporation; First National Pictures, Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation; General Theatrical Enterprises, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, and R-K-O Distributing Corporation.

Vitagraph, Inc., was not named with the other organizations in the antitrust law indictments returned here January 11, 1935.

The suit alleged that the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central Theatres were victims of a conspiracy. An assistant attorney general who filed this week's action said it was intended to prevent the defendants from entering into contracts for the 1935-35 season.

The surprise move became known when it was learned that U. S. district judge Charles A. Dewey of the southern district for Iowa had been designated by U. S. circuit judge Gardner to come to St. Louis to sit on an "urgent case."

Allied Caravan In New England

The Allied New England Caravan was under way this week when Boston leaders of Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts, Inc., key Allied unit in that area, held meetings north of Boston.

White River Junction, Vermont, was the center of activities last week when exhibitors of that state and New Hampshire congregated. Bangor, Maine, was also a stop on the Caravan's calendar.

NEWSREELS OFF TO ETHIOPIAN WAR; STALLINGS HEADS FOX EXPEDITION

Paramount's Vanguard Takes Stations at the Front; Will Release Sound Film Friday Showing Chiefs Pledging Fidelity

Ethiopia's Emperor Haile Selassie stood as the King of Kings, like a bearded holy man, on the steps of the grey stone Imperial Palace, surveying his black, scantily clad and somewhat primitive troops drilling in the distance under the hot African sun. "We are ready to fight Italy," he told American reporters in his soft Amharic.

Some 3,000 miles away, in Rome, heavier set Benito Mussolini boisterously called, with his characteristic waving of arms, for 72,000 more troops to march with 200,000 others on Ethiopia for Italy and Il Duce. He is prepared, he declared, for a vigorous "aerial gas offensive" against Haile Selassie's native army.

And so the American newsreels have gone scurrying off to Addis Ababa and the hilly African frontier to photograph and record for the first time in the history of the world a sound motion picture of what promises to be a first class war.

New York harbor's French line piers last week had a touch of resemblance to World War days as Editor Laurence Stallings and the Fox Movietonews Ethiopian Expedition tramped up the gangplank of the SS Rex for the less civilized scene of the conflict. Mr. Stallings took command at the pier from General Manager Truman Talley.

Meanwhile the vanguard of Paramount's newsreel shooters were taking their stations at the front.

All Have Served Under Fire

Every man in the Fox Expedition had served at the crank under fire. From the American staff General Talley had selected Len Hammond, formerly Far Eastern Movietone supervisor, and towering Al Waldron, the genial giant of the lens force covering the more social political front on Capitol Hill. Georges Mejat, an ace cameraman of France, and Ercole Granata, of Movietonews' Italian organization, are the others chosen.

While organizing the expedition Mr. Talley effected a publicity tie-up that will assure considerable national press exploitation for the unit. In addition to heading the Fox expedition, Mr. Stallings will work as war correspondent in Ethiopia for the North American Newspaper Alliance, news feature syndicate serving some 60 daily newspapers. Every Laurence Stallings' wireless dispatch from the front will carry the copyright of Fox Movietone and the Newspaper Alliance. While pictorial news syndicates frequently have given credit lines to newsreels for still pictures syndicated to newspapers, this is believed to be the first time on record that a syndicate has shared credit with a newsreel on a news story.

All still pictures distributed by this syndicate, as taken by Movietone, will also carry the same credit line.

After interviewing Premier Mussolini in Rome, Mr. Stallings and Mr. Hammond will fly to London to join Al Waldron and Georges Mejat, who will in the meantime have crossed the channel from Paris. The meeting in London is for the purpose of arranging for insurance. Only Lloyd's will underwrite war risk policies.

When these matters have been arranged, they will fly across Europe to Athens and from there will embark for their respective areas of action on the Dark Continent. Mr. Granata is already in Africa. He sailed from Genoa with a division of Italian soldiers for Italian Eritrea.

In Africa, Laurence Stallings will establish headquarters at Djibouti, on the Gulf of Aden, in French Somaliland. It is from Djibouti that the only railroad penetrates the landlocked Ethiopian Empire. A scraggly line runs from this city to Addis Ababa, the capital city, in the heart of Ethiopia. Georges Mejat will work in from Mogadiscio, on the Indian Ocean, in Italian Somaliland. Nassaua, the only port of consequence in Eritrea, will be Mr. Granata's base.

Kent Joins in Preparations

For months Mr. Talley and Mr. Stallings have been planning and preparing. At times when apparently insurmountable obstacles blocked their progress Sidney Kent, Fox Film president, participated with them.

Nations preparing for war move with extreme caution in issuing the necessary permits and credentials. The United States Government, desirous of avoiding any chance of becoming involved through the actions of any of its nationals, acted with careful deliberation.

Special equipment, automotive and other, had to be bought, built or contrived to overcome the jungle's torrential rains, damp rot and destructive heat in one of the hottest, dampest, most pestilential zones in the world. Specially-built motor trucks with protective equipment of all kinds and description were purchased. A fleet of sidecar equipped motorcyles were shipped. Raw stock, specially treated, and safes to preserve it after exposure, had to be obtained. And miniature laboratories for making tests on the battlelines were built. There's no getting replacements where the American newsreel expeditions will work.

Paramount Films Chiefs

Paramount News on Friday will release what are claimed to be the first sound motion pictures of Emperor Selassie since the trouble in Abyssinia. The pictures, explained A. J. Richard, editor, show a meeting at the palace of primitive tribal chiefs taking a pledge of loyalty to their Emperor. At the time Paramount had the only newsreel cameraman on the scene. Since then a March of Time photographer has arrived.

Mr. Richard went overseas in April when war clouds were blackening the skies of virtually all of Europe, and before returning in June, he had organized camera contingents and prepared them for war in numerous strategic locations.

The company has a second cameraman en route from Djibouti to Addis Ababa, a third on his way into Eritrea to cover the Italian side, and others stationed at Port Said and Alexandria to arrange for reshipment of film via airplane relays.

John Dored in Command

John Dored, who is on the scene at Addis Ababa, will be in command for Paramount. He has long been known as chief "trouble shooter" on the newsreel staff and during the World War made motion pictures for the Czar, later covering the Polish fighting. Returning to Russia to attend the funeral of Lenin, the Bolsheviks captured him and only the intercession of the British Embassy saved him from the firing squad.

Since then he has covered fighting with the Riffs in Africa, the Spanish revolution, mob disorders in France, Germany and Austria, and the Greek revolution.

Like the others assigned to the Ethiopian frontier, Mr. Dored was inoculated with four different kinds of vaccine. He, too, had special camera equipment designed which was both light and suitable for tropical use, and had shipped 40,000 feet of negative stock in welded cans.

Gas masks, helmets, field kits, guns, "puppy" tents and special clothing are included in the equipment of all.

Until war actually breaks out, if and when it does, the newsreel photographers will take pictures of the various incidents transpiring almost daily, showing the friction between the pledged opponents, so that when the declaration is made for hostilities, "war" pictures may have arrived in New York.

Italian Personnel Increased

The personnel of Paramount News' Italian bureau also has been increased in view of the critical situation. Under the general management of Bixio Alberini, the Rome division is said to be the largest of any in Italy. Moreover, Paramount News is associated with Luce, the official Italian motion picture bureau.

Expressing the viewpoints of other newsreel chiefs, Mr. Richard explained that the big problem at the moment is getting the film out of the war country. Too, they must first become acquainted with the strategies of African fighting before they can hope for even near perfect participation.

The newsreels probably will ship their film to Port Said and thence to Alexandria, using the airways to Marseilles and from there the steamer to New York. Motorcycles and trucks, all boldly described as property of a neutral so as to avoid attack, probably will carry the film from the inland frontiers. As many as ten cameras will be manned by some of the companies. It is the most extensive and expensive preparation for the filming of a news event since the World War.

Mexican Company Sets Big Program

by JAMES LOCKHART

Mexico City Correspondent

If each of the other 19 Mexican companies maintains an output standard equal to that decided upon by the Compañia Cinematografica Latino Americana, S. A., the newest native motion picture enterprise—six features and 12 shorts—next year should be the greatest in point of production for this country's cinematographic industry. Latino Americana starts work this month on the construction of a studio at Tlalpan, Federal District, some ten miles south of Mexico City, and proposes to launch its production program late this year.

The features are all to be of Mexican themes—dramas, comedy dramas and tragedies. They will include such thrillers as "Vamonos con Pancho Villa" ("Let's Go with Pancho Villa") and "Los Bandidos de Rio Frio" ("The Bandits of Gold River"). Contracts for next year have been made with 23 leading native stage and screen players and two directors—Fernando de Fuentes, former manager of the largest Mexico City cinema when it was Paramount's show window in this country, and Juan Bustillo Oro. Each will direct three features. The short subjects are to be mostly two reelers—comedies, travelogues and scenics.

The enterprise is backed by Mexican capitalists. Its principal officers are Alberto Ricardo Pani, a son of Engineer Alberto J. Pani, former minister of finance, president and managing director; Carlos Arguelles, general supervisor; Alejandro Michel, administrator, and Carlos Puga, studio manager.

Death has removed one of the pioneers of the Mexican motion picture industry, German Camus y Camus, an early producer who later concentrated upon exhibition and distribution. He died from a heart ailment in his home in Mexico City, aged 49 years. He was president of German Camus & Co., distributors of European pictures, and chairman of the board of a company that operates a large first-run cinema and eight neighborhoods in the Mexican capital. Sr. Camus was born in Spain and came to Mexico in 1899. He is survived by a young daughter and his parents.

Production of Spanish animated cartoons is being considered by Alfredo Ximenez, a Mexican artist on the Max Fleisher staff since 1931, who is in Mexico City interviewing native companies. If Mr. Ximenez goes through with his plans it will be the first time animated cartoons have been made in Mexico.

Dr. Ernst Schwarz New Agfa Head

Dr. Ernst Schwarz, chairman of the executive committee of Agfa Ansco Corporation, has been elected president to fill the vacancy which has existed for a year.

Dr. Schwarz, who maintains offices both in New York and in Binghamton, N. Y., will continue as chairman of the executive committee. Herman A. Metz was the last president of Agfa Ansco.

BUYING COMBINES SPREAD FROM N.Y. TO PHILADELPHIA AND SOUTH

40 Independents in Philadelphia Meet to Consider Plan; Ten in New Orleans Organizing in the Southern Territory

Seventy-two Launch New York Cooperative Circuit; Each Owner Will Receive Shares in Company, Pooling Properties

Organization by independent exhibitors of cooperative buying groups as a protective measure answering both the socalled "aggression" of affiliated circuits and the alleged discrimination by large distributors spread this week from New York to the south and Philadelphia.

Following the birth in New York last Wednesday of the Independent Theatre Circuit, Inc., embracing some 72 theatres at the start, with 60 additional as candidates, 10 motion picture owners organized Allied, Inc., in New Orleans, to establish an exchange of their own as a source of supply for all indepedents in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama. Some 40 Philadelphia independents met for the same purpose and heard outlined a definite plan for the establishment within a month of a buying "combine" in that territory.

Whether the large distributors will continue their past policy of refusing to make concessions to such buying groups, or, as on occasion, of declining even to supply product, is at the moment a matter for speculation. It would seem, however, that the strength of the individual group's purchasing power might have some influence.

Other Independents Interested

The sentiment of independents elsewhere, particularly in Minneapolis and New Jersey, has been veering toward the formation of such buying agencies, and together with the steps already taken in New York, Philadelphia and the south, the movement even now has progressed further than at any one time in years.

Definite culmination of the plans of New York's independents with the formulation of corporate procedure and the establishment of the Independent Theatre Owners Association climaxed weeks of effort by a committee and Milton C. Weisman, local attorney. Louis Shiffman, Maurice Fleischman, Dave Davis and Al Cooper comprise the committee. They decided to arrange for an election of officers and directors within the week.

To Start with 75 Theatres

Three additional memberships will be sought in order to bring the total to 75 theatres before actual operations are started.

Mr. Weisman is said to have turned down the presidential post at a salary reputed to be $1,000 weekly. Harry Brandt later was mentioned in this connection. However, his 42 theatres in New York and Brooklyn have not been enlisted. Some $100,000 is understood to have been pledged by the 72 owners who joined at the start. Obviously this chest would be swelled considerably as the 60 owners who requested application blanks participate.

The move has been attributed by the sponsors to the alleged aggressiveness of the circuits of Loew's, RKO and Warner.

Owners to Receive Stock

In return for the money they invest each owner will receive stock in the new company. Literally the owners pool their properties. Each theatre is to receive an income for the next three years equal to the average year's earnings for the last two years. The circuit takes an option to continue the arrangement for an additional four years on a guarantee of paying four times the previous average income.

It will take some three weeks to acquire all of the properties pledged so far, and where a house has been losing money a three months' trial will determine whether it has possibilities of successful operation. At that time a special committee will decide whether to retain or cancel the agreement held on the three months' basis with the losing owner.

Payments of income to participants will be made monthly. Managements will not be disturbed, the present managers, in effect, working for the circuit. However, the board of directors later will have the right to remove a management.

Originally sponsored by New York's Independent Theatre Owners Association, it is intended to develop the combine to a membership of 200 with an annual buying power in product, accessories, equipment and the like approximating $3,500,000. Exhibitors lining up with the group are compelled to continue, or enlist as members of the ITOA, which, explained Mr. Weisman, will act as "guardian" of the circuit because of its "manpower."

Prominently identified with the combine are Maurice Fleischman, John Benas, Maurice Brown, Bernard Barr, David Davis, Bernard Pear, Rudolph Sanders, Edmund Mantell and Louis Schiffman.

Activities will not be limited to a New York membership. There will be an extension to embrace New Jersey owners, many of whom have been considering a similar organization.

New Southern Group

The new southern buying combine was started and chartered by Renry Lazarus, Wonderland theatre; I. J. Harrelson, Bijou; Lyall G. Shiell, Bell; W. A. Weingrum, Avenue; Louis A. Hempstreet, Queen; Harry Schulman, Plaza; Anthony Demharter, Peacock; Robert E. Harmon, Casino and S. E. Mortimer, St. Maurice, all subsequent-run theatres in New Orleans.

Their Allied, Inc., was incorporated with the nominal capital of $5,000, $1,000 of which was paid in. Its organization was to secure "a suitable" product supply for theatres of the organizers and other independents. They charge that the established exchanges are discriminating against them in making suitable films available and that the United Theatres, which has control of the section in buying, has the "pick of the crop."

An exchange will be immediately erected to serve all members. Operations, according to Mr. Lazarus, president, will be extended outside New Orleans, to Louisiana, Mississippi and parts of Alabama. Al Yoemans, of Meridian, Miss., is vice-president and to him has been assigned the task of opening that state for membership.

The charter members each hold one share of $100 par value. Their plan, it is said, not only involves the creation of a new product supply, but also embraces the use of collective buying power to force reductions in clearance, to effect rezoning and for other concessions.

Huey Long is understood to have received telegrams from the sponsors in which they protested the conditions imposed upon independents by large circuits.

Philadelphia Plan Advanced

Reporting on the move of independents in Philadelphia to effect a similar position for more favorable dealings with distributors, the bulletin of the Independent Exhibitors Association in that city said the plan would definitely be in effect within four to six weeks.

"Despite their efforts to 'pooh pooh' the independents' combined buying plan, the major producers are known to view the situation in Philadelphia with apprehension," said the IEA. "Through their propaganda mediums," the IEA continued, "they have implied that they will not deal with any buying combinations, but they are doing so in other territories and could ill afford to reject the large volume of business offered by a substantial number of independents.

"The determination of Philadelphia's independent exhibitors to evolve some practical buying group plan was evidenced at a meeting of 40 theatremen held at IEA headquarters.

"Non-partisan, the confab was attended by such MPTO stalwarts as Charles Segall, George Aarons, Morris Gerson and Luke Gring.

Committees for Six Zones

Morris Wax, president of the IEA, explained that the city would be divided into six sections—Kensington, North Philadelphia, West Philadelphia, Germantown, South Philadelphia and Southwest Philadelphia—and that a committee will be named for each zone to bring independents to a zone meeting. These sessions will be followed by a general meeting at which all plans will be detailed.

Basically the idea is to form a corporation, having the exhibitors as stockholders. Each member will pay a percentage of film rentals for servicing charges.

"Organized buying will give them (independents) the power to bargain, to force fair terms in major film contracts; it will place them on vantage ground in competing against the producer-owned chains." Thus does the IEA explain its reasons for the move.

70 OWNERS TO CANCEL ADS UNLESS PAPERS ADVERTISE ON SCREENS

Unique St. Louis Situation Follows Exhibitors' Refusal to Accept Ad Rate Raise Caused by Press Screen Withdrawal

Causes in the past for controversies between exhibitors and newspapers have been many and varied, frequently reaching boycott proportions, and involving advertising rates, free publicity, editorial attacks and even the exposes of columnists, but, for the first time on record the unique situation has developed, in St. Louis, where 70 subsequent-run theatres threaten an advertising boycott of the three daily newspapers unless the papers buy advertising space on their screens. At the "zero hour" Wednesday the Star-Times appeared without the advertising of the 19 theatres of St. Louis Amusement Company.

The papers have been advertising on the screens of the 70 complaining theatres, but last week they decided to withdraw the ads. At the rate of $4 per week charged the papers by exhibitors, elimination of the ads on the screens would mean that the net cost of the newspaper advertising space taken by the neighborhood and suburban theatres would jump some 50 per cent.

The exhibitors, apparently collectively, decided that they will not stand for this "boost" in their ad costs and accordingly served notice on the advertising departments of the local press that if the papers don't advertise in the theatres the theatres will not advertise in the newspapers. The climax was due hourly.

Some Advertising Withdrawn

Already some of the theatres have taken their advertising out of the Globe-Democrat, the city's lone daily morning newspaper. That paper had been featuring a special Sunday co-operative ad in which various theatres exploited all of the film listings for the week. This arrangement had a big play among the exhibitors, but some months ago when the Globe-Democrat ran as a daily feature "Hollywood Unvarnished," an uncomplimentary film expose, many of the theatres withdrew their advertising patronage from the paper. Included in those withdrawing at that time was the St. Louis Amusement Company, which has some 20 theatres.

However, the Globe-Democrat never had the play from an advertising standpoint from the neighborhood and suburban houses as did the two afternoon newspapers, the Star-Times and the Post-Dispatch. It was the Star-Times, then the St. Louis Star that first conceived the co-operative plan of reducing advertising costs to the outlying theatres. Because a neighborhood house can not hope to draw patronage outside its own immediate section of the city the newspapers agreed that it probably would not be fair to expect them to pay the full card rates for advertising. So the Star worked out the plan of running a screen ad in each house advertising in its paper.

The Star-Times has no Sunday paper. Its advertising rate for theatres is 26 cents per line. The Post-Dispatch and the Globe-Democrat charge 40 cents per line on week days and 45 cents on Sundays.

The average weekly cost to a theatre in each of the papers is $8.50, but in return it has received $4 for running the newspapers' slides. So, the elimination of the slide advertising would raise the net cost to the theatres of the newspaper ads from $4.50 to $8.50.

Would Use Neighborhood Press

If it becomes necessary for the theatres to eliminate their ads in the daily press, some of the houses plan to utilize the advertising columns of a number of neighborhood weekly publications. In the south end of St. Louis the theatres are surfeited with a number of such papers, including the Carondelet News, which has a wide circulation. The other publications are distributed from door to door under an arrangement with the advertising merchants. The theatres will also return to the program method of advertising and make wider use of hand bills, circulars and radio.

Odd Situation in Kansas City

Oddly, in Missouri's other large city, Kansas City, a newspaper advertising situation exists which is said by film men to hold true nowhere else in the country. It has a definite relation to competitive practices and to the competition itself between the large downtown first runs and subsequent and neighborhood operations.

Into practically every home in Kansas City, it is claimed—and into most of those within a radius of 100 miles—the Kansas City Star goes twice a day with a complete directory of motion picture houses and their picture offerings.

The makeup is much the same from day to day, and year to year, and the residents of Kansas City and its environs habitually turn to the Star's film page as a guide. Theatres are listed, "East Side," "South Side," "Downtown," etc., and practically every Kansas City house advertises. Suburbans and subsequent runs carry two-column space twice a day, running from less to more than an inch. This is sufficient to carry the name of the theatre, address, whether air conditioned or not, admission, free parking, the giveaway for that particular night, stars and name of picture—or stars and names of two pictures—shorts, and in some cases a blurb line.

Zoning Problem a Factor

This situation has had an important bearing on the fact that zoning is a less practical procedure there than in other cities, and on the resistance of independent exhibitors to zoning.

The situation also is one of the big reasons downtown first-runs want more protection. They claim to do the heavy selling of a picture, yet the public has been taught almost entirely by the unusual advertising arrangements in the Kansas City Star—that in a few weeks they can see the same picture at their neighborhood theatre.

Kansas City Situation Opposite, with Star Going to Homes with Complete Directory of Theatres and Programs

In sound, seats, refrigeration and program, suburbans now claim to offer as much as do first-run theatres, and suburbans have the additional advantage that they can, with very little expense, offer free parking facilities, among other advantages.

Were circulation and reader interest of the two Kansas City newspapers anywhere near equal, first runs would have a chance to dominate the movie page with their advertising. As it is, occasionally first runs with large display space are relegated to another page because of the large amount of advertising by subsequent runs.

Says Stage Talks Itself to Death

That the American theatre is "talking itself to death" was the warning laid down before Broadway this week by Margaret Mayo, theatre pioneer who wrote "Polly of the Circus," "Under Two Flags," "Twin Beds," and "Baby Mine."

"No wonder the speaking stage is dying a lingering death," said the veteran playwright. "The movies aren't the murderer. The screen is not administering slow poison. The theatre is electing to die!

"I became positively round-shouldered going to plays in the season just closed. I didn't see plays. All I got was continuous conversation!

"The present trend seems to be toward talking the audience out of the theatre. Obviously, we need dialogue. But, after all, drama should have its dramatic action for its base. Modern playwrights are trying to mix a brandy and soda by throwing away the brandy!

"People used to go to the theatre seeking drama in order to forget for a while their workaday troubles. But when they are gorged with tired-of-it-all dialogue across the footlights, they lean back and sigh, and begin a mental review of their own personal little heartaches."

Miss Mayo predicted that the "road" will come back, with "strolling players."

"The speaking stage will never die a real, stark death," she said. "I'll shock a lot of experts, but I'll predict a return of the road. Yes, I know the road is stiff in rigor mortis right now. But it's only sleeping, a case of suspended animation, and it's due for a brilliant reincarnation!

"It won't be the old road, pitching one-night stands in windy old hulks of opera houses.

"It will be a road in the manner of the strolling players of Shakespeare's time, playing outdoor theatres, but with tremendous mobile and productive possibilities.

"Entirely motorized, I see these modern strollers touring the country, playing open-air auditoriums, bowls and stadia, with electrical stage apparatus making for a complete performance."

DOUBLE PAY DEMAND NULLIFIES VOTE FOR SUNDAY STAGE SHOWS

Broadway Producers and Managers Regard Ballot Result As Virtual Veto of Law Passed by N. Y. State Legislature

While the councils of the Actors' Equity and Chorus Equity Associations Tuesday night ratified the nationwide vote of the membership favoring Sunday stage performances in New York state by a large majority, motion picture theatres, especially those in the larger centers, have no need to fear competition from this source on what is usually the largest show day of the week.

The approval was given on condition that the actors and choruses receive double pay for Sunday shows, in addition to one day of rest in the week. Under these conditions, it was considered extremely doubtful among Broadway stage producers and managers that they would accept the plan. They regarded it, in fact, as a virtual veto of the proposal for Sabbath performances, for which the legitimate managers conducted a successful fight in the New York state legislature.

Upwards of 1,000 ballots of Equity members in good standing are reported to have been tabulated in the balloting, which required several weeks. The innovation is to be for a trial period of one year, beginning September 1, when the new Equity contracts become effective.

The ballots for outright refusal to play on Sundays was second only to the conditional approval.

The referendum showed the following percentage variance of opinion among the voting members:

Approval for one year with the double pay provision, 49.28 per cent.

Flat refusal to play on Sundays under any circumstances, 38.21 per cent.

Approval for one year with no other conditions or restrictions, 7.33 per cent.

Flat acceptance with no conditions, 2.16 per cent.

Voluntary suggestions from members, 3.02 per cent.

The result of the referendum, which was limited to Equity's senior paid-up membership of 1,500, was considered by virtually every branch of the Broadway theatre as an outright rejection of the proposal by the actors in view of the double-pay provision. Though a few managers were optimistic that the Equity decision was "a step forward," the majority considered it a repudiation of the legislative enactment in New York, for which theatrical groups, with the exception of Equity, fought for many years. The New York City board of aldermen in June passed an enabling ordinance legalizing Sunday stage performances after 2 p. m.

Max Gordon, producer of "The Great Waltz," revived this week at the Center theatre in New York's Radio City, said the ruling would prohibit the offering of Sunday performances of the attraction. Brock Pemberton, another producer, said the ruling might possibly benefit weak attractions, but that no successful show would be put on Sundays.

Through its executive advisor, Dr. Henry Moskowitz, the League of New York Theatres, organization of the producers, charged the actors' association with conducting a "devious referendum" and with inconsistency in its attitude. The printed referendum, he said, virtually recommended the alternative which subsequently was approved.

"It is the belief of many managers," Dr. Moskowitz said, "that the council of Equity could not win in a fair fight and resorted to a devious referendum to pluck from the theatre the fruits of the legislative victory.

"Apparently double pay seems to be the criterion and not the question of which day shall be a day of rest."

Gillmore Doubts Showings

Frank Gillmore, president of the two Equity associations, frankly admitted he did not expect the producers would offer Sunday performances under the circumstances.

It is believed the stagehands will oppose Sunday shows or demand conditions which will additionally make them prohibitive. James J. Brennan, president of Theatrical Protective Union No. 1, the stagehands' group, said the matter would be discussed with the managers league, and added: "We are with the managers 100 per cent, but if we were in a position to kill Sunday shows we would ask double pay."

The relations between the actors and the managers were further strained this week by the dispute over pay for rehearsals, which Equity has ordered effective a day after the Sunday show provision.

A statement by the managers' league accused Equity, a monopoly in its field, of hastening the doom of the commercial theatre in America through "non-operative rulings" which leave the industry in a state of continued uncertainty. In a bitter attack, the league demanded a basic agreement from Equity "in order to maintain and increase production in the theatre," and asked that the rehearsal pay rule be reconsidered. Mr. Gillmore commented that these demands were "something in the future."

H. M. Warner Reduces Holdings in Stock

H. M. Warner, according to a report to the Securities and Exchange Commission, has reduced his holdings in Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., by 33,333 shares. He retains 67,450 shares. Other holdings include 10,618 shares of $3.85 preferred and $778,667 six per cent optional debentures. Through a holding company Mr. Warner holds 2,115 shares of common and 4,786 shares of $3.85 preferred and $823,667 of optional debentures.

The director of Technicolor, Inc., Thomas W. Slocum, has reduced his holdings by 1,500 shares. His stock now stands at 1.026 shares.

Exception Dropped To RKO Claim

RKO's trustee on Monday withdrew exceptions filed with the federal court last Friday objecting to allowance of a claim of $88,668 filed for the Hippodrome at Cleveland, for rent claimed due on a lease made with an RKO subsidiary. The claim as originally filed was for $888,666.

The trustee opposed allowance at $467,500 of the $3,123,450 claim of Walter Reade's Broadway and 47th Street Corporation, recommended recently by Thomas D. Thatcher, special master. Attorneys for Mr. Reade had filed counter exceptions calling the allowance too small. The claim is based on RKO's former lease on the Mayfair theatre.

Exceptions were filed by both sides to allowance of the Fort Worth Properties claim of $197,168 at $17,595. Attorneys for W. Burnett and Mudd and Mooney entered exceptions to total disallowance of their $400,000 claim total.

No decisions are expected before September. On September 30th will be heard exceptions to the $8,207,000 Rockefeller Center claims and three large Hoblitzelle claims. It was reported that a four to five months' extension is being considered on the agreement under which RKO acts in an advisory capacity on operation of the Music Hall. The present one-year agreement ends August 31st.

New Studio Union Growing on Coast

The National Association of American Employees, new studio crafts labor organization on the Coast, has increased its membership in one week from 280 to 1,500, and producers, studio labor unions and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers are wondering what will follow.

Requirement that members take an oath of allegiance to the American flag was cited as the answer to rumors that the organization had a communistic tinge.

It was pointed out that two or three film companies now have 100 per cent representation in the new association, including numerous former IBEW and IATSE members. Several cameramen have joined, bringing them into a jurisdictional dispute.

Meetings still are being held secretly.

Ross Changes Branch Heads

Jack Krakin, former manager of the Philadelphia office of Ross Federal Service, has been appointed head of the branch in New York. He succeeds Walter Green, who will be transferred to the home office. Roy Ollinger, Washington manager, replaces Krakin in Philadelphia.

WORLD VOTE TO DECIDE STANDARD FOR 16MM. PROJECTORS AND FILM

International Association to Be Agent in Settling Fight of United States and Germany for Million Dollar Market

A world standard for manufacture of 16mm. projectors and film, over which America and Germany are at odds in a fight for the million-dollar export market, will be the aim of the International Standards Association, which has been designated as the agency through which an international referendum will be taken. The German standards organization will serve as the "secretariat" in conducting the ballot, for which a four-month period has been allotted. Member nations were urged to abide by a standard which the canvass will decide as uniform for the world.

See Atmosphere Clearing

Those, in substance, are the results of the congress of the International Standards Association and the International Congress of Scientific and Applied Photography, representative of 19 leading nations, held in Paris July 7 to 13. A comprehensive report on the meeting was submitted to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the American Standards Association by the ASA delegates, George Friedl of Electrical Research Products, Inc., and J. W. McNair of the ASA, and was made available in final form Wednesday. The report, largely confidential, covers 50 typewritten pages.

While the question, which is of first-rank importance to manufacturers, producers, technicians and even governments, will not be definitely settled for several months, the American groups feel that much has been accomplished in lifting it out of the acrid atmosphere of nationalistic jealousies and suspicions and placing it in the hands of the International Standards Association, an established and recognized arbiter.

It required considerable effort and maneuvering on the part of the American delegates to obtain agreement to the method of procedure. The week's sessions were argumentative and frequently stormy, and the interplay of national fidelities was greatly in evidence among the Europeans, chiefly the Germans and Italians. This, according to observers, is explicable considering that 16mm. projection and film is regarded on the Continent as an important adjunct in "educational activities," which there consist chiefly of campaigns of political propaganda. Particularly is this true in Germany, where the use of mobile narrow-gauge equipment in spreading the Nazi gospel has been developed to a high degree.

Italians Repudiate German Idea

As foreseen, the American SMPE standards were opposed by the Germans. Contrary to the conception held by the American delegates prior to their arrival in Paris, the Italians were not supporters of the German aims, and while the International Cinematographic Institute (ICE), which is affiliated with the League of Nations but directed in Italy, last year adopted the German specifications, the delegates representing the Italian industry refused to pull the German chestnuts out of the fire at the recent Congress. They went so far as to repudiate the German program and now are threatening to adopt a standard of their own, the specifications of which they did not reveal. However, general opinion is that Italy will be reconciled to embracing the projected world standard.

The matter finally was submitted to the International Standards Association, contrary to the hopes of those nationals who opposed the established American standards and despite some rather obvious diplomacy on the part of the French, who directed the proceedings and were unsympathetic to the procedure proposed by the Americans.

Goldsmith Sees Progress

American reaction to the Congress was expressed in New York by Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, past president of the SMPE and chairman of the Sectional Committee on Motion Pictures under the ASA, which committee was instrumental in initiating the steps leading to the adopted procedure. Dr. Goldsmith said this week he was gratified that the question had been divested of the arbitrary and casual treatment that had obtained in Europe in the past and it is now assured of being handled through regularly constituted channels.

The central impartial agent through which the standardization referendum will be cleared is Alfred Huber-Ruf, a Swiss, who is general secretary of the ISA, with headquarters at Basle, Switzerland.

Representing the SMPE were Walter Clark and Dr. S. E. Sheppard, both of Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y. Neither was a delegate to the standards meeting and they concerned themselves chiefly with matters of the photography congress. Some sessions of both groups were held jointly.

Sheppard Heads Congress

Dr. Sheppard was named president of the next International Congress of Scientific and Applied Photography. Charles Fabry of France is the retiring president.

This group attempted to seize jurisdiction in the matter of 16mm. standardization when A. Lobel, vice-president of the French unit, presiding at a joint session with the standards organization, declared a resolution adopted which would create a European Committee on General Cinema Technique. Both the American and German delegates to the ISA protested, while the American delegates to the photography congress refused to support their national colleagues. The International Standards Association also entered a vigorous protest. Subsequently, the photography section unanimously adopted ISA proposals covering the international canvass.

The following are the important questions to be decided in the referendum to be undertaken by the ISA:

A—General

In order to arrive at a universal solution the It is considered of paramount importance:

1. That a single standard for 16mm. sound film should be adopted for the entire world with the least possible delay.

2. That the conclusions adopted (at the Paris conference) be presented by the International Congress of Scientific and Applied Photography to the International Federation of the National Standardizing Bodies (ISA).

American Groups Feel Much Accomplished Toward Lifting Problem Out of the Atmosphere of National Jealousies

ISA will continue to communicate with the International Institute of Educational Cinematography (ICE) in regard to the standard in the domain of the educational cinematography.

B—Sixteen Millimeter Sound Film Standardization

Point 1. The position of the sound track on the film.

Point 2. The distance between the sound and the corresponding picture.

This should be 26 pictures (frames). The existing standards of 25 and 27 pictures respectively should be changed to the standard of 26 as and when a revision becomes possible.

(American practice calls for 25 frames. Some Europeans favor 26. France is divided. This refers to the lead of the film prior to the start of the sound.)

Emulsion Position a Factor

Point 3. The position of the emulsion in the projector.

a. Film obtained by reversal: emulsion towards the lens.

b. 16mm. positive film obtained by contact printing from a 16mm. negative: emulsion towards the light source.

c. 16mm. positive film obtained by optical reduction from 35mm. films can be placed with the emulsion side either to the lens or to the light source.

d. In order to permit projection of 16mm. sound films whether obtained by the reversal process, optical reduction, contact printing or color processes, it is recommended that the sound head be provided with a device allowing refocusing of the sound objective according to whether the emulsion is on one side or the other.

Sound Track Position Up to Units

A resolution unanimously adopted explained that agreement on the position of the sound track, which is the major problem in the controversy, was not possible between the various nations "at the present time," and that at the delegates' request the question was left to the standards organization. The main disparity is that in the American standard the sound track is on the left of the film, whereas the Germans place it at the right.

In order to arrive at the facts relating to national claims for 16mm. development, the ISA will ask national organizations, including the American SMPE, to obtain "reliable information" regarding the commercial activity to date. The Germans contended their manufacture is as great or greater than the Americans', who claim to have between 2,000 and 3,000 projectors in use. Establishment of these claims may have a bearing in the direction of the vote.

"Although the attitude towards the ISA's taking over this work was at first only lukewarm, the favorable comments by the delegations of Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, Holland and other countries before departing definitely indicated that all were well satisfied with the work accomplished and confident that future action would be along a better procedure than past meetings," the American standards delegates reported.

LEGAL REDRESS FIGHT THREATENED BY FOX MINORITY STOCKHOLDERS

Committee Awaits Reply From Kent to Questions on 20th Century-Fox Consolidation; Senator Hastings' Aid Asked

Ask Elimination of Preferential Treatment for Class B Shareholders; An Application to Register New Stock Is Filed

BULLETIN

Suit for $20,958,000 with interest and costs was filed Wednesday in New York by William Fox against Fox Film Corporation, Fox Theatres Corporation, General Theatres Equipment, Inc., Chase National Bank and Chase Securities Corporation, and directors and officers of each. The basic charge, which has many ramifications, is that the defendants failed to live up to the agreement made with Mr. Fox when he sold the Fox companies to the Chase interests.

Mr. Fox's newest maneuver in the legal tangle in which he has been both plaintiff and defendant since selling the control in 1930, follows the recent hearings before trial in a suit brought against him by stockholders and creditors of Fox Theatres Corporation, in which they asked for an accounting.

Continuing its fight against what it terms "insiders" for a more advantageous position in the reclassification of stock in the Twentieth Century-Fox Film reorganization, the committee of minority Fox Film stockholders through its counsel, Henry L. Sperling, announced in New York on Tuesday that it will seek "legal redress" in event the demands are not met.

Realizing that a proxy fight would be unavailing, the committee, of which L. T. Pidwell is chairman, is understood to be considering various moves in event it decides to make an attempt to block adoption of the proposed reorganization plan. Among these are possible actions in the state courts. It is also possible that an inquiry by federal or state investigators may be requested.

As preparations were being made to ratify the plan at a stockholders' meeting next Thursday, there were these additional developments:

1. The committee was awaiting a reply from Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, to a questionnaire posing a number of questions in regard to the consolidation.
2. U. S. Senator Daniel O. Hastings, acting as receiver for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., controlling Fox Film voting trust certificates, was appealed to by the committee to oppose the merger.
3. The committee asked Fox Film to eliminate the feature giving Class B shareholders preferential treatment.
4. Application for permanent registration on the New York stock exchange of the new stock of the consolidated companies was filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.
5. The consolidated protective committee for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., also applied for stock registration.

Many Phases under Fire

Numerous phases of the reorganization and merger are under fire by the stockholder's committee. A partial explanation was given by Fox Film at a conference last week between Mr. Kent and representatives of Hughes, Schurman & Dwight, counsel for the company and for Chase National Bank, which is heavily interested in Fox, with seven members of the committee and their counsel.

The committee was informed that the provision of the merger giving Fox Class B stock twive the value of the Class A in the exchange for stock in the new company is fair because the B stock is relinquishing its voting preference.

Among the provisions questioned is the option made available to Mr. Kent for 60,000 share of new stock. The committee, however, did not go into that at the conference with Fox officials.

The measures to be taken to obtain an adjustment satisfactory to the small stockholders depends on the outcome of the present negotiations, said Mr. Sperling this week. It was learned that representations may be made to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Following the discussion with the Fox officials, the committee issued a statement declaring the reasons advanced by the company for the "discrimination" in favor of the Class B stock in the merger plan is "without merit at this time." The statement continued:

"Counsel for the committee was told by officials and attorneys for the corporation that the double value given the Class B shares in the plan of merger was one of the considerations of the voting preference of these shares. That this preference would be eliminated under the exchange plan seemed to be the justification for doubling the value of one class of shares over another class, each of which are given equal value in the charter of the corporation.

Cites "Invisible Government"

"It is true that the Class B shares have the controlling voting power of the corporation under certain conditions. For these shares, however, to re-acquire the voting control of the company, it would be necessary that $9,745,636 be distributed in the form of dividends in the course of a single year. The course of the corporation since the present invisible government of it assumed control of its management has been such as to convince the committee that such dividends are a very remote possibility. Therefore, the justification advanced by the company for the discrimination in favor of Class B stock is regarded as being without merit."

After a preliminary report by its accountants late Wednesday, the committee attacked the accounting practices of Twentieth Century as disclosed in its balance sheet. Mr. Sperling said the accountants, whom he refused to identify, had been unable to obtain requested information from Twentieth to determine the value of its assets in the merger. According to the company's statement, Twentieth is contributing approximately 8 per cent of the combined assets of the two companies while receiving more than 16 per cent of the capital stock.

It was reported William Fox would oppose the merger at the General Theatres Equipment hearing in federal court in Wilmington, Del., Monday. The GTE receiver favors the merger.

Failing to receive a reply from Mr. Kent to a letter sent him last week, the committee addressed a questionnaire to the president of Fox.

The questionnaire called attention to the fact that the total current assets of Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., as of May 4, last, amounted to $3,489,535.54 and as against these there were current liabilities, exclusive of notes of $500,000 which had matured since that time, of $1,497,127.77.

The questionnaire, listing seven items for an answer, reads:

"1. What was the actual cost price including salaries to Mr. Schenck and Mr. Zanuck of each of the eighteen pictures listed in Schedule '1' of the Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., as published in the notice of special meeting of stockholders to be held August 15?

"2. Are all of these pictures subject to contractual relations covering their distribution by United Artists Corporation? If so, for how long a period are they the contracted property of the distribution corporation and has any revision been negotiated in regard to such contracts so that the name Tentieth Century, as applied to motion pictures, will become the exclusive property of the Fox Film Corporation when and if the proposed merger is consummated?

"3. Ten of these pictures contained in the aforementioned Schedule '1' are described in the balance sheet of Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., as released and cost recovered. What was the gross income of each one of these pictures and what was the net return to Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc.?

Gross Collection Data Asked

"4. Seven of the pictures listed in Schedule '1' are described in the aforementioned balance sheet as released but cost not fully recovered. What were the gross collections on each of these pictures up to the date of the balance sheet (May 4, 1935); what have been the gross collections as reported to the producer since that time and what was the total amount of the contracts outstanding on each of these pictures on the date of the last report of collections?

"5. One picture listed in the aforementioned schedule is described in the aforementioned balance sheet as completed but not released. Have any gross collections been made on this picture since the date of the balance sheet, and if so, how much? What is the total of outstanding contracts on this picture and what is your personal opinion as to the expectations of this production to show a profit of over and above the cost as given as an asset in the aforementioned balance sheet of $765,632?

"6. In your printed address to stockholders of Fox Film Corporation as contained in the notice of special meeting of stockholders to be held August 15, you state: 'It is believed that the acquisition of the assets of Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., by your corporation will result in additional working capital to your corporation of approximately $4,000,000.' The aforementioned balance sheet gives the total current assets of Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., as $3,489,535, which are offset as of May 4, 1935, with total current liabilities of $1,497,127. Excluded from these current liabilities are notes payable for $500,000 which have matured since the date of the balance sheet and which, our accountants state, should now properly be included in current liabilities. Subtracting these listed liabilities from these listed assets, the amount available for Fox Film Corporation to be used as working capital is $1,492,407. What was the basis of your belief on July 24, the date of your letter to stockholders, that the merger would make approximately $4,000,000 available to the Fox Film Corporation as additional working capital?

"7. United Artists Corporation has advertised one of the pictures listed in the aforementioned schedule as being available for exhibition on hire from them. This fact has led the committee to believe that the other seven pictures listed as assets in the aforementioned schedule are also being sold through the same corporation. If this statement be correct, have any steps been taken to impound the receipts from the amortization of the listed assets so that they may be available as working capital for Fox Film Corporation when and if the merger is consummated?"

Appeal to Hastings

In appealing to U. S. Senator Hastings to go on record as opposed to the merger, "as a protest against the further dilution of the small stockholder's equity in Fox Film Corporation," the committee pointed out that in his position as receiver for General Theatres Equipment he controls 8 per cent of the Class A stock and 86 per cent of the Class B stock of Fox Film. Senator Hastings has pending in the court of chancery at Wilmington, Del., an application for permission to instruct the voting trustees of General Theatres Equipment to vote for the merger plan.

"The situation in regard to this stock has changed materially from what it was at the time when the last dilution of the stock of the Fox Film Corporation took place," Mr. Pidwell, chairman of the committee, informed Senator Hastings. "At that time, General Theatres Equipment, Inc., held the majority of all of the outstanding stock. For some reason, not obvious to the stockholders who were not on the inside, the General Theatres Equipment stock was voted in favor of resolutions making changes in the capital structure of the corporation, which reduced the General Theatres Equipment, Inc., to its present comparatively minority holdings. At that time the manner in which the stock was voted was of great moment to the progress of the corporation.

"Those in present control of the company have enough stock to put through the merger plan, without assistance of the stockholders of the General Theatres Equipment, Inc., The Fox Film Corporation stockholder had five-sixth of his equity taken away from him two years ago, and is now confronted with a proposition which will whittle down his equity at least another 25 per cent. In the minds of the public, these actions, rightly or wrongly, are attributed directly or indirectly to the will of one of the most outstanding financial institutions in the United States."

The letter indicated the last reference was to the Chase National bank.

A hearing on Senator Hastings' petition will be held next Monday before Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott at Wilmington. The chancellor directed that in the meantime the details of the merger plan be open for inspection at the offices of Hughes, Schurman & Dwight, 100 Broadway, New York City.

Harley L. Clarke, former president of Fox, Albert H. Wiggin and Frank O. Watts are the voting trustees. Senator Hastings' petition said they wished to be directed to vote for the consolidation and that the receiver believed it to be to the best interests of the company.

The committee this week also announced it had requested Mr. Kent to provide it with a report on how far the merger has been advanced up to the present time—without waiting for approval of the stockholders' meeting. It reiterated that it was not soliciting and did not want either Fox stock deposits or proxies for voting at the meeting of stockholders scheduled for next Thursday.

In its recent application to the New York stock exchange for listing of new stock Fox Film said it had been advised by counsel that no registration statement would be required for the Securities and Exchange Commission, except as to the issuance of the shares of Twentieth Century Pictures, which are being acquired for investment by the company and the stockholders, of which there are three in number.

However, application for registration of the stock of the consolidated company has been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, together with many of the details of the reorganization and executives' salaries. Outlined were seven-year contracts to be made with Mr. Kent as president, Joseph M. Schenck as executive head of production and Darryl F. Zanuck as head of production.

In anticipation that the merger plan will be ratified and of the listing of stock, traders have been active in over-the-counter deals in Twentieth Century-Fox stock.

KENT'S CASH PAY SET AT $180,000 MINIMUM

Contingent on ratification of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film reorganization plan, Sidney R. Kent, as president of the company, is to receive $2,500 a week as salary, and on December 31 of each year $50,000 additional. On November 1, this year, Mr. Kent will receive the further sum of $75,000.

He is to receive $200 a week for entertainment and the like, and in the event he does not receive $25,000 a year as president of National Theatres Corporation, the company is to compensate him for this amount. The company is to execute a modification and extension of his existing employment contract, dated Nov. 1, 1934, extending his services for seven years from the date of the merger. Mr. Kent's cash compensation is to be at the rate of a minimum of $180,000 a year.

Mr. Kent also is to have an option annually on 10,000 shares of the new common stock until a total of 60,000 shares is reached, at not less than $10 a share.

Joseph M. Schenck, as chairman of the board, is to receive $2,500 a week and Darryl Zanuck, as vice-president in charge of production, $5,000 a week, plus expenses while away on business.

Paramount Stock Issue on 'change

Action was taken this week on Paramount's application for listing of its new securities on the New York Stock Exchange. The application was granted by the Exchange. The new securities include $27,500,000 of 20 year 6 per cent sinking fund debentures, due Jan. 1, 1955; 275,000 shares of first preferred stock, at $100 par; 644,181 shares of second preferred, at $10 par, and 4,115,214 shares of common at $1 par value.

Net earnings of Paramount Publix for the three months ended March 31, after depreciation, federal taxes and amortization, were reported as $1,472,000 by the corporation, and operating profit was $2,482,000 for the period. The report was made in connection with the filing of the application for listing of the new securities.

A hearing on exceptions to the report of John E. Joyce, special master, recommending disallowance of Sam Katz's $281,000 claim against Paramount, was set tentatively for September 18th after having been referred to Judge Alfred C. Coxe of U. S. district court in New York last week. Mr. Joyce held that Paramount could not be held liable for the unexpired part of its contract with Mr. Katz. The outcome of this ruling is expected to have a bearing on similar claims of Jesse L. Lasky and Sidney R. Kent.

No decision will be made until after Labor Day by the federal court on the 53 applications for $3,222,000 of fees for services in the Paramount reorganization. Judge Coxe began a month's vacation Saturday.

UA Picture Budget Set at 18 Millions

United Artists will release pictures of eight producers this new season at a combined production cost of $18,000,000, the home office announced this week.

The two first Samuel Goldwyn pictures, "The Dark Angel" and "Barbary Coast," being completed this week, were called million dollar investments, and the cost of two starting, "Splendor" and "Shoot the Chutes," was placed just below that mark.

Reliance is making final plans for "The Last of the Mohicans," following "Red Salute" and "The Melody Lingers On."

Charles Chaplin's "Modern Times" is now being edited and scored.

There will also be five from David O. Selznick, at least two from Mary Pickford, five from Alexander Korda, 18 Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphonies from Walt Disney, and "Call of the Wild" from 20th Century.

An extensive advertising campaign in 19 fan publications with combined circulation of eight millions will start with the October issues.

Weekly Film Payment Plan for Features

Several New York exchanges have adopted the plan of selling features on a weekly payment plan, that is, pay or play each week, which was inaugurated some time ago for short product. One distributor is reported to have refused to sell an important circuit because it opposed the plan. Distributors say the system is being furthered because a number of exhibitors after signing contracts have either closed their theatres or changed corporate names, thus nullifying the agreements.

Musicians Would License All Booking Agents

The American Federation of Musicians is considering a plan to license all booking agents, according to President Joseph N. Weber. Seven hundred agencies in the United States and Canada would be affected.

The objective, said Mr. Weber, is to protect poor musicians from "racketeers," who have underscaled wages and exploited the player in other ways. Licenses would be issued without charge, but if a booker was found to violate Federation rules his license would be withdrawn.

Producers' Association, in First Survey in Five Years, Finds $13,500,000 Building Cost of New Houses in 10 Months

The motion picture industry is now burdened with an annual tax bill of $100,000,000.

Some $30,000,000 is expended every year for insurance.

Theatres alone spend $22,500,000 annually for accessories and replacement parts.

It costs $70,000,000 a year to advertise and exploit motion pictures.

These conclusions have been drawn by the Association of Motion Picture Producers, California production affiliate of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in the first comprehensive official and comprehensive statistical survey of the whole industry in some five years, as disclosed in Hollywood this week.

It was learned that, with the return last year of new theatre-building activity, after a virtual standstill spanning the depression, $13,500,000 were invested in new show houses during 1934. Additional millions were spent in remodeling, and from other sources it is known that this year's bill for both items will be considerably higher.

There were many interesting observations made from the study, some for the first time, as in the case of the total volume of air express in film shipments originating in Hollywood-Los Angeles, one of the country's great air shipping centers, from which there now emanates from studios and laboratories positive and negative film representing 78 per cent of all shipments from that point.

The United States produces 75 per cent of the world's motion pictures, and in 1935-36 will spend $120,000,000 on production alone, with raw supplies and studio maintenance totaling another $45,000,000.

Theatre attendance is running at 70,000,000 weekly in the United States and 200,000,000 per week throughout the world. Highlights of the Producers' Association statistical report are in the next column.

Center Returning to Films in October

Return of the Center theatre in New York's Radio City to a film policy is scheduled for October, it is understood. "The Great Waltz," which occupied the Center nine months last season during which it grossed $750,000, was revived last Monday, to stay a month or longer, then go on tour.

At the termination of the run of the play, Max Gordon, the producer, will transfer his affiliation from the Rockefeller interests and he and Sam Harris will be partners of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in Broadway productions next season.

The Center will be devoted to extended runs of photoplays, and it is reported that W. G. Van Schmus, managing director of RKO Music Hall, will direct the smaller Radio City house as well.

There were three musicals, and a like number of straight dramatic type. Each of the three dramas were based on long established literary classics—one English, one French, one American. The thirteen pictures were produced by six American companies and one British.

STRIKE AT 150 HOUSES IS VOTED IN NEW YORK

Operators Decide to Walk Out Unless Loew's, RKO and Skouras Rescind Pay Cut Order

Projectionists of Local 306 of the International Alliance, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, voted on Wednesday to effect a walkout in the 150 New York theatres of Loew's, RKO and Skouras unless these circuits rescind their order to reduce wage scales, in some cases as much as 41 per cent, to $1.25 an hour. The cut is supposed to go into effect on Saturday, and the walkout would become effective then, it was assumed, unless the deadlock is broken in the meantime.

The local's officials said the operators in 150 more theatres in New York would act similarly if 12 smaller and independent circuit owners cut wages, as reported they would.

Meeting for the strike vote in Brooklyn, where 1,500 members of the local's 1,800 membership agreed to the walkout, officials declared they had a war chest of $500,000 with which to carry on the fight.

Eleven other theatrical unions, with 20,000 members, were said to have pledged their support to Local 306, including Local 802, Musicians' Union; Theatrical Agents and Managers; Local 1, Stagehands; Grand Opera Artists' Association; Grand Opera Choral Alliance; Local 829, Scenic Artists; American Federation of Actors; Local 95, Building Service Employes; Local 230, Sign Writers; Local 30, Stationary Engineers.

Charged Discrimination

The circuits had notified Local 306 operators of the cut on August 1st, charging discrimination because competitive theatres in the area had lower scales for members of the same union than those enforced at theatres of the three complaining circuits. The new rate, it was said, would permit RKO, Loew's and Skouras houses to "compete with comparable houses."

Joseph Basson, new president of Local 306, was leading the fight, which started after notices were handed individually to the operators by the circuits and the local's officials were ignored. The proposal would reduce wages from $2.12 to $1.25 an hour.

Immediately the union communicated with Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia, and with Frank Tichenor, the Mayor's representative in the recent dispute of New York's competitive unions.

Peace Conference Fails

An unsuccessful peace conference was held Tuesday with Charles C. Moskowitz, of Loew's; Major L. E. Thompson, RKO; Robert Weitman, Paramount; Al Reade, Fabian Theatres; Louis Frisch, Randforce Circuit; Gus Eyssell, of the RKO Music Hall, and a committee from Local 306, comprising President Basson, Frank Ruddock, Jack Kieley and Joe Kelvan.

The 11 theatrical unions which expressed their sympathy toward 306 members later in the week organized the Associated Theatrical Bodies of Greater New York.

Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York, called a special meeting of owner members to discuss the situation as it might relate to their agreements with the unions. Evidently they decided to await the outcome of the circuits' problem before acting.

Neither side had given ground up to press time, the unions refusing to negotiate a new agreement unless the circuits rescinded their original order, which the theatre affiliates refused to do.

Local 306 is the dominant American Federation of Labor union in the field. While it has engaged in recurrent strikes in New York, accompanied by spectacular picketing, especially in the Times Square area, these were directed at the independents, and in most cases were effected in opposition to the employment of members of the competitive Empire State and Allied Projectionists unions.

Relations with the national circuits have been peaceful for many years. But at strike headquarters private opinions were expressed that the fight might be extended nationally to theatres of the three circuits unless an amicable adjustment is made.

Eastman Earns $7,048,951; Votes Extra Dividend

Eastman Kodak increased dividend payments to stockholders this week by declaration of an extra 25 cents in addition to the regular quarterly $1.25 on the common stock.

The regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 a share also was declared on the preferred stock. Both dividends are payable October 1 to stockholders of record September 5.

The company earned a net of $7,048,951 for 24 weeks ended June 15, equal to $3.05 per share common. This compares with a net of $6,745,676, equal to $2.91 a share common, for the corresponding 1934 period.

Justin McCloskey Dies; In Industry 25 Years

Justin McCloskey, engaged in the motion picture business for 25 years, died last week in Hollywood.

Mr. McCloskey was a native of Orange, N. J., and spent his earlier years in the box office of Broadway theatres, Weber's theatre, the Grand Opera House and elsewhere. He became associated with Edison Pictures about 25 years ago, thus beginning a career which extended through the studios of many of the large producers. At his death he was associated with George O'Brien in the making of the latter's screen vehicles.

Act on Hecht-MacArthur Contract

Directors of Paramount Prod., Inc., were to meet Thursday in Jersey City to pass on contracts. One contract to be voted upon is that of Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur for two pictures at $250,000 each and an option on a third.

Casey Loses New Fight; Will Renew Pathe Attack

Justice Lauer in supreme court in New York on Saturday for the second time denied applications by Pat Casey for injunctions to restrain Pathe Exchange officials from placing the company's reorganization plan in effect and to prohibit sale by the company of a part of its DuPont Film Manufacturing Company stock. Reargument was made by Martin King, attorney for Mr. Casey.

Both applications had been denied earlier by the court, but Mr. Casey had applied for reargument, which was granted, but without change from the court's original rulings.

Mr. Casey's motion for an order staying Pathe from taking action in either instance, pending application to a higher court for permission to appeal, also was turned down by Justice Lauer.

However, Mr. Casey will renew his efforts to obtain an injunction to restrain Pathe from putting into effect the company's plan of reorganization on the grounds that the plan has been changed through the recent sale by Pathe of 1,400 shares of its Du Pont Film Manufacturing Company stock, Mr. King said. He contends in papers now being drawn for presentation to court in support of his application for an injunction that Pathe's assets have been materially altered by the sale and other developments since the reorganization plan was approved by an extraordinary meeting of Pathe stockholders last March.

CONGRESS TO PAVE THE WAY FOR NEW VOLUNTARY CODE AGREEMENTS

General Revision of Trade Commission Act May Be Launched This Session by Message to Congress from the President

40 Trade Pacts Submitted; Independents at Kansas City See Zoning as Definite Possibility for the New Season

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Herald Washington Bureau

General revision of the Trade Commission Act, to permit development of voluntary trade agreements more comparable to the outlawed recovery codes, with federal regulatory powers provided, is expected to be taken up by Congress and may be initiated before the end of the present session by a message from President Roosevelt asking for action.

The law under which the Federal Trade Commission operates has not been altered for more than 20 years and advisers to the President are said to have suggested that an internal reorganization of the commission and the granting of greater powers are advisable to enable that body properly to handle trade practice agreements as established voluntarily by industries.

Business executives are represented in Washington as feeling that greater scope should be given the socalled Group I rules—those which the Commission can enforce at law—so as to permit the inclusion of prohibitions on trade practices which, while definitely harmful to industry, never before have been outlawed by court decision.

At the same time, labor would welcome the grant of authority to the Commission to enforce wage and hour agreements included in voluntary codes. While continued observance of the former NRA code labor provisions may be included in the new agreements, as was done in the case of that proposed by the wholesale tobacco trade which now is pending, such a rule comes under Group II, which the Commission is powerless to enforce.

40 Agreements Submitted

More than 40 trade agreements have been submitted for consideration, including a proposed draft of a voluntary film code, and for the guidance of business groups which plan voluntary codes, the Commission this week made public an explanation of the types of rules included in each of the two groups, the first of which may be legally enforced and the second representing the views of the industry but enforceable only where a violation of law is involved.

"The unfair trade practices which are embraced in Group I rules are considered to be unfair methods of competition within the decisions of the Federal Trade Commission and the courts, "it was stated" and appropriate proceedings in the public interest will be taken by the Commission to prevent the use of such unlawful practices in or directly affecting interstate commerce.

"The trade practices embraced in Group II do not, per se, constitute violations of law. They are considered by the industry either to be unethical, uneconomical or otherwise objectionable; or to be conductive to sound business methods which the industry desires to encourage and promote.

"Such rules, when they conform to the above specifications and are not violative of law, will be received by the Commission, but the observance of said rules must depend upon and be accomplished through the cooperation of the members of the industry concerned, exercised in accordance with existing law. Where, however, such practices are used in such manner as to become unfair methods of competition in commerce or a violation of any law over which the Commission has jurisdiction, appropriate proceedings will be instituted by the Commission as in the case of violation of Group I rules."

$7,784,000 ALLOTTED FOR TRADE CENSUS

Definite assurance that the government will conduct a census of American business in order to ascertain its condition before and after the NRA and other New Deal landmarks came over the weekend with the allotment by the President of $7,784,000 World Relief funds for this purpose, the largest "white collar" project yet approved.

Thomas McGuire, former Detroit exhibitor and more recently with the Consumers' Advisory Board of the NRA at Washington, was selected as one of the experts to aid in the study of the film business.

The canvass will start January 2nd, although preliminaries are already under way, and will cover all business activities, excepting agriculture and manufacturing. It will be concentrated on the gathering of basic information on the number of individual operating units, employment, payrolls, receipts and such.

The Census Bureau earlier this year conducted such a survey, which admittedly was far from being accurate, including that part given on exhibition.

See Control Law Alternative

Failure of industry generally to take advantage of the voluntary trade agreement plan during the next few months would result in the making of plans for a new drive for control legislation in Congress next winter, it is thought at the Capital.

Several avenues of control already have been explored and there are pending in Congress measures under which the Government would regain its authority over labor conditions in those industries engaged at all in interstate commerce.

However, in the event of a general improvement in employment conditions next fall, there will be little sympathy in Congress with any move which might tend to reverse the upward trend.

No effort is anticipated during the remainder of the current session to put through any of the labor control bills pending.

Having a possible relation to any action taken by Congress in rejuvenating the Trade Commission Act so as to permit the development of voluntary code agreements is a bill introduced by Senator O'Mahoney, Wyoming, providing for the licensing and regulation of all business enterprises engaged in interstate commerce, which measure would be administered by the Federal Trade Commission. Basically the proposal would protect labor and maintain fair standards of competition. Also, capital surpluses and distribution of excess surpluses to stockholders would be restricted to allow inauguration of a profit-sharing plan for employees.

Because the bill requires the licensing of all business in any way connected with interstate commerce, it would include all producers and distributors and possibly exhibitors.

Meanwhile, from Kansas City, came word that zoning is considered by independent exhibitors to be a definite possibility there for the coming season.

Distributors, who usually start contacting independents about now, have not yet done so this year.

It is general talk among Kansas City independents that E. C. Rhoden, Fox Midwest Theatres head, is buying zoned protection, and distributors will make no move to sell independents until Fox closes its product deals. Mr. Rhoden will go to New York shortly to complete these together with his own contract arrangements with National Theatres.

Had Zoning 10 Years Ago

The latest system of zoning in Kansas City existed about 10 years ago. Under that system theatres that could buy protection got it in their zone.

M. B. Shanberg attempted to set up zones there the year before he left Kansas City theatre operation. At that time local independent exhibitors prepared to take the matter into court on a monopoly charge, it is understood, and Mr. Shanberg dropped the effort to zone.

Since then the procedure roughly has been as follows: Representatives of various types of houses would get together at the beginning of each season and determine the clearance schedule—so many days after downtown, so many back for each five-cent drop in admission, and so on—and then suggest the plan to distributors. This last season 20-cent houses were 14 days back of 25-cent houses, 15-cent, 21 to 35 days; 10-cent houses, 44 days.

There are no court precedents which would indicate that it would be illegal for Mr. Rhoden to zone the city. Through his buying deal, he could do so, so that 15-cent Fox houses would be able to buy protection over 20-cent house competition. However, such competition there could be expected to go immediately into court for relief, probably on a monopoly charge.

Independent exhibitors, though not at all in agreement among themselves, generally feel that admission price should be the basis of clearance. This would be all right if there were a true admission price effective in Kansas City. But with all but two or three suburban houses giving away prizes or something or other, many of them five and six nights a week, with double billings, and whatnot, such a true admission price no longer exists in Kansas City, all of which gives more weight to reports that buying of 1935-36 product will be by zones.

FRENCH EXHIBITORS WIN LONG FIGHT FOR LOWER STATE AND PAUPER TAX

Town Councils Receive Authority to Cut Pauper Assessment in Half; Provision to Bar Blind Booking Signed

Two Judiciary Directors Named to Supervise Pathe-Natan Activities; Three New Directors for GFFA (Gaumont)

by PIERRE AUTRE
Paris Representative

The proposed reduction of taxes on French motion picture theatres is now an accomplished fact. The decree lowering assessments on entertainments, which had been promised for long weeks by the finance ministry, was signed July 25th at a meeting of the ministries, with the president of the Republic attending. Film theatres chiefly are affected, and the decree is effective at once.

The state tax is reduced as was shown in the Herald issue of July 13th. Percentage is pared as well as the monthly scales according to net receipts. Provincial cinemas will continue to pay half as much state tax as the Paris Cinemas except that in theatres with net monthly receipts up to 10,000 francs the percentage cannot go below 2 per cent.

Here are the new state tax rates:

Net Monthly Receipts	State Tax Percentage Paris	State Tax Percentage Outside Paris
Up to 10,000 Francs....	%2	%2
10,000 to 30,000.......	5	2.5
30,000 to 50,000.......	10	5.0
50,000 to 100,000......	15	7.5
Over 100,000 Francs....	20	10.0

Article 2 of the decree reduces by 50 per cent, for the provinces, the state tax for motion picture theatres, bicycle races and dances; music halls, variety shows and café-concerts win a 50 per cent reduction of state tax regardless of location.

The pauper tax, which was 10 per cent on all kinds of entertainments, may be reduced. That is left to the town councils. If they trim the pauper tax they will have to find other means of raising the same funds.

Under Article 4 of the decree, all contracts concerning public projection of a motion picture will not be available until three full days after the trade show or the first public showing. This is for the purpose of halting blind booking.

Pauper Tax Cut Awaited

It is considered almost certain that the Town Council of Paris will reduce the pauper tax by 50 per cent.

In the case where the pauper tax would stay the same—10 per cent on net receipts—an exhibitor of Paris would pay on 200,000 francs of monthly net receipts 50,700 francs for all taxes instead of 60,250 francs, which would mean a reduction of nearly 17 per cent.

If the pauper tax is reduced by 50 per cent, that is, becomes 5 per cent on net receipts, a Paris Exhibitor would pay on 200,000 francs receipts 40,700 francs instead of 60,250, a reduction of 33 per cent on the whole previous tax.

In some provincial towns exhibitors will have to fight the councils to win a lower pauper tax, but it is believed that they will be successful in many places.

The decree as a whole is a victory for the trade organizations, which have fought so long and so hard for an easing of the tax burden.

The Paris Trade Court has appointed a second judiciary director to join Mr. Pioton in taking over control and attending the board meetings of Pathé Natan. These two directors, who represent the interests of the shareholders, have decided to drop all departments not showing a profit. The Natan brothers have retained their offices but of course have little power now. The company has stopped nearly all its activities. Only the studios and the printing and developing laboratories and factories at Joinville are operating. Productions made at Joinville are by independents who rent the studios.

Edouard Worms, the French financier who at first promised to help Mr. Natan and later refused to continue, has been instructed by the Trade Court to stay in the companies and carry out his pledges.

Many employees have been dismissed and a number of offices and departments closed. Pathé Natan is not under receivership. The situation was caused largely by the depression, and large expenses.

Three of the best houses of Pathé Natan in Paris are closed: The Empire (Variety-Cinema), Moulin Rouge and the Victor Hugo.

GFFA Directors Named

While Pathé Natan is seeking to avoid receivership, the GFFA organization (Gaumont) is trying to emerge from its ten months receivership.

Paul Keim, president of GFFA resigned a few days ago. At the suggestion of the minister of finances, the Board of GFFA has appointed three new directors: General Targe to be president of the board, Georges Ricou as company president and Paul Devinat as director.

These new appointments show that the Government is going forward with its plan to take entirely in its hands the GFFA concern. The three new directors are mainly political men. Mr. Devinat four years ago was general secretary of GFFA. General Targe has always been a political officer and is sustained by the Left parties. So is Mr. Ricou, who for a short time was general manager of the Opera-Comique. General Targe, who is a personal friend of Marcel Regnier, minister of finances, will represent that ministry. Georges Ricou represents the ministry of national education and Mr. Devinat the ministry of trade.

The Parisian independent press, and especially the National one, protests these appointments, calling it just one more investigation by the State into private affairs.

GFFA Production Halts

The GFFA case is unusual. Five years ago André Vincent, president of the Board of the Banque National de Credit (BNC) aided the GFFA concern. Germain Martin, also a part of the NBC and formerly minister of finances, also had big interests in GFFA. The BNC placed 300 million francs ($20,000,000) in the company. Later the BNC had to close its doors. Mr. Martin got the Government to set afloat the BNC under the name Banque Nationale pour le Commerce et l'Industrie. BNC came under receivership.

A group, headed by the publications editor, Charles Fasquelle, has tried to get control of the company in association with Thomson Houston. It was reported that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sought to take over Gaumont but that the Government had refused because it was a foreign company.

In the six first months of 1935 GFFA released only one feature, the dubbed French version of "Nell Gwyn." The company still has its studios in Paris and Nice and its cinema theatres. The studios are rented to independent producers. GFFA production has been stopped for one year and it has no more pictures to distribute.

The first French picture in color "Jeune Filles a Marier" ("Girls to be Married") is now showing first-run at the Aubert-Palace where, four and a half years ago "The Jazz Singer" was exhibited. The new production was made with the French additive process, Francita-Realita. Colors are rather good but with blue predominant. The producers of this picture, which includes some beautiful effects, specially outdoor scenes on the French Riviera, erred in choosing as the story a vulgar comedy with bedrooms and half dressed girls. Color adds nothing in such a picture.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

From the lips of Susan Flippen, of Lexington, Kentucky, John Chapman encountered the story about several of Lexington's youngsters who had been out on a party from which one of their number, Woody, had developed the hiccups. The kids had a grand time trying to get Woody cured, stopping men on the street and saying, "Please, mister, Woody has the hiccups. Will you please scare him?"

With true southern courtesy the strangers would always agree, and turning to Woody would say, "Boo!"

But Woody's hiccups remained. The party even stood in front of a department store and begged the dummies in the window to please scare Woody. And he still went "hic!" three times a minute.

The gang finally wandered into a hotel lobby and encountered there a man. "Please," they begged, "Woody has the hiccups. Will you scare him?"

"Certainly," said the stranger. And he went "Boo!" to Woody. Miraculously, Woody's hiccups stopped on the spot. The youngsters went on their way, unaware that the stranger who so effectively scared Woody was Theodore Dreiser!

But he did call in the reporters to demonstrate how a genuwyne Ramos gin fizz should be concocted. Not long after came a wire from the Senator's brother down south to the effect that their granddad never invented anything, much less a Ramos gin fizz.

THE SMALLEST ROLLER SKATES in the world; the Lord's Prayer engraved on the head of a pin; a tiny grain of rice that serves as the landing field for a tiny airplane; a sewing machine so small you can hardly see it. . . .

These are some of the interesting things Jules Charbneau, world traveler, is exhibiting publicly in the grand lounge of Radio City Music Hall in New York—the largest collection of tiniest things in the largest movie theatre in the world.

Mr. Charbneau, a scholarly man with twinkling eyes, has been collecting these "smallest" things for 35 years. If it ever seemed that a nit on a gnat's wing was pretty small, you ought to see the tiny objects he's assembled.

He has a hazelnut shell containing 3,000 silver spoons, and a willy-nilly nut from India—it looks like and is the size of a cheery pit—inside of which are 33 ivory elephants. There were 36 elephants but three were spilled on a rug in the home of Bombay's Mayor and were lost in the piling.

Mr. Charbneau will write his autograph for you with the smallest fountain pen in the world, one and one-half inches long, and he'll show you the smallest pistol—the size of a tiny sliver, using cartridges so small that they can hardly be seen. He has the smallest watch in the world, costing $10,000. It took him 20 years to consummate the purchase of the little pin on the head of which the Lord's Prayer is engraved. There are 24,000 objects in the collection, gathered from all corners of the world.

No history about the beginnings of the motion picture would be complete without a chapter about Commodore James Stuart Blackton. Sketchily it starts in 1896, when he met Thomas A. Edison and drew cartoons before the Kinetoscope camera, which was one of the very first pictures made by Edison. Then he wrote the story for the New York World of the first public showing of Vitascope at Koster and Bial's Music Hall in New York on April 20, 1896. The following year he bought a projection machine from Mr. Edison and toured on the road. He took the first pictures of the Spanish-American War; photographed and showed the first newsreel for William A. Brady and Proctor's Theatres, in 1898, and then fitted up the first movie studio on the roof of the Morse Building, Nassau Street, in New York.

Pioneering in the production of some of the first two, three and five-reel pictures led him to the general directorship of production for the Vitagraph Company of America, which company he headed for a quarter of a century, until Warner Brothers bought the property, in 1926, in order to acquire a national distributing system. Too, he organized and was the first president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, a trade association ancestor of the present day Hays organization of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

The other day, after having been on relief rolls for some time, Commodore James Stuart Blackton was given a job on a Federal Work Relief project—and in Hollywood, California; the heart of motion picture production!

CALLS FOR FIRST-RUNS BRING FAINT ECHOES

One Jersey City Top Theatre Joins "Journal's" Demand for Day and Date Film Showing

Amid the clamor of the Jersey Journal in Jersey City, N. J., for day and date showings with New York, only one of the three first-run theatres in that city is willing to adopt the demanded policy, and that, the State, operated by Skouras, is helpless in the matter.

George P. Skouras has informed the JOURNAL that it is impossible to obtain the "new deal in films" that the newspaper is campaigning for because of the protection demands of the Broadway theatres. Other circuit executives agree with Mr. Skouras that the demands are impossible to meet, but their explanations are different. Warner's Stanley and Loew's Jersey City are the other first-runs on the Jersey side of the Hudson river.

A. D. Mackie, dramatic editor and motion picture critic of the Journal, this week charged a "conspiracy" on the part of the large distributors. He said the public and city officials are enlisting in the fight.

Threatens Other Procedure

"If we cannot do it by persuasion, we will use other means," he said. "We can make the public anti-theatre conscious. However, we will not urge boycott."

Mr. Mackie pointed out that Jersey City formerly had day and date runs with New York, and that not long ago the Warner house played "Flirtation Walk" and "Go Into Your Dance" in advance of Manhattan. However, the circuit maintains this did not prove the best business policy.

The Jersey Journal conducted a similar campaign two years ago, but unsuccessfully, and has revived the agitation at this time because new season product contracts are about to be signed. The basis on which the paper protests the city's second-run status was detailed in the HERALD for July 27.

The only question in the fight, said Mr. Mackie, is: "Will Jersey City get motion pictures for showing in the ace playhouses of the city at the same time that these films are offered in New York City?"

Direct Reply to Plea Asked

In a follow-up questionnaire, film executives and distributors are asked to make a direct reply to the plea. This questionnaire inquiries if any action has been taken on the appeal, whether the recipient is in favor of "a new deal in films for Jersey City" or has done anything to bring it about, and "is it impossible to get this new deal, and if so, why?"

It adds: "Your reply is awaited in order to determine the next step as Jersey City people are insisting on a new deal in films. Of course, you understand that the entire city is backing this movement for the breaking down of the so-called New York protection clause. Mayor Frank Hague, the Chamber of Commerce, city organizations and residents of the city are all united in this movement."

Up to the middle of this week only three replies had been received. Mr. Skouras, as noted, declared himself in favor of the move, saying that he has been attempting for the last four years to obtain first runs independently of New York City, and adding that because of the demands of the Broadway theatres the film companies have no recourse in the matter. Most of the companies and executives queried are ignoring the campaign.

Republic Film Exchanges, Inc., replied: "You will be pleased to learn that we are laying our plans for the coming season in a manner to give Jersey City first run pictures. We will do everything within our power to obtain the privilege from New York theatres to limit the protection against Jersey City."

Clark Statement Challenged

John D. Clark, general manager of distribution for Fox Film Corporation, however, did not see the possibility of realizing the Jersey City demands. He gave as his reasons the scarcity of prints, the established practice of larger communities obtaining prior run and protection clauses in existing contracts with New York theatres, according to a report by Mr. Mackie.

Mr. Mackie said that in an open letter to Mr. Clark published in the Jersey Journal it was shown that Fox did play films in Jersey City day and date with New York. That was in 1931 when the old Roxy was a Fox house.

It was pointed out that it would be to the advantage of the Skouras circuit to obtain day and date availability with New York City since besides the State there are five Skouras-operated subsequent houses in Jersey City. The large circuits explain that the Skouras circuit has no affiliated Broadway houses to protect.

New York protection over Jersey City usually is a maximum of two weeks, but it varies in accordance with booking arrangements. In the case of the Skouras house, however, the clearance is 10 days after the RKO Music Hall, seven days after the Roxy and an equal period following the Paramount.

While Warner and Loew's both contend that prior or simultaneous run with New York would be disadvantageous because the advertising force of the Manhattan showing would be lost, in the Skouras camp it is maintained that New York advertising and exploitation is of little effect in Jersey and, furthermore, adequate coverage can be obtained through the local daily and weekly papers as well as newspapers in the adjacent towns in Hudson county. The Jersey City theatres use some of the outlying papers now. On the other hand, managers of the Loew's and Warner houses point out that the New York papers have a large circulation throughout the Jersey area.

First-Runs Within 500 Yards

In the matter of coverage, the Jersey Journal, an evening daily, has a circulation of almost 39,000, according to the latest audit, while the city has a population of more than 300,000, with over 650,000 in the thickly populated county, a total population of about a million in the area from which Jersey City theatres draw their patronage.

The three first-runs, incidentally, are grouped within 500 yards of each other on Journal Square. Seating capacities are: Warners' Stanley, 4,400; Loew's Jersey City, 3,200; Skouras' State, 2,200. Warner has one subsequent run in the city, while Loew's have none. The clearance between first runs and first subsequent run and between the subsequents in each price classification is 14 days.

Oscar Doob, advertising and publicity director for Loew's theatres, pointed out the situation is no different from that existing with respect to similarly situated large and small centers, such as in Philadelphia and Chicago, and as typified in the protection held by Kansas City, Missouri, over Kansas City, Kan., where the downtown sections of the two cities are separated by only a short ride.

Mr. Doob insisted it was a "physical impossibility" to grant the Jersey City demands, and said that in fact the protection is less than the usual between first and subsequent run situations. To the argument that large cities have day and date or even prior run with New York, Mr. Doob replied these do not impinge on New York and that there is no comparison. Mr. Mackie and Mr. Skouras contended that Jersey City should have the same treatment as Brooklyn, which often has showings simultaneously with New York.

Proposal Called Impracticable

Mr. Doob asserted that the Capitol, Loew's Broadway show window, has 14 days protection over Jersey City, and that frequently a picture in its second week at the Capitol is in its first week at the Jersey City outlet.

Mort Blumenstock, advertising and publicity head for Warner theatres, also held the proposal impracticable from a business point of view, and said that the protection situation affects not only Jersey City but all of east Jersey.

"We have found day and date runs in communities adjacent to New York suffer because of the lack of buildup which they normally obtain from the New York showings," he said. "We spend a lot of money setting up a picture in New York City with the thought in mind that a large surrounding area will benefit by the exploitation."

Mr. Blumenstock agreed that there have been prior showings of Warner films in Jersey City, but only to "plug a hole" in bookings. He said legally there is no protection over Jersey and simultaneous or even prior runs are permissible, but it is not a desirable business practice chiefly because of the advertising angle. When the Jersey City Warner house shows a picture depends on booking conditions, he said, sometimes three or four weeks after New York. A logical clearance, he believes, would be 10 days or two weeks.

Local Pride, Says Van Schmus

W. G. Van Schmus, managing director of New York's Radio City Music Hall, saw the demand as purely a matter of local pride. He said the Music Hall maintains protection over communities as distant as 150 miles away, and that its contracts provide for showings prior to Trenton, N. J., and some towns in Connecticut.

It was pointed out that since many films are held two or three weeks in New York and even longer, if Jersey City had day and date booking there would be a shortage of first run product for that city and numerous films would have to be spotted in ahead of New York. It is said this is not advisable because of the proximity of the two situations. While some circuit executives admit that Jersey City has a logical argument in that it should receive a treatment equal with other cities of its size, at the same time they insist that the large Broadway investments must be protected. It is pointed out generally that thousands from adjacent territory seek their entertainment in New York.

Not infrequently Broadway houses waive their protection and Jersey City gets first run films immediately after the close of the New York showing, it was said by a circuit manager.

Meanwhile, the Jersey Journal, cognizant of the power of the press, is determined to push the campaign until some results are achieved.

The Crusades

(Paramount—DeMille)

Spectacle Romance

"The Crusades" is one of the finest things ever presented to the exhibitor by the production branch of the moving picture industry.

Synonymous always with all that the name Cecil B. DeMille stands for in relation to mighty, colorful pageantry and spectacle, massive settings and accoutrements, it tells a story that never will die. It is the composite story of several of the early Crusades. It's an inspiring martial story, powerful, but humanly understandable, that transcends all racial or religious prejudices. The kings and princes of medieval Europe, their Christian fervor aroused by the simple pleas of The Hermit, a holy man, combining their armed forces to wrest dominion of Jerusalem and the Holy Sepulchre from the Saracens.

With that to accommodate the requirements of stirring spectacle, there is a love story as modern in concept as could be desired, yet as beautiful and eternal as love itself.

Both resolve themselves into a welter of seething turmoil, with a triumphant climax for each. The gates of Jerusalem are opened for all time to come to all the Christians of the world who come in peace. Yet not by force of arms is this Christian dream realized. Only through the tolerance and sympathetic understanding of the infidel, Saladin, is access granted followers of Christ to the infinite symbol of their faith.

But one man is forever barred; Richard the Lion Hearted, King of England, whose vow that he would rest his conquering sword on the Holy Sepulchre could not prevail over Saladin's oath to Allah that conquest never would gain the Christian king's objective. Richard's reward, the love story of the picture, is Berengaria, who, married to his sword, crowned with his own crown, captured by Saladin, is surrendered to him to return to England as his beloved queen.

Epic stories but simple moving stories, endowed with a majestic and poetic dignity, they are drama that should not fail to leave an unforgettable impression upon those who witness the picture. It would be a difficult task in limited space to list all they offer to engage patron and showmanship attention. Yet a few of the highlights are illustrative: the voice of the Hermit crying his holy cause through the kingdoms of Christian civilization; the assembly of the armored hosts and all their ponderous fighting paraphernalia; the menace to the cause of conflicting political ambitions, fears and jealousies; Richard spurning the hand of Alice, daughter of the powerful Phillip of France; the Crusaders on march across Central Europe; Richard, in command, facing rebellion, bargaining with the King of Navarre for food for the famished soldiers, accepting betrothal to the unseen Berengaria in return for subsistence and marrying her to his sword; the fierce crash of armored legions beneath the walls of Acre; the inhuman butchery of hell's fury let loose when fanatics clash in siege; then man's humanity to man and the glorious triumph of each cause and the consummation of Richard's love for Berengaria.

DeMille and Paramount have done their part of the job. They have placed the obligation of bringing the entertainment worth of their production to public attention—intelligently—in the hands of exhibitors. Give "The Crusades" the best thought and best effort at command. It deserves and needs both. Essentially it is that kind of valuable screen merchandise that requires one to work his head off to make the public believe the truth.

The materials are there with which to work with dignity, intelligence and inspiration. While there are names to conjure with, the production is the thing to sell.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Alice Adams

(RKO Radio)

Romantic Drama

Not since "Morning Glory" has the screen seen such a Katharine Hepburn or such a story for her. In that dual fact are concentrated the show's showmanship value and promise of audience entertainment to charm the theatregoing public. Not that there are not other assets. There are many; found in the fine and intelligent direction, the inspired efforts of the supporting cast and the heart-warming character of the Booth Tarkington original.

"Alice Adams" is the story, as modern as today, of millions of girls, shop girls, laundry workers, stay-at-home ugly ducklings who dream grand dreams and while dreaming are continually face to face with all the numbing practical actualities of life as they really live it. It possesses that quality of honesty and realism which, reaching right down from the screen, will convince many of those girls who see it that Alice is living their lives. They'll know the same disappointments that she did; they'll suffer as she suffers and probably in the same self-satisfied way; they'll imagine her tragedies theirs, her romantic triumph theirs.

Natural in every phase, its human interest becoming more tender in emotional appeal with each succeeding sequence, "Alice Adams" is the story of a grand romance, told against the background of a turbulent domestic drama. Poor Alice, daughter of an ailing father and a nagging mother, plans to attend a party. Passed up by every boy in town, but knowing that somewhere her Prince Charming awaits, she goes with brother Frank, to become a deserted wall-flower as he prefers to shoot crap with washroom attendants. Arthur Russell comes along; her heart skips a beat or two as the man of her dreams dances with her. Then comes the beauty of a shy courtship.

The dinner party for Mr. Russell, played exactly in the manner that a world of mothers and daughters anxious to make an impression prepare it, as often happens turns into a seriocomic tragedy which only the gentility of good breeding can excuse. Adams quits his old employer Lamb, goes into the glue-making business, under the prodding of his wife, on a shoestring. Brother Walter, a modern slicker in a small town, is in trouble and falsifies his books in Lamb's company. There is a clash between Adams and Lamb, Alice making Lamb understand that anything her father or brother might have done was only done for her. Lamb understands, reinstates Adams. Russell, waiting outside and understanding more than anyone else, takes Alice into his arms.

Showmen have only one thing to do in connection with the presentation of this attraction: that is to convince their clientele they are offering an attraction more than worthy of their time and money. Every means at hand to do this, either in publicity or exploitation, should be exerted. It does not seem otherwise than that those who see the picture will constitute themselves enthusiastic press agents in its behalf.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

She Gets Her Man

Comedy

Dyed in the wool farcical foolish nonsense, this picture holds much to intrigue the interest of audiences who like to laugh and don't care much how the laughs are precipitated. It also holds much to engage showmanship-exploitation minds. In essence the picture is a satirical burlesquing of the G-men and gangster type of picture. Played entirely for comedy, with plenty to tickle anybody's risibilities in dialogue, action and situations, there is never a serious moment in it. As such it's a laugh fest moving at a hectic and ridiculous tempo from start to finish.

Esmeralda and Elmer run a little country hot dog stand. Innocently involved in an attempted bank robbery, Esmeralda foils the bandits as in a fainting she falls upon buttons that let off tear gas bombs and all sorts of alarms. Her exploit is picked up by wire services and Esmeralda becomes a sort of national hero. Publicity agent Windy, sitting in his office without a client and not much to do, contrives to take over the destinies of the mousy little woman and establishes her. She rounds the country on lecture tours as a super apostle of law and order.

Her activities play hob with the business of Flash, racketeer, and he causes his henchmen to kidnap her. With the nation in a fury of excitement, Flash proposes to Esmeralda that, inasmuch as she has been such a thorn in the gangsters' sides, she can make oddles of dough by joining up with them as the brains of the gang. All the mobsters are gathered to meet their new chief. But instead of delivering the talk that Flash prepared for her she reverts to the speech Windy taught her on crime does not pay, with the result that all the thugs tearfully march to the police station to surrender.

Crime wiped out, Esmeralda returns to her Elmer and wayside hash house.

Sell this with the promise that it will make anybody laugh either at the foolishness of the story, the acting of the principals, or the way in which it is played. Opportunities for unique exploitation are almost unlimited.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Man on the Flying Trapeze

(Paramount)

Comedy

Here is W. C. Fields' distinctive type of comedy at its best, and the exhibitor need feel no restrictions in promising a rollicking hour of fun. The timing of the laugh-provoking situations has been improved, too, so that while there is an abundance of comedy situations and lines, they are spaced sufficiently to make them available to everyone in the audience.

Exploitation of a Fields production concentrates logically upon emphasizing the highlights of his fun-making. He is the star, the entire firmament, of Fields' pictures. Other stars there may be—Mary Brian as his sympathizing daughter, is the feminine lead in this film, and Kathleen Howard has considerably more to do as the nagging wife—but the comedy rests almost solely in Fields' own antics. And the highlight of this comedy is his encounter with an ever-increasing host of traffic cops, a situation that piles up laugh after laugh.

The title has nothing to do, literally, with the picture. It is not a circus picture. There is no trapeze in it. It is a labeling of Fields' non-stop dizziness and that is all.

It's all about Fields' attempt to get to a wrestling match. He's a bookkeeper, with his own unique filing system, which consists of piling one letter upon another with no favoritism—and then trusting to a good memory. Besides his forever-scolding wife, there's a rasping mother-in-law and her shiftless son, and then there's his own daughter. The ne'er-do-well steals his ticket to the wrestling match, but he goes anyway, after getting clear of the office with the good old mother-in-law-died fabrication, which sends wreaths and condolences to a surprised family. On the way to the stadium his troubles begin when he crosses the intersection line at a red light. The cop orders him over to the curb, takes out his book. It's a "no-parking" curb and a motorcycle takes the count as Fields pulls up. It's another cop's bike. That's the beginning of a richly comical situation. Finally, after a puncture and a chase after an escaping wheel, he gets to the door of the stadium, just in time to be bowled over by one of the wrestlers who has been thrown out of the hall by the champion.

It's a picture for all the family.—Rovelstad, New York.

The Student's Romance

(Associated British)

Musical Romance

German student life in 1725, against the legendary background of Heidelberg, is the basis of this musical. There is very fair story value of the conventional "bohemian" type, many of the song numbers are tuneful, and it will probably go down well enough with audiences to whom a conventional sentimental appeal means more than polish of production. The technique is definitely inferior to that which audiences expect nowadays.

The story is that Max Brandt, a student of music at the university, rescues a pretty girl from a drifting punt and falls in love with her. Actually she is the Princess Helene but he does not guess her identity. Max lives with his friend Karl at the inn kept by the pretty Veronika. Out of a mixture of good nature and affection, she pays Max's debts without his knowledge.

Helene accompanies her father, the Grand Duke, on a formal visit to the university. Max recognizes the girl whom he secretly loves. He persuades her to preside at a students' "Bierabend." The Grand Duke, learning of his daughter's infatuation, tells her of the scandal stories that Max is living on Veronika's money. Seeking her sweetheart, Helene finds him kissing Veronika, whom he is congratulating on her betrothal to Karl. She consents to a marriage of convenience arranged by her father, but when Veronika's engagement to Karl is announced, runs from the Palace and joins Max in a procession of singing students.

It must be sold as a romance of student life in the famous German university town. The promise of tuneful numbers is justified. It is a program item and cannot be put forward as anything better. Carol Goodner is the best of the cast. Allan, London.

Produced by British International Pictures. Distrbiuted by Associated British Pictures. Directed by Otto Kantureck. Adapted from the Operetta "I Lost My Heart in Heidelberg." Every Night at Eight

(Paramount-Wanger)

Comedy Drama

Anyway this is looked at, either as an audience entertainment feature or an exploitation vehicle in which showman honestly can sink their teeth, it has all that is required. The title, first, can be made to mean something concrete; it is one in which alert showman easily can find almost no end of business stimulating stunts, gags and clever catchlines. There are good screen names, in the principal parts, all so cast that their most appealing talents are continually on display. Supporting names are of more than ordinary value, with the inclusion of quite a few widely known specialists such as The Radio Rogues, Harry Barris, Dillon Ober and his drums and Florence Gill. Production values, in all the picture's phases, accentuate the worth of story and personnel assets. To keep all this moving is a story that everybody can understand and appreciate inasmuch as it has something particular for all classes and ages. It's a story intensely interesting, in which none of the accepted standards have been ignored, and there is romance, drama, comedy, surprise, music, suspense and colorful thrill.

Put together in workmanlike fashion, the picture places ordinary human beings, subject to all the human ambitions and shortcomings, into an understandable situation. To get the yarn underway, it makes use of the topical radio broadcast idea, which is lead up to in a natural way. Dixie, Susan and Daphne are three entertainers, the pride of their employers' entertainment programs. They get so good that they believe what their friends say about them, and then they're fired.

Comes the amateur radio tryout. As the Radio Rogues, Barris and Chicken Lady do their stuff, there is a fun packed and liberal insight into just how such programs are produced. One of the girls, Susan, passes out from hunger, and the trio are prevented from appearing, but in the person of Tops Cardona, a good samaritan who wins the contest, she is fed. Romance between the two is born. Tops, a smart guy in the ways of showmanship, decides to train and teach the girls so that they will be big numbers. Held to rigid discipline, the three musketeers, who have the one for all and all for one complex, get themselves in a dither about Tops' loving Susan.

But on standing on their own, they play hookey and go on a swank yachting party. Fearfully, as they return to a night club, they hear the master of ceremonies announcing their number. Almost panic stricken they dash to the studio to become sensations, and very glad that Tops loves Susan.

The picture is fast moving, gay and buoyant. Though George Raft is the top name and he delivers in a more than pleasing manner, audiences probably will acclaim Patsy Kelly as the star of the show. Her comedy is the kind that just dares anyone not to laugh. While that and the other specialty material keep the show going at a speedy pace, the romantic angle is so inserted that everything is held together in convincing style.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Dante's Inferno

(Fox)

Drama

Utilizing a long famous title, attaching it to a definitely modern story, Fox has produced a picture which takes the original Dante's Inferno idea in its significance, its implications, its pointing of a moral, and has applied it to the affairs of men and women of today. There is, at the same time, something of an attempt to picturize the Inferno as Dante pictured it in words, as he was guided through the lower regions by Virgil. That attempt lends a measure of spectacle, of the expected fantastic nature to the picture, rather as an interlude in the dramatic story of a man and his wife, and the conflict that ensues when he permits nothing to stand in the way of his acquisition of wealth and power.

There is novelty, and something for the exhibitor to sell, in the story phase which finds Dante's Inferno as a carnival concession, which is taken over by the ambitious wanderer, and becomes the first step in his rise to a power in the entertainment and gambling world which almost ends in disaster and points its all important lesson.

The picture has its novelty, its measure of spectacle, but basically it is a drama of human conduct, rather cut to a familiar screen pattern, only differing in what might be termed its surroundings, the unusual manner in which it points its conclusion, that there are other things in the world than money and power, more important and more lasting things.

The leading cast name, that of Spencer Tracy, is strong, to be emphasized in the selling. In support are Claire Trevor, Henry B. Walthall, as, in a sense, the figure which points the moral, and Alan Dinehart. The selling, of course, may well make the most of the picture's title, with, however, an indication that that title, and the idea it conveys, is rather a background for a wholly modern story.

Tracy, stoker aboard ship, is fired, lands on a Midway, and meets Walthall, who helps him. Walthall, with his niece, Miss Trevor, operates his Dante's Inferno, a concession in which he has built caverns and grottos as word-pictured by Dante. He is a devotee of the Italian poet, his mild-mannered hope that by pointing out what Dante meant to teach, he might aid others in guiding their lives. Tracy goes to work for him, revolutionizes his barking methods, and puts the Inferno on a real paying basis. He marries Miss Trevor, builds a bigger and better Inferno, and in so doing causes the suicide of a man who had stood in his way.

From then on his progress is rapid, but his affection for his wife and love for his small son remains undiminished. Finally, his huge gambling and entertainment pier is called unsafe. He bribes the building inspector, the place crashes and the inspector kills himself. Walthall is hurt, tells Tracy of the Dante poem, which is reenacted. On trial, Tracy denies the bribe, and his wife's testimony saves him. But she leaves him, considering their happiness ruined by his conduct. Tracy goes on, putting all his money in a floating gambling palace. Set to start, a strike would delay things, but Tracy orders an inexperienced crew hired.

Tracy's son had been brought to visit him, without his mother's knowledge. The wild party aboard turns into a frantic panic when fire breaks out. The crew deserts, and Tracy, going to the engine room, is able to assist in beaching the ship, saving those aboard. His lesson learned, a reconciliation follows.

It is material for adult audiences alone and may best be sold by concentration on the dramatic story, and the implications in the title. —Aaronson, New York.

Keystone Hotel

(Vitaphone)

Entertaining

The pie throwing era of the early silent comedy days is revived in this two-reel comedy reminiscent of the old Keystone days. It is replete with old-timers, among them Ben Turpin, Ford Sterling, Chester Conklin, Hank Mann, Marie Prevost, Vivien Oakland. Ben Turpin, in the role of a count, visits Keystone Hotel to judge a beauty contest. Intimidated on all sides, he chooses the gangster's sweetheart as the winner, but in presenting the cup to the victor he unwittingly hands it to a maid of the hotel, precipitating an avalanche of pies, in which the entire cast participates.—Running time, 15 minutes.

Excursions in Science No. 1

(Bondy)

Fair

Mildly interesting is this General Electric picture in a series aiming to bring the marvels of science before the public as entertainment and in a form readily understandable. In this last respect the film itself speaks the layman's language perhaps better than the narrator. Subjects showed reactions of mineral oil in water, under various treatments, the action of oil upon rotating machinery, and the effect of light upon objects under varying conditions, the principle of the photoelectric cell, the last-named perhaps most spectacular to the average patron.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Stranger Than Fiction No. 13

Good Travelogue

Several unusual bits of news oddities in pictures are presented in this issue. There's the machine that cracks 400 eggs a minute and separates yolks from whites, the Texan who owns an entire county and has his own kingdom, a one-man electric plant, a railroad tunnel that is put to bed each night with its own doors. Then there's the launch system that takes children to and from school in Oregon, a blood transfusion for a lion, a girl baseball star, an outboard motorboat on springs, wooden handkerchiefs, the woman manager of a zoo.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Phil Spitalny's All Girl Orchestra

(Vitaphone)

Tuneful

Entertaining and tuneful is this orchestral number, featuring Phil Spitalny and his all girl band. Opening with the melody, "Running Wild," the orchestra next plays the "Lullaby of Broadway" and "La Paloma." During the last-named number Maurine and Norva are seen doing the Bolero dance routine in silhouette. The subject on the whole is very entertaining.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Foxy Fox

Amusing

A novel and amusing cartoon in the Paul Terry-Toon series, this burlesques the traditional fox hunt, notable in England. Derricks are used to hoist the corpulent riders on their horses, while the fox walks out to the mark after treatment in his dressing room. The gun goes off, the race is on, and the fox leads dogs and riders a merry chase, finally returning to the starting line a winner, to enjoy the plaudits of the crowd. A good cartoon.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Going Places No. 12

Fair

There is a fair amount of freshness to this Lowell Thomas travelogue. First are views of Mexico City, the temples, churches and sacrificial altars, then in contrast the modern city, its feminine beauty, and the market places. The various gardens of the nations in Radio City are next pictured. Finally there is the boy lion-tamer, Manuel King, a subject seen before in newsreel but here expanded to take in an introduction into his schoolroom and his play hours.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Armies of the World

(Fox)

Good

One of the excellent Adventures of the News Cameraman series, this is interesting material, detailing as it does something of the activities at the moment of various armies of the world. It would seem to indicate that the armies of the world are in a fine state of preparedness, ready for anything at any moment. An interesting subject, particularly in view of the critical state of affairs in certain quarters of Europe and elsewhere.—Running time, 10 minutes.

His Last Fling

Weak

Reminiscent of the slapstick of ancient silent days, weak because of age of theme and action and scarcely perceptibly enlivened by dialogue, here Sterling Holloway struggles in vain to extract some measure of fun from the story. It starts with ye olde tyme situation: a girl selling lingerie and Holloway seeing only what is revealed when her own skirt becomes caught on the desk. It continues on to some two-way dialogue provoked by mirrors, thence to the blind date night club party which brings his fiancee face to face with him, and finally some gallivanting around an apartment while his girl brandishes a pistol.—Running time, 20 minutes.

SUMMER CAMPS ENTER CHILD FILM MOVEMENT

Special Guides Supplied to Camp Counselors for Study Groups One Evening Weekly

The national trend in educational fields to develop in the juvenile mind a knowledge of motion picture values so that he may choose his motion picture recreation wisely, and to cultivate an appreciation of the socalled "better" motion picture, was carried outward from the classroom to the summer camp this year when the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures and affiliated Better Films groups in the field, together with educators and various women's organizations, instituted an eight-weeks motion picture study program for the millions of American children now on holiday at the hundreds of camps from coast to coast.

One Evening a Week

The method is simple, embracing discussion groups after supper one evening weekly, led by the camp counselor or a leader chosen by the children's group, until August 19th.

Special guides are supplied the camp counselor, starting with the topic: "What are your favorite movies?" On this subject there is a four-page bibliography of "Selected Reading" for the counselor's use. The participating students study in this connection from a 40-page printed pamphlet which catalogs all the best motion pictures of the past season, giving the principles of selection, audience suitability, and a short synopsis of each film.

The catalog is divided into: animal and travel films, costume and local color pictures, foreign language films, historical personages, light comedies and dramas, musical comedies and operettas, mysteries and melodramas, social problem films, sophisticated dramas and comedies, westerns and short subjects.

"Shopping for movies" will be the second discussion, based on the results of questionnaires circulated among the youngsters concerning their film shopping habits and the reasons for their cultivation.

Next will be a discussion to stimulate an interest in previews, to be followed by a discourse about "Distinguishing movie advertising from reviewing."

Talent To Be Studied

The camp groups will study motion picture directors and their work as taken from a list of "exceptional photoplays," and the work of actors and actresses, especially the value of the player to the motion picture.

In August the plan will be concluded with the subject of amateur motion pictures, on the 12th, and "Current Films," on the 19th.

The idea has the backing of Howard Braucher, secretary of the National Recreation Association; Clyde Fisher, former curator of visual instruction, American Museum of National History; Goodwin Watson, Teachers College, Columbia University, and Lee F. Hanmer, director, recreation department, Russell Sage Foundation.

Mr. Watson believes the plan will give the children "the principles for appreciating genuine merit." In this he has the support of Mr. Hanmer, who predicts that the general idea "should be helpful in developing the increasing number of discriminating motion picture patrons."

The Board will undertake to gather from the camps detailed reports on results at the end of the season.

Standard Density Tablets Prepared for Academy

A set of standard density tablets, to which instruments in all laboratories will be calibrated, is being prepared, with a thin coating of platinum sputtered on a glass base, at the Mount Wilson Observatory and the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena, a Research Council subcommittee on improvement in release print quality said this week in its annual report to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

The Council plans to place release printing data on the negative film, in a space provided in the Academy Standard Release Print Leader, for availability to any laboratory in the world.

Sunday Shows, Censorship May Come Up in Virginia

As the result of a poll conducted recently in Virginia, it appears possible that the questions of Sunday opening and censorship will be brought up at the next session of the state legislature. Twenty-seven candidates have expressed themselves as favoring continuation of the Sunday closing law and censorship, while 13 have expressed opposition. Indicated is an increase in the strength of the opposition legislators.

Has Store Remodeling Films

In connection with the campaign of the Federal Housing Administration to "Modernize Main Street," relating to renovation of store windows and fronts, the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company and Westinghouse have prepared four slide sound films on the subject. Each film runs 10 minutes and treats of a different phase of store renovation and lighting. They are available from any of the branches of either company, without charge.

To Dub "Becky Sharp"

RKO plans the dubbing of RKO-Pioneer's "Becky Sharp," Technicolor film, in Spanish at Barcelona, under the supervision of Roberto Trillo, manager of the RKO Spanish branch.

Borneo for Johnsons

Martin and Mrs. Johnson, recently in Chanute, Kan., for a visit, will sail on August 13 from New York to Borneo, scene of their next picture.

British Lion to Handle Republic

British Lion Film Corporation of London will distribute the entire Republic product, including serials, for four years throughout the United Kingdom, under a deal completed Friday between W. Ray Johnston, president of Republic, and Sam Smith, managing director of British Lion, who then returned to Europe.

The deal involves payment of approximately $5,000,000 to Republic by the English company, according to the Republic home office, and this will be the only American product handled by British Lion. Mr. Smith said his company will lay plans for new production to match the American.

In a planned recapitalization of British Lion Corporation it is understood that N. L. Nathanson of Toronto will have an interest.

Municipal Theatres Part Of Kansas City Auditorium

The new municipal auditorium being constructed in Kansas City will have a 3,000-seat theatre and a 1,500-seat "function room" which will be a theatre, in effect, as well. The auditorium, with a probable capacity of 20,000, will be compleed in three months, the theatres in six months. The larger of the two theatres will have a stage 45 feet deep, largest in the city, with a proscenium opening 50 feet wide. The house will have no columns and will be constructed of fireproofed wall materials. Indirect lighting will be used.

Experimental Theatre Discussed in the West

The experimental production of new plays in western theatres and plans for subsidizing theatres in western cities were discussed last week at Iowa City, Iowa, by Harry Hopkins, government relief head; Elmer Rice, Professor E. C. Mabie, head of the drama department of the University of Iowa, and George Middleton, playwright. Also attending the conference were representatives of the various cities in the area about Iowa University.

Goldwyn Changes Title

Samuel Goldwyn has changed the title of the film "Navy Born," written by Mildred Cram, to "Merrily We Marry." It will go into production shortly for release through United Artists. Miriam Hopkins and Joel McCrea are scheduled for the leading roles.

Lucas and Jenkins Take House

Lucas and Jenkins, Paramount partners in Atlanta, have signed to take over the Fox in Atlanta on a five-year arrangement at a straight annual rental of $30,000. The agreement is effective September 1. The house is dark at the moment.

Paramount Sets Title

The next Zane Grey picture to be produced by Paramount will be titled "Nevada," the story for which is being prepared by Eddie Moran and Milton Krims.

Exhibitor Warns of Problem Coming When Giveaways Fade

Answer may lie in unusual pictures for specialized audiences, says B & K manager

by "BUNNY" BRYAN

Manager of the Pantheon, Chicago

The writer is operating a larger-than-average theatre in a key city. Competition is keen but we have been able to keep in the black in the face of it all. Houses all around us went to giveaways. We continued giving them what we felt were the three best pictures of the week (we are subsequent-run with three changes a week). Finally, out of self protection, we deemed it wise to adopt the gift idea. Not believing in doing anything halfway we made it a Monday-Wednesday-Saturday policy.

The first few weeks were simply tremendous. We were having to stop selling tickets, regardless of the picture we played. Then the smaller houses around us and one of the larger ones as well started a deluge of gift nights. We are still doing better than average business on handout nights and on the entire week, but we are beginning to wonder just what will happen when this deluge of giveaways dies a natural death.

Sure of "Value Received"

We feel that the instantaneous better-than-average results were due to several reasons: First, we have pretty well established a policy of giving value received and playing "the pick of the pictures." Our patrons knew they were going to see a good show and felt that the giveaway was an added attraction. Second, we are located in a neighborhood populated by many sporting people. Our so-called "family" trade is limited almost entirely to adults, meaning we are not open to criticisms of women's clubs and others. Third, we stressed the absolute fairness of our method of playing the giveaway game and, fourth, we sold the hell out of it at every opportunity. It just could not help clicking with the kind of sales efforts we used. In other words, we gave it the works from every angle—and then some.

Our giveaway night business already is dropping off, due in part, we believe to the many houses in our area using giveaways every night in the week, houses with an admission price so low they cannot hope to make any money.

We have listened very carefully to any patron comment and reaction concerning giveaways. While we have had many tell us they avoided the theatre on gift nights and others have been disgruntled because they have not won anything after coming to the theatre for weeks on those nights, we must in all fairness say that, for the time being the policy has been very profitable, but—and here comes the joker—the something that is real food for thought—what are we going to do after the novelty of giveaways has worn off?

Folks are not so dumb. They know when they plank their money down at the box office just about what they are going to see in these days of so much advance publicity. What are they going to say when we take away that extra added inducement, the give-away?

"Bunny" Bryan, who points the problem which will confront the exhibitor when the "deluge of giveaways dies a natural death," is manager and publicity director of the Pantheon, Balaban & Katz theatre in north Chicago. Mr. Bryan has managed and exploited theatres in various cities, among them Woonsocket, R. I., Boston and Asbury Park. He was "out in front" of Guy Lombardo's band for a short while before going to the Pantheon.

Frankly we do not know, and that's the why of this epistle to the HERALD. We believe it is about time some real thought was given to a real problem.

We must give them diversion of a different kind not once in a while but as a steady diet, just as we are now handing them give-aways on certain stipulated days or nights.

Different Type Films

Some time ago we made a booking that was very profitable. Remember, we need three pictures every week. Only two half-way box office pictures were available for a certain week. Something was needed to bolster a very ordinary programmer. We heard about Captain Craig and his "Sea Killers" film, the picture being a really good underseas and on top adventure film.

We set in Captain Craig and his "Sea Killers." The advance lobby had everything from diving suits to sawfish. We used extra newspaper space, heralds, a sound truck, a limited amount of billing and Captain Craig contacted schools and clubs. In the face of brutal weather, we obtained a considerably above average opening and closed the date with a nice profit, notwithstanding the added publicity costs.

Maybe that is what we need—films of a very different kind with a running time ot from 30 to 50 minutes and a personal appearance thrown in when practical. Campaigns and attractions can be made to fit special audiences, drawing many who may have remained away from the theatre. I'd like to hear what some of the other fellows think about this.

Society Names Leonidoff

Leon Leonidoff, stage producer at Radio City Music Hall in New York has been appointed a regent on the board of the Society of Arts and Sciences, in recognition of his services in the advancement of art in the theatre.

First High Court Decision Awaited

Labor Day will bring the first high court decision on the legality of "Bank Nights," employed by the theatres as a box office stimulant, the Court of Appeals at Cleveland, convening late this month to decide the bitterly contested action of the Fountain theatre in that city against the Haltnorth.

In Akron, Ohio, where John Romwebber, of the State, asked for a temporary injunction to stop Bank Nights in that area on the grounds of unfair competition, defendants were ordered to file an answer before August 25, the hearing in September.

While Milwaukee's district court, ruling in the case against Bert Nathan's Hollywood theatre, declared Bank Nights to be illegal as a lottery, and H. A. Cole, in Dallas, was fined $100 in county court for employing the stunt, theatres in Norwalk, Connecticut, abandoned the practice and New York's Police Department ordered all theatres to act similarly.

On the other hand, giveaways, including Bank Nights, were spreading throughout Ohio and from Des Moines came word that the number of Bank Night users in the midwest has increased to 850. Too, Screeno spread to the Comerford circuit in Pennsylvania.

Indiana Considers Dropping Doubles

Elimination of double featuring was discussed at an Indianapolis meeting of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana last week. Practically all the neighborhood and downtown subsequent-runs are using double features, said Charles R. Metzger, attorney and general manager. Two of the five first-runs, Loew's and the Circle, show them occasionally.

Double featuring has returned to five theartes at Lincoln, Neb. The Kiva reduces admissions to a dime whenever the Varsity, sister theatre, is open.

At Flint, Mich., exhibitors have extended their six months agreement on single featuring for another half year. Showmen said patrons come oftener when there are single bills, and overhead is lower.

Jack Goldstein Becomes UA Exploitation Manager

Jack Goldstein, publicity director for RKO New England theatres at Boston, takes over the position of exploitation manager for United Artists next Monday. Mr. Goldstein has been in the business 16 years. He fills the post formerly held by Monroe Greenthal, who was promoted to advertising and publicity director upon the recent resignation of Hal Horne.

Subsequents Put Dallas First-Runs On the Sidelines

[By Dallas Correspondent]

A traffic volume that leaves the first-runs on the sidelines has developed out of the rapid spread of the neighborhood theatre in Dallas, Texas, with its 275,000 population. The entire group of subsequent-runs, downtown as well as suburban, has produced a situation honeycombed with competition with the first-run theatre. In addition, there is a continuous criss-cross of trade from one suburban area to another.

Out of this complexity came an appeal from Interstate Theatres, Inc., that distributors make contract limitations on admission prices, restricting second-run exhibitions to at least 25 cent admissions to pictures showing first-run at 40 cents or more, as well as limitation of double featuring and the use of giveaways. Interstate application was general for all its larger cities and for all film companies.

Subsequent-run exhibitors in the lower ranges, however, declare that because of delayed availability of pictures, difficulties in booking, and because they tap a volume of trade at a low price level that otherwise would not be available, they are justified in using any practicable trade stimulator.

The accompanying breakdown of price and giveaway policies of 24 theatres of Dallas presents a picture of the competitive situation. Community theatres have initiated as well as benefited from the growth of neighborhood business areas and the community services obtainable in them.

Interests of the distributors overlap from the field of the first-runs into the sector of the subsequents in two particulars, and to make a conflict. The distributors are interested in a maximum return from the first-runs, whether obtained from high flat rates, which depend upon the house average, or from big takes on percentages. Any lessening of these grosses due to the draw of the subsequents makes for a lessening of these grosses makes for a lower yield from the initial showing. But the distributors want also the rentals from the subsequents, and that a portion of these rentals is justified without any interference with any other box-office intakes, is ascribed to a greater general gross from a multiplicity of theatres than from a few.

The first-run, with its heavy investments, big overhead and high film rentals, has a problem in Dallas, and the end is not yet.

Hanson Starts New Circuit

Oscar R. Hanson, general manager of Associated Theatres, Ltd., and Allied Exhibitors of Ontario and president of Empire Films, Ltd., Canadian distributor of Republic, British International, Educational and other product, has organized Hanson Theatres, Ltd., to own and operate theatres in Toronto. The company already has obtained houses in Toronto and St. Thomas and the Grand in Sudbury from W. E. Mason.

WALL STREET AND PRESS HAILING RECOVERY WITHIN FILM INDUSTRY

Advances of Motion Picture Stocks and Bonds Are Cited in Emphasis on "Hurdling of Financial Difficulties"

Seldom has Wall Street and the financial and news press evidenced such collective enthusiasm for the financial recovery and future outlook of an industry as that expressed late last week for the motion picture.

Singling out film issues in a group as one of the star performers in a stock market that reached its highest level, pricewise, since September, 1931, the Street and the press both expressed the opinions that the upturn in film issues clearly mirrored "improved conditions in the motion picture industry," and that "most of the major motion picture producers have met and are now successfully hurdling their financial difficulties."

"This may be attributed," said the New York Post, in an expression typical of others, "largely to the fact that the industry, sensing business recovery in the offing, had decided to get a running start for the leap into profitable business activity."

Stocks and Bonds Advance

Their interest aroused by the sudden forward movement of leading issues of both film stocks and bonds, many closing at new high prices for the year, financial analysts of the New York Times pointed out that "increased earnings, a scaling down of costs and a general realignment within the producing units is held responsible for the general upward swing of the last few days."

The Hearst newspapers, reflecting their observations in the New York Evening Journal, said: "Betterment in financial and profits position for the industry in general is the prime factor in the current upswing in amusement obligations. In addition, "a record array of productions for next fall and spring is expected to spur theatre attendance." Thus a note of optimism was struck, too, for the so-called "little" exhibitor in the field.

Advances of 50 to 150 per cent or more have resulted in bonds and stocks of the large motion picture corporations this year, which, added the Post, have resulted in "lifting some of them from the basement 'bargain counter' to positions of respect in the investment field."

New Blood Cited

"New managements have replaced old through amicable arrangements under reorganization proceedings undertaken by the large units in the last year," the Post continued. "Thus, in the greatest alignment of forces in the history of the industry the new blood is hard at work on the job of rebuilding earning power and paying considerable attention to making pictures, recognized to be the basic division of the industry."

Likewise predicting a record array of productions for next fall and spring to spur theatre attendance, "supplementing the substantial drawing cards of current attractions," the Post expects the industry to effect a "moderate advance in box office prices when and where it seems feasible."

"Film profits have held up fairly well, but theatres, in which the bulk of amusement capital is tied up, have been lagging and a recovery would be of primary importance," it was said.

"Completion of certain plans for securing a reduction in real estate rentals and reorganization of theatre holding subsidiaries, and progress in this direction elsewhere, have paved the way for greater profits from this division of the business," the Post concluded.

The pre-weekend spurt caused the Wall Street Journal of Dow, Jones and Company to engage in a close study of the causes.

"The greatest realignment of forces in the history of the motion picture industry is apparently in progress," the Journal said. "This has been going on over the past year, coincident with the reorganization of a number of the leading companies and the upturn in earning power that has come with general business recovery.

"Reflecting the betterment in financial and profits positions, the bonds of various representative film companies have scored sweeping advances recently," continued the publication, explaining these advances as follows:

"Warner Brothers convertible 6s advanced four points, closing at 80, compared with the 1935 low of 48½. Radio-Keith-Orpheum 6s of 1941, which are in default, jumped five points to 50, against the year's low of 26½. Paramount Publix 5½s sold at 100, against a low of 58¾ earlier in the year, while the Paramount Famous Lasky 6s are currently selling at 98⅜, against a 1935 low of 59; the latter two issues are being exchanged for Paramount Pictures 6 per cent debentures, and 6 per cent first preferred."

Analyzing Five Companies

The Wall Street Journal concluded with an analysis of the present construction of the five largest corporations as follows:

"Fox Film Corp., the first of the big companies to meet financial difficulties, is now probably further along the road of reconstruction. Having put its financial house in order, the Fox management is adding to its film production facilities through a merger with Twentieth Century Pictures. Latter reported a net profit of $1,409,277 for the period from June 1, 1934, to May 4, 1935. Fox showed $1,273,069 net for the year ended December 29, 1934.

"The largest stockholder in Fox is still the Chase National Bank, which acquired its common stock through the conversion of its substantial holdings of Fox bonds in the reorganization a year or so ago. Other important stockholders are Atlas Corp. and a group of British investors.

"British capital is greatly interested in the U. S. amusement industry. In addition to holdings in Fox, England has a position in Paramount, with the Royal group of insurance companies holding a substantial amount of the bonds. The American representative of these insurance interests, H. A. Fortington, is one of the dominating factors in the Paramount management through his position as chairman of the executive committee.

"Lehman Brothers are represented by John Hertz as a director. Former banking interests identified with the company are no longer directly represented on the board. J. E. Otterson, president of Paramount, had previously long been American Telephone's chief executive in the sound film field through his former position as head of Electrical Research Products, a subsidiary of Western Electric.

"Paramount earned about $2,400,000 in the first quarter of this year, but this amount is subject to adjustments for taxes and other contingencies. Profits in the second quarter were not so good, but it is likely that earnings for the first six months will be over $3,000,000.

Newspaper Analysts Point to Increased Earnings, Reduction of Costs and General Realignment of Producing Units

Complex Problems Cited

"Due to the manifold accounting problems of a company as large as Paramount emerging from receivership, with many subsidiaries also in process of reorganization, even the best official estimates of earnings can only be approximate. These estimates, however, probably fairly reflect the earning power of the system.

"Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. is in process of reorganization, but no plan as yet has been proposed. The two principal stockholders of RKO are the Radio Corp. of America and the Rockefeller family through its interests in Rockefeller Center which received a block of RKO stock in consideration for rent reduction. RKO, after showing heavy losses for several years, reported a net profit of $388,003 for the 21 weeks ended May 25, after allowing for interest and other charges.

"Warner Bros. Pictures, which has not been through any reorganization, is also coming out of the red. Its report for the 39 weeks ended May 25 (August 31 fiscal year) showed a net profit of $371,592 after interest and charges, or more than sufficient to cover preferred dividends.

"Loew's, Inc., the only one of the big five that has kept in the black over the last five years, earned $5,841,351, or $3.50 a share, for the nine months ending May 25, a gain of about $100,000 over the corresponding 1934 period. The failure to show a larger gain in net was probably due to an off period in film releases.

Ruling Sets Precedent On Insurance Suits

That a liability insurance company issuing a policy to a motor carrier cannot be sued by an injured party until judgment is obtained against the motor carrier was ruled by Judge Otis E. Hungate in the Shawnee county, Kansas, district court, in a case involving an accident of an Exhibition Film Delivery truck.

Judge Hungate sustained a demurrer in a damage suit brought by Joseph H. Greaser, who was injured in April, 1933, by a truck of the Film Delivery Service in Topeka. The company held a certificate to do business in Kansas and had filed a liability insurance policy with the state, according to law.

The Kansas supreme court, so far as the records reveal, never ruled on the point and the opinions of courts of other states are conflicting. Mr. Greaser should have sued the truck operator, although the insurance company was obligated to pay the adjustment, according to the decision.

Universal is negotiating an extension of her three-year contract with Margaret Sullavan. She has three to make for the company with only one property, "Next Time We Love," scheduled thus far.

CHINA'S FEES THREATEN TO CLOSE FIRST-RUNS

Report That Customs Assessments Will Be Increased Follows Doubling Censor Fees

by J. P. KOEHLER
Shanghai Correspondent

Foreign distributor-exhibitors are threatening to darken the first-run theatres in China unless greater consideration is given them in the matter of fees for censorship.

Since censor fees were doubled by a decree that was effective April 21st, distributors from America and other lands have protested and protested, but to date the only development has been a rumor that still further burdens are to rise up, this time in increased customs assessments. And all this while receipts have been falling sharply for a year and the volume of Chinese-made product has been rising.

American distributors still are awaiting results of their appeal against the retroactive features of a regulation imposed May 1st, after several extensions, requiring photographic reproduction of the license certificate on film to be screened at every performance before the screening of each item. The ruling applies to every item shown, also trailers, all of which must pass rigid censorship tests at Nanking. Originally promulgated Dec. 7, 1934, the act requires everything ever censored in China to follow the new rule. Naturally there has been a stiff fight against the retroactive feature of the act, with the result that so far, few, if any, and none of the American distributors, have followed the rule except as it applies to items censored after December 7th.

Double Censor Fees Doubled

Effective April 21st the Chinese Government increased censor fees 100 per cent, making the fee now C.$20 per 500 meters or fraction thereof, plus C.$3.10 for the license certificate, stamp and application tax. Vigorous protest against the increase was made by the foreign distributors. Foremost in the fight have been the American distributors, whose product has been most heavily affected by the increase.

Again the American companies appealed for consideration through diplomatic channels and, though the increased fees are now being paid under protest, there may be a prospect of re-consideration. The fee is exceptionally high. It applies only to foreign pictures. The fee for native productions is only about C.$15 for an entire feature regardless of length.

Receipts Drop

Receipts have dropped heavily in the past year and the additional handicap laid upon foreign films have made the going heavy. The Chinese-made product, while very inferior, is still increasing, and is filling the smaller theatres and those in the outport cities. It is only the very exceptional foreign film that enables the distributor to sell the smaller product, and even then releases have been greatly curtailed due to the filling up the time of the smaller house with native product.

The Chinese Government has followed a very simple method in the collection of fines for violation of the censor rules. For instance, if an exhibitor advertised a picture by any other name than that given in the official certificate, the fine of anywhere from C.$20 to C.$60 was laid upon the distributor, even though the distributor was in no way to blame for the violation. If the distributor refused to pay on the grounds of not contributing to such violation, the Chinese Censor refused to pass any more of the distributor's product until he did pay. And the exhibitor in most cases refused to pay the fines, thereby forcing the distributor to collect out of any deposit made. Repeated protest had no effect, but the matter is now in the hands of officials of the Chinese and American Governments and there is a report that the situation may be clarified.

Increased Duties Threaten

There is further rumor of a forthcoming increase in customs duties. These are very high now, and an increase certainly would result in a stiff curtailment of importations, since many films now brought into China fail to earn more than print cost and duties, and censor fees. While returns from the season's product are still large enough for maintenance of well-equipped distribution offices, the time is not far distant, in the opinion of the writer, when economy will force other methods of handling foreign product in China, if costs continue increasing.

The American distributors who formed the Film Board of Trade (China) in July, 1934, have been hard at work in clearing up difficulties, ironing out disagreements, clearing up bad accounts and generally house-cleaning a situation that over the years had almost brought an impasse. Results are felt in a better understanding between exhibitor and distributor, and a spirit of cooperation is very evident. The "bad boys" among the exhibitors have begun to feel the weight of common sense business methods, and the coming new year's contracts should show a firmness heretofore impossible.

More Serials Wanted

There is a growing demand for action serials—not for the larger theatres where the foreign element is still strong, but in the smaller and purely Chinese theatres, where the esthetic big productions fall flat and cannot get consideration even at low priced rentals.

American producers have yet to learn that the Chinese temperament will not stand for ridiculing the race in pictures. Some producers still insist on dressing Chinese in pigtails and mandarin coats, and acting the part of clowns. There is a field here for Chinese character films that stick to truthful portrayal of the modern Chinese mind, and ideals. The American producer who will see things in the proper light will eventually win to laurels and big money, but will have his work cut out to meet all the requirements of the New-Life Movement in China. And reasonableness is not exactly a virtue in China at present—except as reasonableness is looked at from the Chinese angle. It requires a broadminded individual to see pictures from a Chinese viewpoint of national feeling.

Conditions in China Improving Every Day

Normand Westwood, general manager of Universal Pictures Corporation, of China, in New York for home office conferences, said this week that conditions are improving every day in China. The Chinese prefer action pictures and the more the better, he said, with native productions for the most part leaning towards the American style of producing, with more sound pictures being made than ever before.

Mr. Westwood will leave for the Coast next week for conferences with Carl Laemmle and other studio officials. He expects to be back at his headquarters in Shanghai before October 1st.

Pathe Considers Taking Code Authority's Office

The possibility of Pathe taking the vacated offices of the Code Authority on the 23rd floor of the RKO Building is being considered by executives of the company. In the event a lease is signed, the new offices will adjoin First Division's headquarters.

First Division's setup at present includes 18 British International films, eight Hoot Gibson westerns and eight Big Boy Williams features, the western to be produced by Alexander Bros. Additional British films and a number of independent produced pictures, to be made on the Coast, also are being considered. Added to the field sales staff are Mike Thomas, who will handle Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont; E. J. Gross who will cover Connecticut and Rhode Island; and Gerald Swaebe, assigned to Massachusetts.

Paramount Week Sept. 1 to 8 Includes Theatre Awards

Theatre managers and publicity men will share in a $3,500 contest for best exploitation of product in a "Share the Wealth" plan for Paramount Week, September 1 to 8. Managers and publicity men will share equally, according to best grosses and best campaigns. A complete Paramount show must be given for the week.

Contest to Contract—8 Months

Within a period of eight months Ann Loring, Brooklyn, N. Y., girl, won a talent contest, received a trip to Hollywood and a screen test, was given a role opposite Warner Baxter in "Robin Hood of El Dorado," married Louis Schor, young Los Angeles attorney, and received a new long term contract with MGM.

Second Suit Begun On Use of Photos

The professional dignity of Hugh Sinclair, of the cast of "Escape Me Never," was injured to the extent of $50,000, he charges, when Postal Telegraph & Cable Company permitted a composite photograph of himself to be displayed in its New York branch office windows in a tieup with United Artists.

That claim for damages is on file in the New York supreme court in connection with Mr. Sinclair's suit for a permanent injunction to restrain the telegraph company from displaying the poster containing the disputed photograph. Justice Edgar J. Lauer, in signing an order for a temporary injunction pending a trial, has upheld Mr. Sinclair's contention that the use to which the photograph was put was a blow to his dignity and constituted an invasion of his civil right.

Second Photograph Suit

A second case involving the use of a photograph developed in New Bedford, Mass., this week when Lina Basquette, actress, started proceedings against the Empire theatre for $100,000 damages, charging the management displayed a picture of her in a manner to give the impression she was a member of a colored revue. A writ of attachment preliminary to the actual suit was served on the theatre operators.

United Artists this week was to join in the Sinclair action as a codefendant since Postal Telegraph merely lent its space in the tieup and is the innocent party in the dispute. Also, the question is considered of importance in connection with player contracts in which provision usually is made for exploitation. It is understood that attorneys for United Artists will ask the court to dismiss the entire proceedings.

If Mr. Sinclair's contentions are sustained, that the language of the publicity enabling clause in the contract did not authorize use of the photograph in the manner indicated, then contracts will have to be written differently in the future, according to film company executives.

The poster showed Mr. Sinclair and Elisabeth Bergner, star of the picture, advising friends by telegraph that "Escape Me Never" was to open at the RKO Music Hall. Mr. Sinclair claims this "humiliated" him.

Justice Lauer agreed with Mr. Sinclair's counsel that the situation was comparable to a lawyer telegraphing his friends to attend court and "witness his appearance before the bar."

Claims Publicizing Rights

United Artists, distributor for British & Dominions in the United States, contends assignment of the film also transferred to it contract rights providing that the film company may publicize the artist in any manner it deemed proper.

Miss Bergner, with whom Mr. Sinclair also appeared in the stage production of "Escape Me Never," has not objected to the publicity on the picture.

From Los Angeles this week came word that James J. Donnelly, claiming to be the copyright owner of the song, "When My Ship Comes In," has filed suit for $102,000 damages against Samuel Goldwyn, producer of "Kid Millions," starring Eddie Cantor. Mr. Donnelly charged the song was used in the picture without his authorization. The film was released by United Artists.

PICKED TOO MANY WINNERS

So Now Clarence Beck Is Closing Castle Theatre in Chicago Loop, the Film Salesman's Best Bluff

After 20 years of as colorful existence as is to be found in theatre circles, Clarence Beck's Castle theatre on State street in the heart of Chicago's Loop will close its doors August 11. On the following day, a crew of workmen will begin to convert the building into a women's dress goods store.

Inability to get the pictures which would draw them in for the last 10 months forced Mr. Beck's decision. After playing first and second-run films for 19 years, he found it impossible to get what he wanted. Opening of the Apollo and Garrick by Balaban & Katz as first-run houses was a major blow and when the Orpheum returned from Class C to Class B last fall that was the knockout.

"The boys with the film companies are going to miss the Castle when it's gone," said Mr. Beck this week. "It was the best bluff they had. When it came down to the last call, all they had to say about a picture was that it was going into the Castle and the big boys would grab it off. I picked too many winners. Whether they could see anything in a picture or not, they had an idea if Beck wanted it it was sure fire box-office."

Mr. Beck said the Castle was used so often to bluff the big theatres that it should have been a joke, but it wasn't. He said that Balaban & Katz refused definitely to run Mae West's first picture, but reversed themselves when they found out the Castle wanted it.

Jumped from Nickel to Quarter

"It's been a lot of fun," he went on. "When I opened up it was a five-cent business. Some houses got a dime and for an 'extra special' jumped to the daring price of 15 cents. I jammed it up to a quarter the day I opened, and I got 'em in.

"Not so many years ago, B. & K. wouldn't touch an animal picture. I grabbed all of the good ones I could get and I certainly packed them in. It opened their eyes and I haven't had a crack at a good animal picture since. It was the same with freak pictures. But not any more.

"The most fun was taking some picture that had done a nosedive at the Roosevelt and putting it in second-run at increased price. That took some exploitation and advertising, but they went over."

Mr. Beck, if not the first theatre owner in Chicago to go in for exploitation in a big way, was certainly the most consistent. His lobby always was astounding and had shoppers along State Street craning their necks. There is hardly a sure-fire ballyhoo recognized as standard in the trade today that wasn't used by him years ago.

How He Picked Them

The Castle's owner himself has a unique record. When he had three houses on Madison street as well as the Castle, he looked at eight pictures a day. That was when they speeded them through the projection room in 45 minutes. His judgment was uncanny.

"Here was the system," he explained. "I'd wait three or four days and if I could remember three or four high spots in a picture through the maze of all of the rest of the stuff I had seen, that was one I wanted."

Mr. Beck was consistently against block booking. With few exceptions in unusual instances, he spot-booked. For 15 years he refused to book pictures with pink permits (adults only). For 17 years he showed no short subjects, just the feature. Turn them in and turn them out. The depression and lack of pictures changed both these policies in the last few years.

In the early days, the Castle had the premiere showing of most of the big star pictures—Chaplins, Fairbanks, Pickfords, Swansons and others.

The theatre set a number of records. With only 291 seats, it did $21,000 in one week with the Dempsey-Tunney fight films. Only recently "This Nude World" ran for 18 weeks, which many claim is the longest run a picture ever has had in Chicago. It was Beck who spotted the possibilities of "Mickey"; attempted to buy an interest in the local rights and, failing in this, packed the customers in for seven weeks—an almost unheard of run in those days.

When Harold Lloyd was doing two-reelers, Mr. Beck made an experiment for Pathe as to his feature possibilities. He advertised the current Lloyd picture exclusively without stating its length. It didn't go so hot. Four months later he repeated the experiment and filled the house. Convinced, Pathe shoved the spectacled comedian into feature length pictures shortly afterwards. The experiments were repeated with Johnny Hines, Buster Keaton and others.

Mr. Beck is not bowing out of the business. He owns the Pastime theatre and already is casting about for additional small houses. He expects to build himself an efficient little circuit.

NEW STUDIO CENTER WILL RIVAL ELSTREE

London Film Building at Denham, Pinewood Nearby, and Technicolor Plant Between

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

There is every sign of rapid development of a British production center in Buckinghamshire rivaling that already established at Elstree in neighboring Hertfordshire.

London Film Productions is building at Denham. At Iver Heath, a few miles away, is the site of the new Pinewood Studios. Somewhere between the two will be the London plant of Technicolor. Without considering further developments, there is a probability that in 1936 the floor space at this new center will equal that of Elstree.

If the drift to color is as pronounced as seems likely the drift to Bucks will also be accentuated.

A leading part in this new development will be played by a figure comparatively new to the film field in Charles Boot, principal of the British builders, Henry Boot & Sons. Boot is chairman of the Pinewood Studios, Ltd., with J. Arthur Rank of British National Films, Ltd., as his fellow director, and his immediate plans are to erect a three-floor studio in the ground of Iver Hall, the old Grant Morden estate. British National will occupy one and the other two will be available on a service basis, with Technicolor facilities a feature.

That Boot is completely sold on color was very obvious from the speech at an informal press dinner at Iver Hall this week in which he outlined his plans. Announcing that J. Arthur Rank and himself were financially interested in the Technicolor plant—an item of news which was not included in the official statement of the Kalmus British plans—he seemed to envisage ultimate development of production here on an all-color basis or something approaching it.

Definitely, British National, which has a two-picture tie with Gaumont-British but is generally expected to release ultimately through C. M. Woolf's company, General Film Distributors, Ltd., will make a big color feature in the new studio.

The London Film plant at Denham also will offer color facilities on a service basis and Alexander Korda will himself make there the first all-color British feature.

Semiofficial Censorship

The most important feature of a censorship subcommittee report to the Executive Council of the County Councils' Association is the suggestion that the British Board of Film Censors be "strengthened" by the addition of representatives of licensing authorities, nominated by the Home Office. At the present moment the British Board of Film Censors is controlled by the trade, and adoption of the subcommittee's recommendation would introduce an official element to its personnel for the first time. The report is in general complimentary to the Board.

That newsreel films more than a week old should be subject to censorship; that films depicting suffering or loss of life should be prohibited by heavy penalties, are other suggestions in the report.

Garrett & Klement, Ltd., an associate company of Garrett-Klement Pictures, Ltd., which recently came into the news with announcement of a super film program including an Anna Sten picture, has taken over the Theatre Royal, Manchester. One of the most famous "regular" theatres in England, the Theatre Royal pioneered many of the earliest roadshow pictures. Walter Gifford, who is to book and manage it for Garrett-Klement, once toured such silent successes as "Way Down East," "Orphans of the Storm" and "Four Horsemen."

Films and Stage Rights

In awarding damages to Parnell & Zeitlin, Ltd., in their case in London chancery court against the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, Ltd., and C. B. Cochran, Justice Eve ruled that there had been a definite breach of agreement in the fact that the plaintiffs, who had bought touring rights in "Cavalcade," had been damaged by the sale of film rights.

The case was an interesting one, legal aspects aside, as a demonstration of the fact that nowadays the appearance, or even the announcement, of a screen version of a theatrical success tends to dry up the "legitimate" box office. Figures were given showing a striking contrast between the provincial theatre takings of Drury Lane productions which had not been filmed and "Cavalcade."

News Theatre in Park Lane

Residential center in turn for England's aristocracy, its plutocracy and nowadays, in super-hotels, for its foreign visitors, Park Lane is to be further democratized by a News theatre. Plans have been passed by the improvement committee of the Westminster City Council for conversion of a ground floor and basement for this purpose on a corner site at Park Lane, Norfolk street and North Row. The scheduled capacity is 207.

Studio Notes

London Film Productions has been using the grounds of its new Denham studio site for big exterior sets for the Wells Film "Things to Come" and "The Laying of the Glourie Ghost." The first named was completed with the scenes of the destruction of a city by aerial bombing. For the Rene Clair picture a Scottish castle was built in the open. Garden scenes were shot for Anthony Asquith's "Natacha." Exceptional weather conditions have favored this use of the Denham grounds before even the main studio framework is completed.

British National's third production will be "The Forbidden Road," an adaptation of H. L. Myers' novel of Indian life, "The Root and the Flower." The screen adaptation is being done by Marcia de Silva, a Singalese journalist; she will also play a part. A camera unit is going to India forthwith and studio work will begin in January.

"Where's George?", Sydney Howard vehicle, is in the cutting room at B. & D. The story is by Walter Greenwood who, while himself unemployed, wrote the stage success "Love on the Dole."

Harry Baur, French actor imported by London films for "Natacha," an adaptation of "Les Nuits Muscovites," has completed his part and returned to Paris.

Jean Parker, Robert Donat and Eugene Palette are all here for their roles in London Film's "Laying of the Glourie Ghost."

Paul England has written an original story for Jack Hylton's first film feature, for Twickenham, which at present is titled "Oh Listen to the Band." It goes on the floor this month. Also at the Twickenham studio "The Private Secretary," with Edward Everett Horton, is approaching completion, and "The Last Journey" and "A Fire Has Been Arranged" have been finished.

Andrews Engelman has completed his part in "The Crouching Beast," Radio-Stafford production, with Wynne Gibson and Fritz Kortner, and has left for a Spanish production.

Santell Settlement

The amount of settlement in favor of Al Santell in his action against Toeplitz Productions was £1,855, and not £9,275 as reported in the issue of July 13, due to a typographical error in transmission in translation of the amount from pounds sterling into dollars. Santell had charged breach of contract of an agreement appointing him director of "The Dictator," which was completed by Victor Saville.

Ruling that there had been a clear breach of agreement by both defendants, Justice Eve awarded £5,000 damages to Parnell & Zeitlin, Ltd., against Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, Ltd., which had brought in C. B. Cochran as third party to the case. Plaintiffs alleged the touring rights to the stage version of "Cavalcade," which they had bought, were reduced in value by the fact that the film rights in the production had been sold to Fox without their knowledge.

Switzerland Seeking Domestic Film Industry

Promoted largely by the Swiss Tourist Office, an effort is underway in Switzerland to promote a domestic motion picture industry, according to a report to the department of commerce from the American consulate-general at Zurich. It was pointed out, at a meeting to discuss the situation, that about six or seven million Swiss francs are paid annually to foreign producers because Swiss production is of little importance.

Approximately 400 foreign feature films are imported into Switzerland each year, and it is estimated that the annual film consumption reaches 4,000,000 meters. It was emphasized at the meeting that the establishment of a "film credit bank," financed by the government, would be important to the development of a domestic industry.

MGM Departments Move

With additional office space required by the legal department of MGM at the New York headquarters, the offices of Nina Lewton, in charge of books and magazines, and Bertram Bloch, in charge of plays, are both now on the fourteenth floor. The departments continue as separate units.

FRECKLES

Radio

Over a period of years, "Freckles" has proved one of the most popular of the many well known Gene Stratton-Porter stories. Localled in the famous Limberlost country, it is a human interest packed dramatic romance of young love.' Dealing in simple things that have the inherent power to quicken audience sympathy and imagination, it moves in a continual atmosphere of subdued suspense, and while pursuing its homely way crashes to a danger laden anticlimax that adds power and beauty to the finale.

The succession of Stratton-Porter pictures having established a vogue, favorably reflected in popular reception of de luxe and smaller theatres, this offers much in addition with which to stimulate public interest. The screen play is by Dorothy Yost, who is similarly credited on "Laddie" and also did the adaptation of "A Dog of Flanders," which had much of the same quality as the Porter stories. Direction is by William Hamilton and Edward Killy.

Showmanship availability in connection with the story is also a feature of the cast. Tom Brown assumes the role of Freckles, the boy who came to Limberlost to find love, meet danger and emerge a hero. Laurie Lou, the child of the story, about whom its drama revolves, will be Virginia Wideler. A newcomer, Carol Stone, will be seen in the role of Mary Arden, the school teacher. The fourth principal character, Ralph Barton, Tom's rival for Mary's favor, is James Bush. Others appearing are Addison Richards, Lumsden Hare, Dorothy Peterson and Dick Alexander.

The type of exploitation applied to the previous Porter pictures and similar ones is strictly in order and necessary here.

HERE'S TO ROMANCE

20th Century-Fox

For story purposes, this production, the title of which has an intriguing commercial significance, is the colorful love story of a young operatic star. While that is worthy, the accompanying music, song, dance, other production features and famous names of operatic, concert stage and radio note, are the features in which apparently rest the greatest exploitation worth.

A Jesse Lasky production, "Here's to Romance" is an original story by Ernest Pascal, who collaborated on "The White Parade," and Sonya Levien, also associated with that picture. The screen play is by Pascal and Arthur Richman. Direction is by Alfred E. Green, who has demonstrated his adaptability to music-tinged production by his work on "Sweet Music."

The production will present Nino Martini as a young Italian who, after scoring a radio success, joins the Metropolitan Opera Company to be acclaimed by critics as the greatest tenor since Caruso. From the operatic and concert stage, it also brings the popular Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink. Two other artists are Maria Gambarelli, world's foremost ballerina, recently seen in Radio's "Hooray for Love," and Vincent Escudero, famous Spanish Gypsy dancer. With these names providing exhibitors something new to exploit, there is also a number of familiar personalities. Included are Genevieve Tobin and Anita Louise, about whom Martini's private life romance revolves, and Reginald Denny, who is a party to it. Others are Adrian Rosley, Elsa Buchanan, Miles Mander, Keye Luke, Pat Somerset, Albert Conti and Egon Brecher.

Two topical song numbers by Con Conrad, author of "Continental," are featured and there are eight operatic selections for Martini, Schumann-Heink and others, including arias from "Las Tosca," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Pagliacci" and "Serenade." Music for the spectacular dance numbers is Chopin's "Valse Brilliante" and Saint Säens' "Le Cynge."

With much that is new and novel in the way of personalities, operatic music, classical dancing, as well as straightaway modern love interest accented by plenty of comedy, drama and suspense, the production potentially affords showmen much with which to occupy themselves in furthering the popularity of operatic-tinged entertainment which a few predecessors have given the benefit of a running headstart in public appeal.

THE THROWBACK

Universal

With Buck Jones in the hero role, this is an exciting western drama. Motivated by the familiar and popular idea, the hero, through no activities of his own, is made to appear a villain; the real villains pose as friends of the people. As the posse rides again in battles with cattle rustlers, personal combats are many, one thrilling chase follows another, and a story of childhood love is carried over a period of years to be climaxed in the way that everybody hopes and knows it will.

As a secondary production feature to all that is usually expected in this character of picture, there is included a picturization of a famous Fourth of July rodeo in which a cowboy's cross-country steeplechase race is the novel feature.

The story is an original by Cherry Wilson, who has prepared several for Buck Jones, with screen play by Frances Guihan. Direction is by Ray Taylor.

With Buck Jones the leading name player, Muriel Evans is the girl who shares his romance from childhood to maturity. The supporting players are made up of well known western actors. Eddie Phillips and Paul Fix are the two bad men. In their early years, the roles of this quartet are assumed by Allan Ramsay, Margaret Davis, Bobbie Nelson and Mickey Martin respectively. Others who will be seen are George Hayes, Frank LaRue, Earl Pingree, Bob Walker, Charles French and the well known screen veteran, Bryant Washburn.

THE BISHOP MISBEHAVES

MGM

Having met with considerable success in the recent introductions of two newcomers, Joseph Calleia in "Public Hero" and Luise Rainer in "Escapade," MGM now presents another newcomer, Edmund Gwenn. Unknown to motion picture audiences, Gwenn has been an outstanding success on the New York and London stage as the star of the recent "Laburnum Grove."

As the production brings a stage name, it also is an adaptation of a stage play which proved popular. Despite its rather incongruous title, it has nothing to do with religion. While it is the story of a bishop, it is the story detailing the extra activities of a whimsical, homey character, who as an avid reader of crime stories, has adopted detective work as a hobby. Possessed with a thirst for adventure, into his lap fate tosses a baffling robbery mystery and he turns cop for a night to attempt to capture the culprits by story book methods. This being the motivating premise, the yarn is also embellished by much action, excitement, comedy, romance and suspense.

The production is adapted from a play of the same title by Frederick Jackson, with the screen play by Leon Gordon, recently associated with "Age of Indiscretion" and "Mad Love." The director, E. A. Dupont, is also a new figure to domestic exhibitors, although he is credited with the making of "Variety" and other foreigns.

In support are such known names as Norman Foster, Maureen O'Sullivan, Lucile Watson, Dudley Diddes, Reginald Owen, Melville Cooper, Lilian Bond and Etienne Girardot.

THE THREE MUSKETEERS

Radio

Produced on a scale worthy of the prestige of Alexandre Dumas' dramatic, romantic, historic novel, "The Three Musketeers," gives graphic evidence of being a subject more than capable of intriguing showmanship interest. The exploits of d'Artagnan and the three musketeers, Porthos, Aramis and Athos, under their "all for one and one for all" pledge of eternal friendship and devotion to the King of France, are well known in fact and fiction.

In essence, it's a rapier clashing adventure story told against the background of political chicanery, double dealing espionage, conflicting love interest angles, in which the omnipresent influence of Cardinal Richelieu weaves in and out. It's France and England in the days of the plumed cavaliers, when chivalry was at its height and the love of women, king and country inspired men to heroic deeds.

The screen play in this instance, in which much time was devoted to research, is by Rowland V. Lee, who directed the recent "The Count of Monte Cristo" and "Cardinal Richelieu," and Dudley Nichols, who did the screen play on "The Informer" and was associated with "She." Lee also is directing.

With primary showmanship and exploitation to be found in the scope and character of the Dumas story, the cast also offers much through which to arouse public interest. A newcomer, Walter Abel, will be seen in the leading role as d'Artagnan. Paul Lukas is Athis; Moroni Olson is Porthos, and Onslow Stevens is Aramis. Margaret Grahame of "Informer" note is the exotic international spy of Milady Richelieu (Nigel de Brulier). Heather Angel is the center of romantic interest between Abel and de Rocheforte, a role which Ian Keith, now in "Crusades," will portray.

March of Time Release Date

Starting August 16th, RKO will release "The March of Time" the middle of each month instead of on the second day of the month.

THOSE 'GOOD OLD DAYS'

Sidney Lust Writes of Quarter Century Ago When Harry Crandall and Tom Moore Were Rivals

Figures of national note in the business of the motion picture a quarter of a century ago step into and off the scene in the following article by Sidney Lust, circuit operator at the capital, written as guest columnist of the Washington Times at the invitation of Andrew R. Kelley, motion picture and dramatic editor. Of the "good old days" Mr. Lust writes as follows:

"Even before my permanent locating in Washington," wrote Mr. Lust, "I was theatrical manager for Hugh Herbert, now one of Warner Brothers' leading comedians. How well I can remember this Scotchman doing the role of the Jewish lad in 'The Son of Solomon.' Our last show together was closing week of the old Union Square theatre, in New York. On the same bill was a rope twirler by the name of Will Rogers.

"After leaving Herbert I came here to Washington as a carbon salesman, and the first person I met was Harry Crandall. He was at this time running the Joy theatre, at Ninth and E Streets (you'll probably remember the electric clown over the entrance). This was also my first introduction to his right hand man, Jo Morgan, and also George Crouch, now head of the local Warner booking department. . . .

"This was when Harry Crandall ran in competition with Tom Moore. Tom ran the Strand theatre, the Plaza and the Garden. Will Moore, his brother, managed this playhouse. Then there was also the Virginian and the West Virginian, run by John Noonan and Johnson.

"Soon I opened a film exchange in partnership with Harry Warner, now senior member of Warner Brothers' Theatres and Warner-First National Films. During the war I was appointed head of the motion picture vocational department of Fort McHenry and Walter Reed, and Harry Warner's brother, the late Sam Warner, worked here for me as instructor in the use of projection machines.

Where They Were and Are

"Our organization at that time might interest because of the fact that so many of them are still in the same business. My three bookkeepers were: Mrs. Estes, auditor at the Warner Film Exchange; J. B. Fitzgerald, secretary to the film board of trade, and Phil Bobys, MGM film salesman. My errand boy, Albert Grover, is an RKO-Keith's film salesman, and Leo Garner, the shipping clerk, has two sons in vaudeville.

"Nat Glasser, manager of one of my theatres, the Leader, is now assistant division manager of Warner Theatres, and Jake Flax, my booker, owns part of Liberty Films. Sam Flax, his brother, also owns a partial share of this company, and at that time was booker for the General Film Exchange.

"To glance around at other figures of this time: The late 'Daddy' Brylawski, the best liked man in the business, was at the Cosmos theatre, on the Avenue, and Young Julian, his man 'Friday,' took care of the vaudeville. 'Daddy' Brylawski also ran the Palace on Ninth street, and the Happyland theatre on Seventh street. The manager of the Happyland was Louis Bernheimer, now owner of a chain of Washington theatres, and the Palace theatre manager was William E. S. Wilcox, who now owns the Seco theatre, at Silver Spring, Md.

"I recall those night-after-the-shows when we would gather on Ninth street, and talk and write show business. Jo Morgan . . . Maurice Davis . . . George Crouch . . . Johnny Payette . . . and Harry Crandall.

Sold Typewriters Then

"Johnny Payette was then manager of the Rhode Island theatre at Seventh and Rhode Island avenue, N. W. Johnny is now division manager of the Warner theatres. Bob Smeltzer, a division manager for Warner-First National films, formerly sold typewriters, and came to Washington to manage the now out of existence World Film Exchange.

"Those were the days when E. Lawrence Phillips, not only ran the Stanton theatre in Northeast, but also announced at the ball park, in the afternoons. Rudolph Berger, now MGM exchange manager, was with the George Kleine exchange. Nelson Bell, dramatic critic for the Washington Post, was publicity man for the Crandall theatres and Harry Hites, now publicity man for the Community Chest, had Nelson's present job. Ernest Johnson, manager of the Herald's local advertising, was also with Harry Crandall in his ad department.

Played in Soldiers' Home Band

"A. C. Hayden, president of the Musicians' Union at this time, played the alto horn in the Soldiers' Home Band. Frank Storty, operator at the Palace theatre, was at the old Plaza, and Charley Plunkett, now chief projectionist at Loew's Palace, was the manager, and put up his own posters. Harry Hunter, manager of the Paramount Film Exchange, has never changed and remains as one of the pioneer figures in Washington show circles.

"My brother Ben returned around this time from the war, and the Argonne. Ben was with the 77th Division. He's now in the movie supply business here. . . .

"Even with my ballyhoo of the 'good old days,' films are today naturally a great deal better than they have ever been. In those days a five-reel feature was an affair, and the two and three-reelers were the exhibitors' bread and butter. The men in the business cater to the patrons, giving them what they want at prices that are reasonable compared with shows of those days."

New Haven Theatre Robbed

Thieves cut through the safe of the Howard theatre in New Haven one night last week and escaped with receipts of $1,000. The manager's office, in which the safe is located, was badly damaged.

Warner Newspaper Ads Stress Types of Appeal

Stressing varied types of appeal in the Warner film, "The Irish In Us," S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, is using a newspaper campaign on the run of the picture at the New York Strand which is aimed at varied types of readers. Using different ads spotted in four different sections of the newspapers the campaign is designed to attract the maximum number of readers.

One ad, concentrating on the prizefight phase of the film, has appeared in the sporting sections of the papers. A second, stressing the devotion of James Cagney, the star, to his mother, was placed in the women's sections. A third, on the fiction or feature pages, emphasized the romantic interest in the film, and a fourth type, on the general entertainment factors in the film, was used in the amusement sections.

Four Warner-First National-Cosmopolitan features are being released during the month of August, according to the Warner home office in New York. The pictures and release dates are as follows: "The Irish in Us," First National, last Saturday; "Page Miss Glory," Cosmopolitan, August 12; "We're in the Money," Warner, August 24; "Bright Lights," First National, August 31.

Ceylon Talkies Formed

Ceylon Talkies Limited, of Colombo, Ceylon, a new company for producing sound pictures, was formed by David de Silva, Chelsea Gardens, Colpetty and S. G. Johnson, Cotta Road, Colombo. Mr. de Silva will act as the company's managing director and Mr. Johnson as its secretary. Directors include N. D. S. Silva, Martin Rozairo, E. G. Adamaly, Muhandiram D. P. A. Wijewardena, Manuel Savarimuttu, and Dr. A. Ratnapala.

Third Booking on "Sequoia"

"Sequoia," MGM production, has been booked for a third engagement at the Adelphi theatre in Chicago, after having been refused a booking originally. After reconsideration, Ludwig Sussman, operator, booked the film in June for three days. The run was sufficiently successful to warrant a return engagement. A third booking followed.

"Crusades" At Astor

"The Crusades" spectacle production from Cecil B. DeMille, which is distributed by Paramount, will open at the Astor theatre on Broadway on August 21. The film will play an extended run on a two-a-day policy. Similar showings are planned for other key cities in the country before general release of the film.

Allvine with Pioneer

Glendon Allvine, former Radio associate producer, has joined the Pioneer Pictures production staff in an executive capacity. He will work under the supervision of Merian C. Cooper.

Losses Reduced

Heywood-Wakefield Company has reported a loss of $53,129 for the six months ended June 30, which compares with loss of $59,099 for the same period in 1934.

FIFTY FILMS IN WORK IN BUSIEST SUMMER
SOL LESSER BUILDS MUSHROOM MINING TOWN
TREATS IN SEA PICTURES PROMISED EXHIBITORS
ZANUCK REORGANIZES MUSIC AND PUBLICITY

STILL moving at a pace far exceeding any previous midsummer record, Hollywood's production mark again hits the 50 figure; 10 were started in the past week and 10 completed. This activity is a happy occasion for Hollywood workers, assuring continued employment and income, and it is further assurance to exhibitors of an abundance of product for the new season.

Radio has three new starters. Two each were begun by M-G-M and Paramount, and singletons by 20th-Fox, Universal and Principal. Radio and Universal each account for two of the finished pictures.

Lily Pons Picture Starts

Probably the most important of the Radio trio from a personnel and story character standpoint is "Love Song." As semi-operatic atmosphered romance, it will introduce Lily Pons, operatic prima donna. Also in the cast are Henry Fonda, soon to be seen in "Farmer Takes a Wife," Eric Blore, Osgood Perkins and Betty Grable. John Cromwell is directing. Second to go, "In Person," will feature Ginger Rogers with George Brent, Louis Mason, Henry Stephenson and Joan Breslau. William A. Seiter is directing. The third feature, being directed by Ben Stoloff, "If You Were Mine," will present Hugh Herbert, Helen Broderick, Johnny Mercer, Sonny Lamont, Roger Pryor, Fred Keating, Betty Grable, Eric Blore and Nick Condos.

M-G-M started "Riff Raff," in which Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy and Joseph Calleia are the principals. J. Walter Ruben is directing. Also in work is "The Perfect Gentleman," with Heather Angel, Henry Stephenson, Frank Morgan, Herbert Mundin and Cicely Courtneidge. Tim Whelan is directing.

Paramount Begins Two

Paramount began work on "From Little Acorns." The cast will include Joe Morrison, Paul Kelly, Rosalind Keith, William Frawley, Chic Sale, Dean Jagger, Baby LeRoy, Benny Baker, David Holt and Gloria White. Edward Cline is directing. With Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray in the leading roles, "Hands Across the Table" also went before the cameras under Mitchell Leisen's direction.

Universal started "Three Kids and a Queen." Edward Ludwig directing, the cast includes May Robson, Henry Armetta, Charles Henry, Frankie Darro, Herman Bing and William Benedict.

With production on the United Artists lot, 20th Century-Fox started "Metropolitan." It will present Lawrence Tibbett, Virginia Bruce, Alice Brady, Cesar Romero, George Marion, Sr., Luis Alberni, Adrian Rosley, Ruth Donnelly, Jessie Ralph and Christian Rub. Richard Boleslawski is directing.

Last of the newly starting pictures is Principal's "Thunder Mountain." George O'Brien is starred, supported by Barbara Fritchie, Francis Grant, Dean Denton, Morgan Wallace and Ed LeSaint. David Howard is directing.

Radio Completes Two

Radio's completed pictures include "The Three Musketeers" and "Hi Gaucho." In the first, based on the Dumas novel, Walter Abel, Paul Lukas, Margot Grahame, Heather Angel, Ian Keith, Onslow Stevens, Rosamond Pinchot, John Qualen, Ralph Forbes, Murray Kinnell, Lumsden Hare and Wade Boteler will be seen. Rowland V. Lee directed. Second feature will present Steffi Duna, John Carroll, Rod La-Rocque, Montagu Love, Paul Porcasi, Sidney D'Albrook and Jack Rice. Thomas Atkins directed.

Universal finished "Stormy." In it are listed Noah Beery, Jr., Jean Rogers, J. Farrell MacDonald, Walter Miller, Raymond Hatton and Rex, "King of Wild Horses." Louis Friedlander directed. Also moved to the cutting rooms is "The Throwback." The cast includes Buck Jones, Muriel Evans, Eddie Phillips, Paul Fix, George Hayes, Jack LaRue, Bryant Washburn and Margaret Davis. Ray Taylor directed.

M-G-M finished "Broadway Melody of 1936" and gave it a quick preview. A musical, the cast features Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell, Robert Taylor, June Knight, Vilma and Buddy Ebsen, Frances Langford, Carl Randall, Una Merkel, Harry Stockwell, Shirley Ross and Sid Silvers. Roy Del Ruth directed.

Crosby-Bennett Team Again

At Paramount "Two for Tonight," was finished. In this Bing Crosby and Joan Bennett again are teamed, with Mary Boland, Lynne Overman, Ernest Cossart, Thelma Todd, James Blakely, Douglas Fowley, Torben Meyer, Doris Lloyd, Arthur Housman and Harold Minjir listed in the cast. Frank Tuttle directed.

Republic finished "Two Black Sheep." The cast includes Otto Kruger, Martha Sleeper, Minna Gombell, Cora Sue Collins, Ferdinand Munier, Fred Walton, Robert Warwick, William P. Carlton, Margaret Seddon and Harold Nelson. Arthur Lubin directed.

"Red Salute" was completed by Reliance. It presents Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young, Hardie Albright, Ruth Donnelly, Cliff Edwards, Purnell Pratt, Arthur Vinton, Nella Walker, Edward McWade, Ferdinand Gottschalk and Henry Kolker. Sidney Lanfield directed.

With "Navy Sweethearts" as the final tentative title, Warner's picture, which began as "Anchors Aweigh," was completed. It teams Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler, supported by Lewis Stone, Ross Alexander, Dick Foran, Robert Light, John Arledge, Martha Merrill, Mary Treen and Joseph King. Frank Borzage directed.

News Flashes

Carl Laemmle, Sr., has placed final taboo on the sale of Universal Studio properties. In rejecting a strong bid by Warner Brothers, which incidentally was the fifth of a series of offers, Mr. Laemmle said that sentiment was stronger than cold cash. . . . Henry Ginsberg, Hal Roach studio manager, left for New York and Europe on a combined vacation and talent hunt, accompanied by his wife. . . . Joseph I. Breen is back at his desk at the Production Code Administration after a lengthy vacation. . . . Sam Nelson, Columbia production manager, has resigned to assist Josef von Sternberg. . . . Darryl Zanuck continued readjustments of personnel at 20th Century-Fox with the music and publicity departments the latest.

Two important productions—"The Crusades" and "Dante's Inferno"—both with moralistic concepts, were previewed in Hollywood this week, at the Paramount and 20th Century-Fox studios, respectively.

Cecil B. DeMille's drama is of the armies with holy zeal who marched to Jerusalem.

Mr. DeMille keeps his film in the realm of faith, and at the same time registers a plea for peace. While palpably a religious picture, DeMille has kept the romance in the foreground while action bristles and sweeps also.

"Dante's Inferno," Sol Wurtzel's production, visualizes a ruthless modern who, by his own acts, discovers his Heaven and Hell of his own making here on earth. Scenes of the Inferno are noteworthy for their beauty and realism.

A Problem Solved

Sol Lesser solved a tough production problem for George O'Brien's "Thunder Mountain" in an ingenious fashion. Most of the film is to be made on location 60 miles into the wilds of Northern California from the little town of Sonora. Sonora itself already is overflowing with cast and crew of MGM's "The Robin Hood of El Dorado." Sixty miles from town are the nearest housing facilities.

Most of the action in "Thunder Mountain" takes place in a mushroom mining town. Instead of building a flat set and running up housing quarters for his troupe of 80, Mr. Lesser has constructed a real mining town, and the cast will live on the set for the 15 days of location.

There are 125 tent houses, supplied with cots and stoves and kerosene lamps and all of the camp equipment typical of the goldrush days, with the comforts of today carefully tucked away out of sight.

Sea Pictures

Many sea pictures—like "Sea Hawk," "Moby Dick," "Down to the Sea in Ships," "Treasure Island"—have been notable money-makers.

Yet exhibitors need not fear a cycle of sea films to follow the few now under way. Hollywood has had too many bitter experiences with technical difficulties incident to work on the bounding main.

The director finds himself at the mercy of whims of wind, sun and fog. Cameras perform tricks on rolling decks. Casts suffer from mal de mer at inconvenient times. Production costs to start are immense, and it is impossible to predict incidental expenses or shooting time.

Nevertheless, several intrepid producers are going ahead with plans for sea tales, and, because of their very scarcity, exhibitors may anticipate unusual interest in MGM's "Mutiny on the Bounty," near completion, and in Warner's "Captain Blood" and "La Fitte, the Pirate," soon to start filming.

Warner, more than any other company, is capitalizing on the lure of the ocean. In addition to the two pirate films, it will make "The Skipper of the Ispahan," tale of the China Seas. There are many boat scenes in "Anthony Adverse," and the fleet goes to sea in "Shipmates Forever."

Universal plans "Captain Commanding" for Jack Holt. It is a tale of life abroad a destroyer. Samuel Goldwyn's "Merrily We Marry" has many scenes on a navy plane carrier. Paramount's "Annapolis Farewell" will have some scenes taken at sea. RKO-Radio will do "Plan 16," mystery yarn of ships steered off their courses by a mysterious invention.

And then, of course, there are gondolas in "Top Hat."

Rudy Vallee flew into town the other night with his orchestra and variety show, for a week's appearance at the Chicago theatre. Rudy gets $12,500 for the appearance, but such items as $3,010 for transportation and a nice piece of change for the income tax collector doesn't leave a great deal for the New England bandmaster who once was the leading projectionist in the Star theatre in Westbrook, Maine.

Besides running the hand-cranked Powers projector, Rudy was chief janitor and film delivery boy, all for $7 a week.

At the present time Rudy is trying to find a story which he thinks suitable for the Warner picture he is to make this fall. He doesn't want a musical, night-club or backstage type of story. In fact, he has turned down all suggestions of that kind. Rudy feels that the story is the important thing about a picture and until he gets what he wants production won't start.

FitzPatrick Plans Three Features

James A. FitzPatrick is planning three features for production this winter.

While the exteriors for "David Livingstone" have been completed, the name role has yet to be assigned. For this role he is negotiating with Clive Brook. The tentatively titled "Oriental Paradise" an all-Technicolor picture, is in the cutting, editing and recording stage. "Oriental Paradise" was made in Japan under supervision of Mrs. FitzPatrick.

For his third feature, Mr. FitzPatrick plans to produce a special film in Peru. The story already has been completed. Cameron Rogers, who recently joined FitzPatrick Pictures as head of the scenario department, is writing the dialogue. Release is expected in December.

Fire early last Friday destroyed the Odeon theatre, a landmark in St. Louis, with an estimated damage of $100,000. For many years the Odeon, with a seating capacity of 3,000, was the scene of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra concerts, and later was turned into a film theatre. McBraun & Vance recently transferred the Odeon to Oscar Dane, burlesque operator.

Carewe to Make Films For Churches and Schools

Edwin Carewe, director who has been in the business for 22 years, has formed Carewe Pictures Corporation to make product for exclusive church and school showing. He criticized the industry for "sexy" pictures glorifying gangsters and "shady women."

A production council of nine, from church and educational groups, will pass on all stories and casts, the features to be in sound, color and four major languages.

Mr. Carewe is president and director general; Martin T. Hughes, vice-president, and Reverend T. M. Buley, secretary-treasurer.

Urges Careful Planning In Use of Films in Schools

James Marshall, member of the New York board of education, in a report this week, declared it would be extravagant to put additional sound film equipment in the schools, as has been planned by the board, until a comprehensive plan for adoption of this type of study has been developed. The report was a supplement to one made last May recommending wider use of films in the schools.

Mr. Marshall made the point that certain types of films may be unsuitable for certain studies, and said: "We do not want to feel that this money, which can be well spent in visual education, is being squandered through lack of planning. What should be an essential tool of modern instruction should not be permitted to become an expensive luxury."

Rare Animal's Capture To Feature Buck Picture

According to announcement from RKO Radio, the next, or third, wild animal feature, produced by Van Beuren and Frank Buck and to be released by RKO, will include pictures of the capture alive of the rare gaur, or saladang, as it is known in Sumatra, said to be one of the most ferocious animals extant. The animal is understood to be a fierce fighter, which will engage in battle to the death without the slightest provocation. It is described as having the shape of a wild buffalo, the strength of an elephant, the speed of a panther and the killing instinct of a cobra.

H. G. Wells to Write Entirely for the Screen

H. G. Wells, noted English author, plans, in the nature of an experiment, to devote the next three years to writing and adapting stories for the motion picture. Two of his stories, "The Man Who Could Work Miracles" and "100 Years From Now" are being produced by Alexander Korda of London films, with whom Mr. Wells will be associated in his "experiment." Both films will be released by United Artists. The author plans the publication of each screen play in a magazine at the time of release as a motion picture.

Children Mob Shirley Temple

Shirley Temple, visiting Honolulu with her parents on a vacation from Hollywood, narrowly escaped being caught in a crowd of 8,000 children waiting at the dock for the six-year-old actress.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 277 (one of a special group on sound).—(A) In equipment where the power supply for the energizing coil of the relay is obtained from a rectified a.c. source, a "hum" may sometimes develop. What is the usual cause of this, and what can be done in an emergency to eliminate it? (B) In equipment employing a separate voltage and power amplifier, provision is usually made for operating the screen speakers from the voltage amplifier in case of failure of the power amplifier. How would you proceed to accomplish this purpose?

Answer to Question No. 271

Bluebook School Question No. 271 was: (A) What care should be given the photocell? (B) Why is it important to keep a light connected to an a.c. circuit away from the soundhead, especially when the exciter lamp is operated on d.c? (C) How often should the Morse silent projector drive chain be lubricated, and what type of lubricant should be used thereon?

The engineers submitting this question reply: "(A) The glass envelope of the photocell should be cleaned every time the exciter lamp is cleaned, and that is before starting each day. It is very important that the prongs of the photocell make perfect contact with the socket contacts. Poor contact will in most cases produce extraneous noise in the sound.

"(B) If light emitted from a lamp connected with a.c. supply is permitted to fall upon the photocell a hum will be produced in the loudspeaker. Those equipments that operate with exciter lamps supplied with a.c. are especially designed to minimize the hum introduced by a.c. power supply source.

"(C) The Morse silent chain consists of a series of small links held together with pins that act as bearing surfaces. It is of course essential to long life of the chain that these bearings be well and properly lubricated. Otherwise the wear will be excessive. Some forms of graphite lubricant contain solid substance or gritty matter that might cause wear in excess of that of chains lubricated with a good grade of engine oil. It therefore is best to lubricate such chains at least once a week with heavy engine oil (Mobiloil B, for example) or with cup grease. Do not use any form of graphite, for the reasons cited."

To this I would add the remark that once a week is too indefinite, since many theatres operate 12 or more hours per day, while others are open a far less number of hours. I would myself suggest the lubrication of such chains with a good grade of engine oil once for each ten hours of actual operation of the projector, which in all-day theatres would mean approximately every other day.

G. E. Doe, who has been pretty consistent in sending excellent Bluebook School answers for a long while, sends with his answer to Question No. 271, this letter:

"Confound you, F. H., this school thing has got me. I've tried several times to lay off it, only to find myself agoin' very soon, sending in answers. Digging out the answers, as I very often have to do, is so fascinating that I just can't seem to stop. In fact, I am just back from a two-weeks vacation up in southern Minnesota, fishing, and believe it or not, the middle of last week I drove 53 miles (there and back) to a theatre where I could see the Herald and get the 'School' questions and answers I'd missed. Just couldn't wait until I returned home, and I believe you will admit that's going some.

"But, F. H., the 'School' has done me a lot of good. It has taught me how very much there is to learn in our profession. It has made a better, more efficient workman of me, and I am sure of all those who have followed it, even though not sending in answers. And I personally know that a very large percentage of the men with whom I have acquaintance do follow it more or less regularly.

"More power to you, Dad, and to the Motion Picture Herald and Better Theatres that make your work possible. I take the liberty of calling you Dad for the reason that after all it was you who, absolutely all alone and unaided, fought the good fight of and for projection for years, as I well remember."

At which I modestly blush a brilliant rosy red.

Answering Section A, C. Rau and S. Evans say, "The photocell should be very carefully handled, both when being inserted into or removed from its socket, in order to avoid possibility of some jar which might displace some of its parts. It should not be exposed to light more than is necessary. Therefore when stored, it should be wrapped in tissue paper, or better yet, in black cloth, placed in a container and stored in a dry, cool place where it cannot possibly fall or be subjected to any heavy jarring shock.

"When in use it should be cleaned and polished, preferably before the start of the first show each day. Before being inserted in the socket, the prongs should be carefully inspected and thoroughly cleaned if they are not already so. A habit of pushing in and pulling out the cell several times at inspection has a tendency to keep the prongs clean and bright. When inserting a cell be very certain to push it all the way down. If you do not, there will be imperfect contact, loss of sound volume and noisy reproduction."

An excellent answer, only I'm not so certain about the "pull out and push in" part. It seems to me too much chance for possible jar. What do our readers think about it? Better scrub the prongs with crocus cloth.

(B) D. Goldberg and L. Hutch say: "All light other than that from the exciter lamp should be kept from entering the photocell. This is particularly true of light from an a.c. source, since it will impart to the electric current set up by the photocell, an a.c. vibration that will appear in the loudspeakers in the form of a buzz or hum. This would be true regardless of what the exciter lamp current source might be, therefore we are unable to see that the exciter light source would make any real difference."

With reference to the last comment of Messrs. Goldberg and Hutch, equipments intended for use with a.c. exciter lamps are specially designed to minimize the hum, as the engineers have pointed out above. While this design would also tend to minimize the hum from a light connected to an a.c. circuit, some hum probably would be introduced if the light were brought too close to the photoelectric cell.

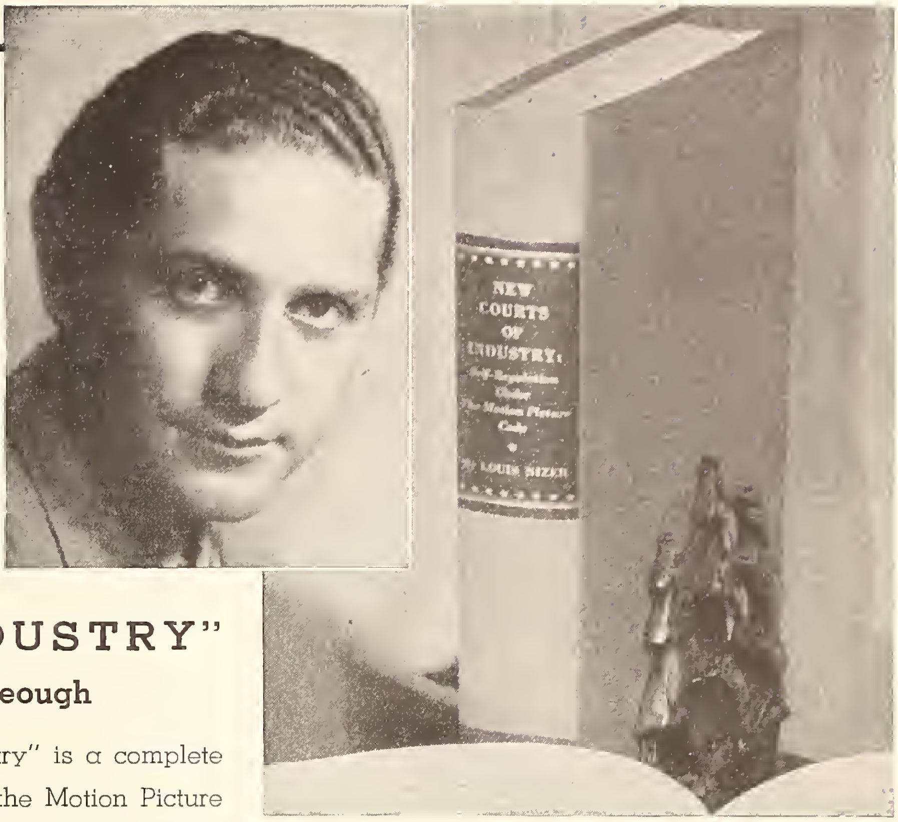
Is the Motion Picture Industry prepared for voluntary "Self-regulation?" Should the benefits of the Code be embodied in a new voluntary pact? Should there be an industry tribunal voluntarily organized and representative of the entire industry, to enforce a voluntary Code? ● The answers to these and many other questions of equal importance to the Motion Picture Industry can be found in . . .



NEW COURTS OF INDUSTRY: Self-Regulation Under The Motion Picture Code
LOUIS NIZER

Louis Nizer's

"NEW COURTS OF INDUSTRY"

With Introduction by Austin C. Keough

Written with great clarity, "New Courts of Industry" is a complete statistical study of the benefits and workings of the Motion Picture Code. It is a book that must be read for an intelligent understanding of these vital questions which are the subject of so much discussion at this time throughout the industry. ● "New Courts of Industry" will be of immeasurable assistance to everyone in this industry who desires to know whether voluntary self-regulation is necessary or advisable.

DO YOU KNOW HOW, under a voluntary Code . . . ?

(1) Reasonable clearance can be effected?

(2) Operating policies can be regulated?

(3) Selective buying can be restricted reasonably?

(4) A shortage of quality product can be remedied?

Mr. Nizer sets forth all the facts concerning these and many other questions.

"NEW COURTS OF INDUSTRY is a stimulating and thoroughly enjoyable book.

"One of the most informative sections I found in the book is the discussion of what was designated as fair trade practices and those which were unfair trade practices, and of how it was proposed to eliminate the latter. The book deserves wide attention and wide reading."

RAYMOND MOLEY

"Mr. Nizer's book is a valuable contribution to public understanding."

DONALD R. RICHBERG

"Mr. Nizer's book, replete with interesting and informative data fresh from the record, is of value not only to those of us within the motion picture industry, but to all . . . the book records a significant example of what can be done in self-regulation of industry."

WILL H. HAYS

"Mr. Nizer's pioneer study of the industrial boards established under the Motion Picture Code constitutes a welcome and notable contribution. . . . His effort is the first step in the process of scientific observation, and it is hoped that the literature which he is initiating will soon be crowded with similar studies."

PROFESSOR MILTON HANDLER, Columbia Law Review

"The author, for years one of the industry's outstanding attorneys, has lived and slept with motion picture practices and litigations . . . NEW COURTS OF INDUSTRY is virtually indispensable to all members of the motion picture business. It deserves a spot in every library."

Film Daily

"There is nothing that Mr. Nizer does not know about the motion picture industry and he writes with great clarity."

WILLIAM ROSE BENET

"NEW COURTS OF INDUSTRY is comprehensive, comprehending and highly constructive . . . the book presents its material extremely well and it is intelligently written for all members of all industries. . . ."

SOL A. ROSENBLATT

"As a factual analysis, I believe this book should have a very important informative and historical significance."

DANIEL C. ROPER

"Written with a tense clarity and simplicity that render the most intricate problems of the industry intelligible and interesting . . . Mr. Nizer ends on a prophetic note . . . Recommended to motion picture people as an excellent handbook for their use and guidance, and to lawyers and students of arbitration, industrial and sociological development, as an authoritative and well written treatise."

HARRY P. LANDER, New Haven Journal Courier

"For a lawyer, Louis Nizer is surprisingly direct. His literary style in his new book, 'New Courts of Industry,' is swift and lucid. The net result for exhibitors and distributors is that probably for the first time they have a guide to . . . whatever goal they happen to be seeking. The book . . . will appeal to exhibitors with an aversion to the legal phraseology . . . it furnishes more real information . . . than has been available heretofore."

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Green Bay, Wisconsin.

Dear Herald:

Green Bay has something like 40,000 Badgers besides a few Swedes and Norwegians. We have seen the Swedes and Norwegians but we haven't seen a badger since coming into the state. In fact, it was the Swedes and Norwegians, together with the Swiss, who made this the greatest cheese state in the Union. Over here they talk cheese. In Nebraska they talk Hereford cattle and some gafiltafisk and down in the Rio Grande valley they talk spaghetta and grapefruit, and Shine Mason of McAllen talks to the girls and Bob Smith of Mission talks about Red Fish Bay and his fishing lodge.

They built Green Bay right on the southern end of Green Bay, but don't get Green Bay and Green Bay mixed. One Green Bay is a town and the other Green Bay is a somewhat shallow body of water opening into Lake Michigan, or somewhere up there, which connects with all of the important ports of the world. When they get the Mississippi river dredged (if they do), you can take a boat at Minneapolis and go down the Mississippi to the gulf, then out into the Atlantic and up to the St. Lawrence river and up the river to the Great Lakes and on around to Green Bay by boat and never get your feet wet, but you can take an automobile and drive across to Minneapolis from Green Bay in about three hours and get back home two weeks before the boat would get in from Minneapolis.

But speaking of dredging the Mississippi and Missouri rivers for transportation purposes and building that "shelterbelt" for the purpose of "bringing rain," that is what we designate as "Brain Trust" progression, but of course that's got nothing to do with Green Bay, she isn't responsible.

Over at White Water we met Fred Hinds. Fred, you know, operates the theatre there, that is, he handles the cash but the boys and girls do the most of the work, but of course, under his direction. When we called on him he was getting ready to leave for Independence, Iowa, so we didn't loaf around very long but went down to call on our old friend, D. F. Kelliher, manager of the Sprague theatre at Elkhorn. We never aim to miss calling on Mr. Kelliher because he is such a congenial gentleman and always shows us every courtesy. He has a lovely theatre and seemed to be doing a very satisfactory business.

Then we drove over the Burlington to meet Jack Yeo, who operates Burlington's popular playhouse. We try not to miss Jack because Jack never misses anybody, not even a vagabond colyumnist, unless he should ask him for a ten spot, which he didn't do (this time).

Jack thinks that Wisconsin leads the Union. It does in a whole lot of things, including limburger cheese, and the balance of the Union can always tell where Wisconsin is when they find out which way the wind is from. Jack says he likes Wisconsin's huckleberries better than he does her limburger, but he is especially fond of Shirley Temple and Jane Withers. So are we, and so is everybody.

Good Shows in Good Theatre

I. J. Craite operates the Pastime theatre at Horicon, and the people of Horicon don't have to drive away from town to see a good show in a good theatre. I. J. looks after that part.

Walter Bump is the assistant manager of the Capitol theatre at Manitowoc. We had a nice visit with him and we wanted to see our old friend Mr. Gettigener the manager but he had gone away on a fishing trip. Doggone the luck anyhow, why didn't he wait for us?

Pt. Washington has a number of things to be thankful for (and some she'd like to forget) and among her fine qualities we note the Grand theatre, which is presided over by a guy by the name of Roob.

Mr. Roob don't only have a fine theatre but he also operates one of the finest cafes west of South Bend, Indiana, and east of Neligh, Nebraska, and Pt. Washington is the place where we got some smoked fish to send home. This town is the fish center of eastern Wisconsin as well as the amusement center of the state. If Roob wasn't a Polander we'd bet he was a Frenchman from Indiana.

And Those Cherries

Frank Borchert operates the theatre at Sturgeon Bay, and Sturgeon Bay is located on a strip of water that connects Green Bay with Lake Michigan, and it divides that long, narrow strip of land that runs up northeast between Lake Michigan and Green Bay from the balance of the U. S., and this is the strip of land that has become so famous all over the country for its cherries, and is probably the greatest cherry producing country on earth. Up here they talk cherries all the while, just like Ted Mendenhall, branch manager for Paramount at Omaha, talks about bullheads in the Platte river.

Don't ever go to Mauston without calling on Mrs. Nagle and her Crescent theatre. You will find her theatre a popular gathering place for the public and Mrs. Nagle a very delightful lady.

John Steenport and his Chilton theatre at Chilton are regarded by the Wisconsin Badgers as being largely responsible for what measure of success Chilton enjoys. John also furnishes the community with the best paint there is made but also the best there is to be had in entertainment. We had a very delightful visit with him and hope to go back again some time.

Doorway to the North

H. W. Robarge of the Cosmo theatre and W. G. Klug of the Badger theatre at Merrill are two operators in one town who operate in perfect harmony, we seldom find this, and as a result they are both doing a fine business. Merrill is the doorway to the uncharted north where the lakes are located throughout the cut-over lands of the state. Merrill at onetime was a "lumber town" and her immense sawmills were the pride of the northwest, but the timber is about all gone and the mills are mostly idle and if it wasn't for Mr. Robarge and Mr. Klug the town might go back to the Chippewa Indians, but these boys, together with their theatres, still have the arrows pointing toward Merrill. They are two mighty fine boys. We had a delightful visit with them.

J. H. Hickey is still operating the Grand at New London. He recognized us as soon as we walked up to his theatre, that boy has a memory longer than a sled-tongue, he's the chap that gave us some smoked sturgeon when we were there about six years ago. We'd forgotten who it was until he called our attention to it. Don't go through New London without calling on J. H. If you do you will miss half of your trip. You are darned right, you will.

Kaukauna, Wisconsin.

We drove down here to spend Sunday because William J. Van Dyke operates the Vaudette theatre, and if he and the Vaudette don't pull 'em in here nothing will, but then, of course, that includes Mrs. Van Dyke.

We went over to the Vaudette last night to visit them and, by gosh, we are going over again tonight. We say "going over" and that's because the Fox river divides the town in two parts, the north and the south side, and we are staying on the north side, while the Vaudette is on the south side. If you want to learn how to manage a theatre you should come here and consult Mr. Van Dyke. He hasn't been in the business yet quite forty years but he has been in it long enough to learn about all there is to be learned about it, and he doesn't have a love-song crooner nor a jazz orchestra in the house, that's probably why he has to turn 'em away about every night.

We are going over into Minnesota pretty soon to see the Gophers over there. Doggone them Gophers anyhow.

"Fashion Magazine" Release Plan

Nationwide showings of the new "Fashion Magazine of the Screen" in one large department store in each city is the plan of the company, which is headed by Louis Urdang. The film is not being shown at Macy's in New York, as reported, but release will await a national hookup. The company offers an exclusive franchise for sales promotion service by way of sound pictures, dramatizing merchandise and showing fashions at the point of sale. The films are produced at Biograph Studios, New York, and RCA equipment is used.

Stevenson in Ad Concern

Edward Ford Stevenson, formerly president of Visugraphic Pictures and associated with Crosby Gaige, Broadway theatrical producer, is now with Kelly, Nason and Roosevelt, Inc., handling advertising, merchandising and publicity, with headquarters at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, and 841 Monadnock Building, San Francisco.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

AIR HAWKS: Ralph Bellamy, Tala Birell, Wiley Post—If you want one of the best air pictures made in a long time, get this one and it will suit the customers if anything will. Action, comedy and good interesting story make for fine entertainment.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, Walter Connolly—Here is a picture you can't miss. Good acting, good story and good everything. Play this by all means. Columbia, our patrons thanked us for showing it and now we thank you for letting us have it at a reasonable price. Many, many favorable comments. Only objectionable thing was the part that Darro played. What's wrong, Frankie?—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—You may promise an evening of super entertainment and the picture will live up to it. A grand show. Played June 14.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING SHADOWS: Tim McCoy—An interesting story of the Northwest Mounted Police. Drew well for me and everyone well satisfied. Running time, 58 minutes. Played July 12.—Chas. T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

FIGHTING RANGER, THE: Buck Jones, Dorothy Revier—For western fans this proved O. K. Just another western to others, which means they stayed home. Played July 19.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson, Walter Connolly, Roger Pryor—One of the better pictures on which you can't go wrong. Played June 28. —Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

LOVE ME FOREVER: Grace Moore, Leo Carrillo—It seems unfortunate that such a lovely personality as Grace Moore should be wrecked, so far as the screen is concerned, on the shoals of repetition. This picture is almost a duplication of "One Night of Love." While the story and its locale, for the most part, are different, all the highlights of the first film are to be found thinly disguised in the second. Miss Moore is seen as a talented singer who finds her way to the Metropolitan Opera House via a cabaret and then a night club, where she is heard by the opera authorities. As in film number one we find her singing from a balcony, only this time is is in Lake Placid instead of Italy. Again she is seen having a case of nervous jitters before making her initial public appearance as a singer. And, of course, there is an amorous young man whom she eventually decides against in favor of the older gentleman responsible for her success. The novelty of "One Night of Love" lay in its introduction to operatic excerpts from the finest operas. "Love Me Forever" practically takes up where the first film goes overboard with high C's and arm waving. Don't misunderstand, "Love Me Forever" is a good picture of its type but certaintly not what it should be.—J. W. Noah, Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore, Tullio Carminati—One Night of Love for Miss Moore, but two nights of empty seats for us. Too highbrow for our crowd. Thought it great personally. Running time, 82 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—This was a splendid picture, but had only average business. Wouldn't call it a special. Robinson isn't so popular with us.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Robert Young, Doris Kenyon—Very good; a better-than-average production. Played May 31.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

First National

CASE OF THE CURIOUS BRIDE: Warren William—Another good Clue Club mystery story. But don't overdo them, First National, because patrons will soon tire of them. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 17-18.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE CURIOUS BRIDE: Warren William—Another of the endless cycle of murder pictures and we are getting tired of them. Good enough for this kind of picture. No draw at the box office. Running time, 69 minutes. Played July 20-21.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CONVENTION CITY: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell, Adolphe Menjou, Mary Astor—This sure pleased a Saturday night crowd. Played with a western and it made a fine show. Many, many laughs. Played mighty old but they liked it just the same.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

FASHIONS OF 1934: William Powell, Bette Davis —Old but very good and it drew better than expected. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

G MEN, THE: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—A strong picture with plenty of action. There is almost no comedy relief in the picture. Plenty of drama is enacted in "The G Men" and it is a good weekend picture for any house. But right on the heels of this one comes the old vicious cycle, "Public Hero No. 1," "Let 'Em Have It," and we have them both in a short time.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

G-MEN, THE: James Cagney, Ann Dvorak, Robert Armstrong, Margaret Lindsay—Excellent entertainment, so said our patrons, and turned out in goodly numbers to prove they meant it. Cagney is a favorite with this town and as this was an unusual role for him, his fans were curious to see how he would acquit himhelf. Nice business. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 17-18.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler —Flopped on this one badly on account of playing it a month too late. Nothing wrong with the picture if you like Warner musicals, but there seems to be plenty of people who evidently do not like them, as the box office records show on the last two or three of the musicals.—Warren Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler —Al has a swell voice and uses it in this picture. Ruby has some dancing ability and also registers here. Stereotyped dancing numbers of large ensembles are getting pretty shopworn, though. Running time, 97 minutes. Played July 7-8.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler —A real good musical. Give Al Jolson some songs to sing and a story fairly worth while, which will hold the interest, and the result will be good entertainment. This has a story that holds together nicely, and songs that are much above the average. Al Jolson gives it all he has got, which is plenty, and Warner Bros. did not spare the cash. Business a little better than average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Heretofore this pair have scored, but this picture did not. I don't think that Kibbee will hold up as a star heading a cast. He was swell in supporting roles and I think that he would be more successful than carrying the whole picture. At least I must gather that reaction from the slight business that this picture did.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee —This proved to be some swell show for our Fourth of July celebration. Good story with plenty of comedy situations. Exceptionally interesting when the politicians are put to rout and the old home town newspaper gets into action to turn a losing cause into victory. The little girl actress is mighty sweet and should do well in future productions. Running time, 71 minutes. Played July 4.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. General patronage.

Fox

BLACK SHEEP: Edmund Lowe, Claire Trevor—Thrilling and very interesting story on board ship. Edmund Lowe is a favorite here and we would like to see more of Claire Trevor. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 3-4.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

COWBOY MILLIONAIRE: George O'Brien—Average O'Brien, and average for O'Brien is better than most of his type. Played July 16-17.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

DARING YOUNG MAN, THE: James Dunn, Mae Clarke—Just a fair program picture; nothing to rave about. Will get by and that is about all.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers, Evelyn Venable—Gave one hundred per cent entertainment and attendance was fine. I doff my hat to Bill. Played July 5.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers, Billie Burke, Alison Skipworth—They come to see Bill in anything that he is in but this is the weakest sister that he has ever appeared in. This one will not add to his record. I have seen stars fall and seen them rise, and it does not take many weak pictures to finish them with the public. Billie Burke did not help it any for us. Most of our audience don't go for her at all. She is too fluttery and affected, but maybe that is what the role called for. I don't know but they are very vocal about her acting and a lot of the patrons that I have close contact with express themselves that way. And I think that the criticism is justified.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers, Billie Burke, Alison Skipworth—Not the type of picture our patrons like to see Rogers in. The rest of the cast was the whole show until the last reel or two, when Rogers took matters into his own hands with laughable results. His take-off on crooners is a riot, the best spot in the whole picture. Business just fair and audience reaction split. Running time, 73 minutes. Played July 21-23.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Still our best drawing card. If it's a Rogers picture, the patrons ask no more. Of course, some are better than others, and this, in our opinion, was not his best by any means. Even then, some expressed the opinion that it was his best or equal to his best. Seemed to us that it started very slowly but picked up toward the end. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 12-13.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—When it comes to operas, the only kind that fill my house are Zane Grey's horse operas. This one did the trick. Above average business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played July 26-27.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Good Friday-Saturday picture. Average hot weather business. George O'Brien well liked here. Pleased 80 per cent. Running time, 64 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—One of the best programmers from Fox. This picture is far better than lots of so called specials. You won't make a mistake by playing this one. Running time, 71 minutes. Played June 30-July 1.—Chas. T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple, Joel McCrea—Somewhat disappointing all around. Neither the part for Shirley, nor the type of story the fans wish to see her in. At times she lost entirely the sweet naturalness which has endeared her to the public, and seemed forced in action and line delivery. Come on, Fox, give her kid stories and cast James Dunn with her, and watch the public smile. Running time, 66 minutes. Played July 14-16.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Our patrons did not like this as well as other Temple pictures, but we paid Fox the biggest average of any, so can't complain on crowd. Played July 20-22.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

ORCHIDS TO YOU: Jean Muir, John Boles—A very entertaining little program picture which sent the fans out thoroughly satisfied. Has a nice story and where could you find a more entrancing little star than Jean Muir? Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 10-11.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marian Nixon, Ralph Bellamy—Another old film which we brought back and played to profitable attendance. It is a fine picture and it more than pleased the many patrons who had either failed to see it when we first played it or wished to see it again.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti Gallian—Just fair and that is too bad for Baxter. Maybe we expected too much, but it is not up to "The Arizona Kid."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—A good enough western but why call it Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man," when there is not a single sequence taken from the book? The names of the characters are the same but the story has been changed until its own author would not know it. And the change is certainly not an improvement. I would have got by all right if I had not advertised it as Harold Bell Wright's book. I am still explaining why it did not follow the book. If Fox will change the name to "Knight of the Wide Open Spaces" or "Larry Rides Again" and leave out all reference to the author, it will be a lot better for the box office. Running time, 66 minutes. Played July 17-18.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—Fine picture which brought in some faces we had missed. They liked it. It stood up well both nights.—Harland Rankin. Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Gaumont British

CHU CHIN CHOW: Anna May Wong, George Robey—A splendid picture that just did no business. Maybe it was the weather. Played July 18-19.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

Mascot

LADIES CRAVE EXCITEMENT: Norman Foster, Evalyn Knapp—A "sleeper." We had heard practically nothing concerning this film prior to buying it and it was purchased solely for the lower half of a double bill. It proved to be as strong as its companion feature and received many compliments. It is one of the best independent films I have seen in months, as it is original, well produced and acted, and filled with numerous exciting situations. I have seen most of the Mascot productions and I consider this the best they have released.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MGM

BAND PLAYS ON, THE: Robert Young, Betty Furness—An unoriginal football story whose entertaining value lies in its good production. Pleasant but unpretentious entertainment which received passably good response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

GAY BRIDE, THE: Carole Lombard, Chester Morris—Good program picture to satisfactory audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HIDEOUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—Played this late but glad we picked it up. Just the kind of a picture you are glad to present to your patrons and they are glad they came to see. Hottest weather on record played as opposition, but those who did turn out were well repaid and told us so. Running time, 71 minutes. Played July 12-13.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker, Ted Healy—Leo must have had his tongue in his cheek when he turned this one loose on the public. If it was intended as a serious offering of the murder mystery type, then it was a dud. But if Metro intended it for a comedy, then they succeeded very well. Plenty of laughs and a unique setting for such a story. Business good and audience reaction favorable. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 19-20.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—This was a wonderful picture. Pleased everyone that came to see it, but my patrons don't care for operas. Did below average business. Running time, 106 minutes. Played July 19-21.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE NEW YORK NIGHT: Franchot Tone, Una Merkel—Murder mystery comedy which might have been much better entertainment than it was. Pulled only fairly well and pleased to about the same degree. Running time, 71 minutes. Played July 10-11.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RECKLESS: Jean Harlow, William Powell—Somewhat disappointed in Jean Harlow. Not the type of picture you or your patrons expect. I would like to see Jean Harlow in a real up-to-date story with modern music, romance, etc. With the settings in "Reckless" I think the company missed an opportunity to put out a big special production. Even William Powell added but little to the picture. Might do better in larger situations. Running time, 99 minutes. Played July 12.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. General patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—Nothing finer has ever been offered the lovers of screen entertainment. The unbelievable acting of a mountain puma and a deer will linger long in the memories of all who are fortunate enough to see the picture. Jean Parker fits right into the picture. Filmed in the famous Sequoia Red Wood forest with all its natural beauty. Tell your patrons about it. Received more comments than any picture we have had. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 7.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. General patronage.

SHADOW OF DOUBT: Virginia Bruce, Ricardo Cortez—Good program picture which received fair audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

VAGABOND LADY: Robert Young, Evelyn Venable—This was a good little picture with lots of action and comedy. Pleased everyone and did average business. Running time, 71 minutes. Played July 9-10.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Thetre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

HAPPY LANDING: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells—A good action picture. I double billed it with a western on Saturday night and it made a good program.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

HEALER, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Karen Morley, Mickey Rooney—The only thing against this splendid offering is the title. But if you can overcome that and get the patrons in the first night, the rest of the run will take care of itself. The Herald's review says "Home-spun, down-to-earth drama, with contrasting comedy," which tells the tale. Will please in almost any situation. Running time, 77 minutes. Played July 13.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HONEYMOON LIMITED: Neil Hamilton, Irene Hervey—Below average program picture which received only fair audience response on a double bill with "Arrowsmith."—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Norman Foster, Charlotte Henry—Too much cannot be said in favor of this one. It is well done so that you may not be afraid to place it on your best playing time. We had opposition in "Doubting Thomas," and as everything is measured by Will Rogers, I can tell you we had better than average business. Therefore can safely report to you that "Hoosier Schoolmaster" has box office value.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES, THE: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness, Emma Dunn—Here is a picture that any exhibitor can be proud to play. I played it new and it sure drew a good crowd and pleased. Picture very well done. Pretty scenery, good acting, of course a good story, and good direction. This picture should make money for every exhibitor as it is clean entertainment that can be sold to the whole family and it will come as near pleasing all the family as anything you can get (it proved that way in my town). I just came in from the show and I can't say too much for this. Many, many praises from satisfied patrons. Monogram, many thanks to you for letting me have this at such an early date. Most of the companies think a picture must play in all the large cities before they can let a small fellow like myself have it. Monogram also produced "Girl of the Limberlost," but this picture so far surpassed (in my personal opinion) "Girl of the Limberlost" that here is no comparison. Neil Hamilton was well liked in his part as "Jamie" and he put it over in a big way, as did Emma Dunn and the rest of the cast. Better play this as soon as you can and advertise it big because it won't disappoint you or your patrons. Running time, eight reels. Played July 21-22.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

SAGEBRUSH TRAIL: John Wayne—Good western. Wayne popular here.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

TEXAS TERROR: John Wayne—Another good western from that popular western star, John Wayne. John Wayne a good drawing star here, and I had a good business on this picture in spite of a thunderstorm. Play it. Running time, 51 minutes. Played July 5.—Chas. T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Carl Brisson, Mary Ellis—A very fine picture. Many fine comments. Hope we have more pictures with Brisson.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Carl Brisson, Mary Ellis—If it were not for the good singing of Mary Ellis and the dancing of Carl Brisson this picture would be a colossal failure. As it is, it is merely a flop. Dull story of a king who trades places with an actor in order to get a somewhat delayed taste of life. Fair audience rsponse.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—An entirely different Mae West. Tell your patrons, too. Mae West's previous productions are held aganaist her, so it is up to you to sell the new Mae West. We did. We told them about it, mentioned the western scenes at the opening of the picture, the horse race at Buenos Aires, etc. Played it on a Thursday-Friday-Saturday, pleasing the farmers and the townsfolk one hundred per cent. Mae has lost none of her wise cracking ability. Story moves right from the start. Another picture, good any time you can play it. Running time, 71 minutes. Played July 18.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. General patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby—Percentage picture. Crosby a dead one for us. His pictures like a circus. See one and you see them all. Lost money on this one. Running time, 75 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Betty Furness, Richard Cromwell—Real entertainment that appeals to the masses. The old "McFadden's Flats" of the silent era was the big box office draw of its day. The new "McFadden's Flats" hardly caused a ripple at the box office aside from pleasing those that saw it and giving us a fair summer weather average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Joan Bennett, Joel McCrea—Personally thought this one of the finest pictures we ever saw. The opinion of patrons somewhat divided, many thinking it too morbid. We could not see this at all and thought the acting wonderful. Claudette has that versatility which makes her ideal for a part of this kind. Running time, 84 minutes. Played July 21-22.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Zasu Pitts—A good picture that did not seem to please as much as expected. Business off on this.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie, Grace Bradley—All I have to say on this one is that Ben Bernie better stick to his broadcasting. He is a ham as an actor. A lot of my patrons said "Phooey." And that tells the story of "Stolen Harmony."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie, Grace Bradley—A pleasing and different type of musical picture. Gay tunes, gangsters and gags well blended into an offering that drew well and registered nicely with the customers. Running time, 74 minutes. Played July 24-25.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie, Grace Bradley—A Paramount musical melody-drama that drew extra business at a mid-week showing. Our crowd liked Ben Bernie and George Raft. The story has enough mixture of thrills and music to please the majority of picture goers. Excellent sound. Musical numbers very popular. Good for any night of the week, anywhere. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 10.—John J. Metzger, Oriental Theatre, Beaver City, Neb. General patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—Good picture. Good business. Everybody happy in spite of the heat. Running time, 75 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. General patronage.

RKO Radio

DOG OF FLANDERS: Frankie Thomas, Helen Parrish—Very, very fine story of a boy and his dog, beautifully played by the boy, the dog, the little girl and the grandfather. Did not draw as well as we anticipated. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 5-6.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Sidney Blackmer, Sidney Fox—So help me, I'll never forgive Radio for releasing this goshawful thing. Poor audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—A very good musical that got me extra business. The Bill Robinson number stood out. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 14-15.—Chas. T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—An amusing lot of nonsense which pleased our patronage. Played it late and had a bad print.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LET'S TRY AGAIN: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—Very poor entertainment which received many well deserved kicks.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Pert Kelton, El Brendel—Just a fair program played to above average week end business. Weather was cooler; think it helped out. Light comedy, with El Brendel and Zasu Pitts stealing the picture.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

PEOPLE'S ENEMY: Melvyn Douglas, Preston Foster, Lila Lee—Here is another one of those G-men offerings and it is quite good. This boy Douglas is as smooth as William Powell and that is rating him pretty high. The picture did not draw but the night baseball on the lot did.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Grand and glorious singing by that beautiful and talented star, Irene Dunne. Wonderful dancing by that inimitable pair, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers. Also nice story, beautiful girls and stunning costumes. Very, very entertaining. Running time, 105 minutes. Played July 14-15.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—This picture was above the average program picture. Ginger Rogers seemed to be the draw; Francis Lederer doesn't seem to click.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—Took a chance on a three day run on this picture and believe you me it brought home the bacon. Everyone liked it and did above average business. Running time, 90 minutes. Played July 2-4.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

WOMAN IN THE DARK: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—Just moderately entertaining. Not much happens of any consequence. Double billed it with "Go Into Your Dance" but that is the fashion here and we must follow the fashion.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

ARROWSMITH: Helen Hayes, Ronald Colman—Another old one which we replayed. It is a high class picture, thoroughly adult that is produced in the usual United Artists good taste.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

COCK OF THE AIR: Chester Morris, Billie Dove—Take my advice and don't play this reissue. As a box office attraction it was better than average, but we received numerous complaints against it. People came expecting to see hard fighting and thrilling air escapades. Instead they saw seven reels of Chester Morris on the make for Billie Dove.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—This is one of the finest pictures we have played in years. It is one of the few so called "class" pictures that has mass appeal. For months our patrons requested it and they proved their interest by strong attendance when we finally played it. Perfect audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FOLIES BERGERE: Maurice Chevalier, Ann Sothern, Merle Oberon—Clever entertainment which received good audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SKY DEVILS: Spencer Tracy, William Boyd—This is one of the old pictures that United Artists used to handle but is now being re-released through an independent company. I got it from Goodrow in New Orleans, and they sent me one of the best prints I have received in months from any company. Picture is very good and if you haven't already played it and need a picture to substitute or fill in with, try it and see if it won't do some business for you as it did for me. I have "Scarface" and "Hell's Angels" coming in the next four weeks. Hope they do as good as "Sky Devils." Running time, nine reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall—I wouldn't rate it as high as some of the critics; my folks were disappointed and so was I. Played June 21.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall, Frank Morgan—When this picture was first announced and from the publicity that followed I thought Universal had another winner like "Imitation of Life," but sad to say it was not much of a success. A fine cast of players act up like a lot of silly kids, with the result that it is not funny enough for farce comedy, and too silly for serious drama. Business below average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

NOTORIOUS GENTLEMAN, A: Charles Bickford, Helen Vinson—All were well pleased with this murder story; different. Played June 7.—Frank E. Sabin, TRANSIENT LADY: Gene Raymond, Henry Hull—Good program diet. Played July 12.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.

DINKY: Jackie Cooper, Mary Astor—This was a good picture of its kind, having a number of very good juvenile players. Jackie Cooper can put over the sob stuff. Henry Armetta grand in his part. But why bury an actress like Mary Astor in such a part as she had in this? Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 19-20.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell, Hugh Herbert, Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods—A naughty but nice program picture which received splendid audience response. Fast and furious.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MOTORCYCLE COSSACKS: Oddities Series—A good filler.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HARK YE, HARK: Ben Bernie, Grace Barry—Ben Bernie in good band act with excellent singing and dancing. And not too much Ben.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PLEASED TO ME CHA!: Popeye the Sailor—A fine Popeye.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Pathe

RKO Radio

GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK: Toddle Tale Cartoons—A very good color cartoon and good music. Running time, nine minutes.—Chas. T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

SEA SORE: Musical—Very poor. Partly musical and partly comical and not enough of either to be good.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

SIMP PHONEY CONCERT: Headliner Series—This isn't so hot. Too much silly simphoney. Personally it gave me the jitters. I have played several of these Headliners from RKO and this is the first one that didn't come up to standard. Running time, 20 minutes.—Chas. T. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

BAER-BRADDOCK FIGHT: This is the best photography and sound of any fight film we have ever shown, but the box office value is low, according to the money we took in with it. If they want fight films this one should please 100 per cent.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

BAER-BRADDOCK FIGHT: This is a very good picture of the fight but of course the fight isn't much. It has fairly good drawing power. If you are planning on playing it, better do it at once before it becomes too old. Running time, three reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

GOLDEN TOUCH, THE: Silly Symphonies—Not up to the standard of Silly Symphonies.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

DIZZY DWARFS: Oswald Cartoons—Fair cartoon. Oswald a favorite here with the children. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

OLD AGE PENSION: Henry Armetta—Good comedy. Running time, two reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

SPRING IN THE PARK: Oswald Cartoons—Just a cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TOYLAND PREMIERE: Cartune Classics—Very good colored cartoon which our patrons enjoyed. Running time, 9 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

UNIVERSAL NEWS: Like it, but find it not as new as Fox. Like the set-up, they avoid interviews.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BLUE AND THE GRAY, THE: See America First Series—One of the best of this series. Have visited most of the scenes in this short and it is very interesting. This series has all been good. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CASTLE OF DREAMS, THE: Morton Downey—Fair two-reel Broadway Brevity.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE DAVIS AND BAND: Melody Master Series—All "Melody Masters" have been good.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

RADIO SCOUT: El Brendel—El Brendel takes a radio up in the hillbilly country looking for musical talent. There are continual feuds on and as soon as he gets a good quartette together, they get killed off. Well liked.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

SHOW KIDS: Meglin Kiddies, Tad Alexander—One of the best shorts I have run. The Meglin Kiddies put on some show. The Little Grass Shack number brought down the house. All the numbers are excellent and several patrons told me the short was worth the price of admission. Advertise this one like a feature. It cannot fail to please. All color. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VAUDEVILLE REEL NO. 3: Pepper Pot Series (1934-35)—A very clever Vaudeville Reel—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RAINBOW RIDERS: Bud 'n' Ben—These three-reel westerns are very good. Jack Perrin is very good as Bud. Ben Corbett does fair as Ben. Jack Perrin carries most of the action as well as the love angle. He's pleasing to my patrons.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

TAILSPIN TOMMY: Maurice Murphy, Noah Beery, Jr.—On chapter six and still good. This serial has three reels for the first chapter. Each chapter has been very exciting and there is plenty of comedy relief. Running time, two reels each chapter.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

HEARTENING

The healthy trend of the home office advertising heads to closer cooperation with the manager in the field becomes more evident with two recent steps taken by the Warner Brothers organization.

In the "Page Miss Glory" pressbook, Charlie Einfeld has spotted conspicuously three very practical and complete campaigns contributed by Round Tablers Irv Windisch, of the New York Strand, for the metropolitan first runs; Jules Field, of the Central Theatre, Jersey City, for first runs in smaller situations; and Al Plough, Commodore Theatre, Philadelphia, who suggests ideas for neighborhood-house exploitation.

To insure sound selling on the coming "Midsummer Night's Dream," Mort Blumenstock is bringing to New York 15 of the Warner Theatre zone advertising heads who are to take part in a home office discussion on merchandising ways and means.

Much good will no doubt come from contacts which so wisely tap such fertile box office sources. It is heartening to know that in effecting these cooperations, the Warner executives are in accord with what this department has had to say on the subject.

SHOW BUSINESS?

On the subject of restricted ad budgets, it seems there was a manager of a prominent neighborhood first run who while visiting your Chairman discussed a coming drive for Fall business. In course of conversation, a one-day street stunt requiring the services of eight men was suggested, whereupon the visiting brother piped up:

"Good idea, but how'm I going to raise the dough to hire eight men?"

MANAGER-MUSICIANS

Theatremen skilled in the harmonics of various musical instruments are using these talents on the air to the distinct betterment of their grosses. For instance, L. W. Bevel, of the Princess, Harriman, Tenn., has promoted a weekly program on which he performs as M. C., singer, pianist and accordionist. Wally Allen, of the Keeney, in Elmira, N. Y., is another member who takes advantage of his talents to advertise the theatre while his dextrous digits bring forth piano melodies.

Modest musically inclined managers who play privately for their own amusement should be thus encouraged to emulate these members who have an ear for music and an eye for the box office.

FINE SPORTSMANSHIP

For Quigley June Award consideration, Louie Charninsky forwarded a pip of a campaign on "Alibi Ike" put on at the Capitol, Dallas. Came the results and the genial Louie was awarded an Honorable Mention for his fine effort. In acknowledgment, the Texas Round Tabler writes as follows:

I am in receipt of your kind letter informing me of my winning Honorable Mention for my campaign on "Alibi Ike," and hereby express my deep appreciation to you for your consideration. I also wish to thank you for your letter to Mr. O'Donnell.

The Award came this morning and I am adding it to my collection to remind me that although we put up a good fight, one disappointment will not discourage me, but will spur me on to "try, try again . . . "

We offer this evidence of fine sportsmanship to the membership in general and in particular to those few entrants who have expressed themselves as being less than completely satisfied with the rulings of the judges.

JUST KIDDING HIMSELF

The situation brought about by the widespread slicing of theatre ad budgets is not being helped at all by the unwise practice indulged in by managers who endeavor to save advertising money on their so-called weak sisters to spend on the stronger attractions. Advertising appropriations in general are insufficient and the showman who operates on any such basis is not only hurting his grosses but also kidding himself that he is doing a smart job.

It is refreshing to know of instances where theatremen have been strenuously cautioned against this short sighted policy by stout-hearted superiors who have ordered "full steam ahead and damn the torpedoes."

Adapting the format of a newspaper front page, Sid Blumenstock, Warner Bros.' Atlantic City ad head, designed a unique idea for the front at the Stanley (see photo) on "Front Page Woman." Masthead across top of display announced it was the Stanley News with playdate substituted for the regular date line. Headline and photo of Bette Davis plus borders of eight by ten stills completed the flash.

For newspaper tiein, Sid promoted daily to plant five-column full theatre ad on front page, after the regular run. These were made up as heralds and distributed by newsboys.

Lustig Ties "Jane Eyre" To Australian Tea Drive

They reach for a cup of tea in "Jane Eyre" instead of a whiskey-and-soda, which action gave Mike Lustig, Australian Monogram exploiteer, an opportunity to tie the picture to the national drive in progress by the Australian Tea Market Expansion Bureau. This organization was spending lots of money to bring back to normal the national consumption of tea and thus Lustig was able to sell a hookup that brought a series of 40 to 50-inch co-op ads in the Sydney papers that ran during the engagement of the picture at the Lyceum, in that spot.

Tea folks also plugged the date over the air and other radio cooperations were effected with leading oil company that additionally plastered the territory with colored one-sheets and window streamers. "Jane Eyre" necklets and shoe tieins were also put over by the fast-moving Lustig.

Milo Scatters His Shots

Instead of confining himself to the usual co-op pages, Milo De Haven, division manager, Chakeres, Ohio, Theatres, to launch the "Doubting Thomas" opening at the Murphy Theatre in Wilmington, tied in picture to various merchants' ads every page of paper, each ad carrying the "don't be a Doubting Thomas" plug with art from the picture, theatre and title credits.

Patrons Requested To Judge Picture

The "what-do-you-think?" angle to sell a feature not universally lauded was ingeniously employed by head man George Kraska, at the Fine Arts Theatre, Boston, on his date for "Once In a Blue Moon," when patrons were asked to vote on whether it was the year's best or worst picture and given ballots for this purpose.

George started his barrage with a special midnight showing and immediately rushed out heralds carrying the newspaper critics' praises and slams. However, George reports prolonged applause at the end of the special show and requests for further screenings on a regular engagement which led to the three-day date.

The same provocative angle was followed through in the newspaper advertising campaign and the clever handling brought in quite a satisfactory gross. Ad tag line that stirred attention was—"a film you may not like but cannot afford to miss."

Similar buildup on pictures that are liable to bring in opposite opinions can be made profitable in situations where the manager is in a position to keep his campaign under control as Kraska evidently has been able to do.

Aquatic Race Staged by Sharrock on "Alibi Ike"

When the river banks around Morrilton, Ark., recently overflowed, Raleigh Sharrock at the Palace Theatre suspended bottles hung by cords to the bottoms of one of the bridges, promoted rafts and any small craft he could lay his hands on to stage a race in which contestants rowed up the river to the bridge and tried to grab for the bottles containing passes to see "Alibi Ike." Bannered motorboat led the parade, while spectators stood along the banks watching the procession. Stunt broke front page with stories.

Bryan Teaches Chicago Gentle Art of Bundling

As an eye attractor for his "Pursuit of Happiness" date at the B. & K. Bed was placed in lobby with easels in the background containing bundling copy and stills from picture.

Diversified Copy Sells "Irish In Us"

The newspaper advertising campaign on "The Irish In Us" for the date at the New York Strand was aimed by Warner ad chief, Charlie Einfeld, at all types of newspaper readers, the ads being split up for placement in four different sections.

One layout plus copy emphasizing the prizefight angle was planted in the sports sections. Another display playing up the devotion between the star and his screen mother was spotted in women's sections and yet another angle was worked on the love story pages stressing the romantic angle for the stenog and shop girl trade. At the same time the general entertainment features of the picture were highlighted with copy in the regular amusement sections, thus securing complete coverage in various parts of the papers.

And of Course, Shamrocks

Obviously the Irish motif was carried throughout the campaign, with one-sheets of black lettering on emerald green dotted with shamrocks. The front (see photo below) for the most part was executed in the same fashion, the color scheme being green on white and touched up also with shamrocks. Cagney's recent success in "G Men" was tied in with such copy as—"the man hunter of G Men goes dame huntin' again."

Fight copy cards were planted in sport clubs and popular gyms, heralds distributed at boxing arenas, display planted in lobby of Jack Dempsey's boxing gloves, photos of the former champ in action, and special letters forwarded to athletic clubs and Irish-American societies.

Bob Rosen, up at Loew's Boston Road, Bronx sector of New York, to boost his kiddie patronage, has been inducting them into a Tom Mix Club as a starter for his "Miracle Rider" serial. Each child is presented with card containing 15 punch spaces, when card is filled, promoted prizes are given out.

Bob is also distributing brightly colored cards attached to which are lucky horseshoe nails, similar to those worn by Mix's horse Tony, with instructions for kids to make their own.

Announcing the Minnesota Amusement Company Section

This issue of your Round Table is signalized by the activities, set down on the following pages, of the Minnesota Amusement Company—the third nationally known circuit to cooperate in the Club series of Guest Sections. Under the supervision of Round Tabler Charles Winchell, advertising and publicity director of the Minnesota Amusement Company, various of the circuit theatremen have contributed articles on different phases of operation and details of recent outstanding exploitations.

Campaigns from the Minnesota theatremen appear regularly in the Club pages and the material reported by them in this issue is of the same high calibre that has distinguished the previous Guest Sections.

These were inaugurated by Loew Theatres, in the issue of June 29, and followed by the Warner Bros. Theatres, in the issue of July 13. Other circuits scheduled to appear in the near future are Famous Players-Canadian, and Mullin and Pinanski New England Theatres, among others.—A-MIKE.

Nationwide Tieup Made On RKO Radio's "Top Hat"

Three-way tieup between RKO Radio, Irving Berlin offices and Lucky Strikes has been consummated for a nationwide advance campaign on the "Top Hat," the new Astaire-Rogers musical. Basis of the hookup is radio appearance of Astaire on four consecutive weekly cigarette coast-to-coast broadcasts, on Saturday evenings, August 10, 17, 24 and 31, when star will introduce the Berlin hit tunes from the picture.

Early in August, cigarette manufacturers will launch nationwide ad campaign to cover newspapers, windows, counters and radio giveaways. Ads will carry Astaire underline, and booklets showing star doing "The Piccolino," new dance in the picture, will be distributed in response to radio requests. Final broadcast will bring the series right up to the picture's pre-release date.

Tieup was worked out by S. Barret McCormick, RKO Radio's ad chieftain, and Lord and Thomas, cigarette's ad agency.

Botwick or Browning —Could Be One or Both

The M and P New England theatres are staging a beauty contest, and representatives from the State, Portland, Me., where Harry Botwick holds forth drove to Boston in a 1915 bannered model car. Arriving at a prominent Hib Hub traffic center, the car conveniently broke down (?) and it just happened that photographers were on hand so that the picture of the "accident" broke most of the papers.

Story doesn't say who engineered what, but for a quick guess, we'll take Botwick or Tod Browning, or both.

Wright's Promotional Idea For Summer Theatre Parties

Dick Wright, district manager for Warners Ohio Theatres, is using an excellent promotional idea for theatre parties. Dick suggests contacting Chamber of Commerce and getting a list of conventions scheduled for the town during the summer months.

Letter is then dispatched to the secretaries or officers of these organizations who contemplate meeting there, suggesting that perhaps theatre parties might be in order.

"Miss Glory" Press Book Offers Different Campaigns

To cover the exploitation possibilities in situations of varying sizes, Warner Brothers offer in the "Page Miss Glory" press book, three different campaigns to fit large metropolitan theatres, first-runs in smaller situations and neighborhood houses. The details of these various campaigns were contributed by Irv Windisch, of the New York Strand; Jules Field, manager Central, Jersey City, and Al Plough, manager Commodore, Philadelphia, respectively.

Book also details step-by-step procedure for a "Dawn Glory" beauty contest and a newspaper composite photo gag based on the theme in the picture by which the star becomes an overnight celebrity. Entire page is devoted to "Welcome" stunts.

Lebreton 24 Sheets Paris For "Bengal Lancers"

Another overseas showman who goes in for exploitation in a big way is Rene Lebreton, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Paris, who for his "Bengal Lancer" engagement planted four 24 sheets (see photo) along the side of building directly across from the Arc de Triomphe.

Various merchants cooperated with attractive window, lobby of theatre featured large display with newspaper rave reviews and local restaurant carried table easels with theatre and picture copy. For his street bally Lebreton used three horsemen dressed as lancers and had entire theatre staff attired similarly.

EDITORS PRAISE MINNESOTA MEN

Smart theatremen who realize the boxoffice necessity of playing square with their newspaper contacts are of course more than numerous. And while drama and picture editors are not averse to voicing their satisfaction over such dealing it is indeed gratifying to present on this page the expressions of two well-known Northwest newspaper folk regarding their local Minnesota Company representatives.—A-MIKE.

Managers Advance Through Kraus Aid

by ALMA E. RIGGLE

Drama Critic, the Fargo Forum

This story on the organization of the American Amusement Company in Fargo, N. D., where four theatres are operated, might well be entitled "Making Theatre Managers," for that is what Ed Kraus, city manager, does.

Mr. J. J. Friedl, division manager, Mr. Al Anson, district manager, and Mr. Charles Winchell, head of the division publicity department had suggested to Mr. Kraus, that he write a story on how he has built this unique organization for the MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S Managers' Round Table Club, and because this story is so definitely tied up with the personal history, personality and characteristics of Ed Kraus, your correspondent asked the privilege of doing it.

Is Important Civic Cog

The American Amusement Company operates the Fargo Theatre as an "A" house and to this house Mr. Kraus devotes the major part of his efforts, assisted by Mr. Clayton Reeves, who is next in line for a managerial post when that opportunity presents itself. The Grand Theatre operates as a "B" house with Art Molstad at the helm. The State Theatre is the second run house and is managed by Russell Stuck. The Moorhead Theatre has at its head another young man who came to the local organization six years ago, Melvin Scott. All of these houses are administered by Mr. Kraus.

Mr. Kraus has sold his organization in the community not only by furnishing a high class of service, administered by high type employees, but by making himself an important cog in the city's social and civic life. The company through its city manager participates in civic promotion and public altruism just as any other business firm.

He takes an active part in fraternal and club affairs, American Legion and local and state politics, and his personal friends are legion—all reflected in the high regard in which this theatre organization is held in Fargo and the surrounding country. In the same way, Ed Kraus and his organization sell their entertainment products to the public, and employee is sold the proper operation of the theatre from every angle and department.

There are no ushers in the Fargo-Moorhead setup. Each man has the responsibility of a department and ushers only when the occasion demands, a practice that grew up during the depression and proved satisfactory. A lad may apply for a job with the thought of "coffee and cakes" only in mind, but he is not hired unless he is seriously interested in the show business as a career or unless a two-month trial period makes him decide in favor of it.

A prospective employee is interviewed first as to his adaptability to the show business and satisfied on that point, Mr. Kraus spends considerable time giving him the "feel" of the business. He learns definitely its prospects and hardships.

New Men Well Trained

A new man immediately begins to learn the technicalities of the business. He dresses windows properly when same are used for tieups or for plain stock materials in empty stores. He is taught proper billposting, learns to use proper color schemes when handling brush in art department, he is taught the emotional responses to color for lobby and front for the various seasons and types of attractions, he learns merchandizing, makes displays, theatre fronts and the dozen other things that come with selling the product.

With technicalities well in hand, he learns the office routine and becomes assistant to Mr. Kraus. By the time he has reached this position he can in a short time be safely sent to manage a house and on that basis these boys have succeeded.

A staff meeting is held each Tuesday night, with all employees present. Mr. Kraus presides and a spirit of "let's get together" prevails. The veriest newcomer in the organization feels free to advance an idea and it is listened to with respect, whether or not it is used. Managers of each theatre are called on to contribute as are heads of departments on subjects and phases of the business they know particularly well. All join in the Round Table discussions.

Each man is given full credit for the originality he exhibits. In weekly reports to division executives, Mr. Kraus explains what was done in the way of exploiting each show and each man is given his due by name. When his name comes up for consideration as a theatre manager, every executive is familiar with the boy and with his accomplishments.

A man is never pushed unless he shows promise and the few who have not advanced are those who have not proved they have what it takes to get there. In such cases, Mr. Kraus advises a man that they both made a mistake and helps him to a job to which he seems more fitted.

Truthfulness Wins Respect of Press

by EDWARD J. SHEPARD

Motion Picture Editor, Duluth Herald

Frankness and truthfulness in relations with the press will win for theatre managers more success and respect than any outlandish exploitation stunt. These qualities will not hamper but rather will heighten their chances of obtaining space for a worthwhile exploitation trick, and usually when they need it the most.

In a number of years spent in newspaper editorial shops, I have seen this truism demonstrated frequently. Whenever a manager establishes harmonious relations with the newspapermen and deals frankly and truthfully he builds for himself a cooperation that lasts just as long as he continues his direct methods. Once let him resort to a fast one, and that relationship is destroyed.

No better example is needed than the experience of managers who have served in Duluth, Minn., for the last 20 years or so. Those who took the advice of their predecessors have fared well. Those who didn't failed to remain long.

This is as true now in the motion picture era as it was in the legitimate theatre days. It is, or should be, one of the first principles in showmanship.

Managers Play Square

Carrying out this same policy has proved beneficial to a number of managers who have handled the reins of theatres in Duluth. Some 14 years ago, Al Anson, now district manager for the Minnesota Amusement Co. took over the management of the Lyceum Theatre. For several years previously, managers had come and gone like racing cars passing grandstands. Anson, however, was of the "old school." Within a comparatively short space of time, we of the press were satisfied of this. The resulting years have been mutually beneficial.

This policy has kept managers at their posts in Duluth. Changes here are few. George D. Irwin, present Lyceum manager and city manager for the Minnesota Amusement Co., George Spaeth guiding the Lyric, and Earl Long at the Garrick have achieved success and remained at their posts for the last several years.

Newspapermen are not adverse to a good exploitation campaign. But they detest trickery and are quick to scent the Ethiopian lurking when being high pressured. The manager oozing guile meets glacial response and his competitor who frankly says "I've got an egg and need a little help" usually gets more than that.

It may seem strange for a newspaperman to be extending the helping hand to space chiseling against which he is constantly on guard, but after all a bit of friendly advice cannot be far amiss.

ON SELLING YOUR THEATRE

Dear Mike:

You have had your articles on tieups, selling pictures, ballyhoos and what have you; however, the selling of your theatre is as much of importance as the selling of your attraction daily.

I speak largely for the small town exhibitor who hasn't a modern and up-to-date theatre to offer his public. As an example, I offer the conditions that we have had to contend with in a town of 10,000 and with no deluxe theatre. Many managers are satisfied to do a little painting once a year and forget to use their imagination. In adding a little touch here and there with small expenditures, we have made various improvements in the house I speak of without any great cost. I find that your patron notices these little things. Among other things I will take each part of the theatre and tell you what we have done, much with the cooperation and suggestion of our district manager.

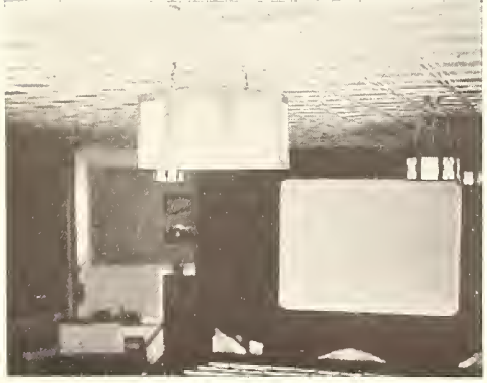
In order to make this as brief as possible and yet convey the thought to each of you, I will touch on the various parts of the theatre only.

We will start with our lobby which is approximately 50 feet across with but very little depth, we are not fortunate in having a street box office and this factor cuts into our lobby and handicaps us for proper display.

Smartens Up Lobby

On one end of our lobby we have a large display selling our coming attractions. This is illuminated indirectly and stills are used to good advantage. The other end of our lobby sells the biggest picture for the coming week using a litho six sheet with 11 x 14s as a step beneath same which is indirectly illuminated. On each side of this display, we have two massive quarter circles with an insert spotted on top. This particular lobby is exceptionally high. We therefore have to fill same in order to take care of this space. We have made small panels on the inner wall and have decorated same with artificial flowers. We also have large shadow boxes on each end of the lobby over the displays that I have just described using institutional copy.

To continue, our ladies' rest room was quite barren. We promoted wall fixtures which my operator installed, secured a floor lamp and ash stands, had star photographs framed, and filled as much as the wall space as possible, constructed a long bench which was painted and covered with a pad to make this room as comfortable as possible. Our foyer is decorated with wall vases which were securel at the ten cent store and we use artificial flowers.



One of Wainstock's Improved Chandeliers

The lighting in the foyer which was quite subdued was brightened through the use of shadow boxes with indirect lighting using stills, 11 x 14s and 22 photographs. In a tieup with local florist was able to use cut flowers which are set on small illuminated stand with frosted glass reflecting light on flower basket.

Our auditorium which has a flat ceiling with but very little ornamental work was dressed up by first painting the aisles and seat standards white, plus seat covers which we were able to secure. On each side of the rear wall, an electric wall bracket was installed with lattice work around same spotted with artificial flowers; the center wall was brightened through the use of an illuminated shadow box, using flowers and institutional copy.

Improves Chandeliers

The chandeliers in the auditorium were of old fashioned plastic bowl type, these were modernized by covering with an octagon shaped wall board box cut out and used paper to reflect light which improved the appearance of the auditorium 100 per cent. Lattice work was made up for each side of the front of the theatre using artificial flowers and indirect lighting.

Our stage, which is very small, was brightened up through the use of art panels with subdued indirect lighting. On each side of the screen shadow boxes were made up using silhouettes, same was followed through on the side walls for lighting purposes with silhouettes using orange crepe paper and a 10-watt orange amber light.

In summarizing the entire setup, don't hesitate to spot flowers when you have a space that you don't know what to do with and a little paint in your box office and rest rooms now and then certainly won't do any harm. Incidentally, the floors in our box office and rest rooms which are covered with linoleum are painted a bright red and the same applies to all motors and electrical equipment.—MIKE WAINSTOCK, Manager, Lyric Theatre, Watertown, S. Dak.

McCreary Put on Spot By Police for "G Men"

W. C. McCreary, State Theatre, Hibbing Minn., garnered a little extra publicity for his "G Men" date by giving papers story on Charlie Winchell's stunt, as reported here a short time ago, of having the campaigns delivered to the various managers by the police. Amusing story was run on McCreary's receiving call from headquarters to report immediately and the anguish he experienced until he got over there and discovered it was only to pick up the publicity for his forthcoming date.

The gag put over by Winchell and suggested by division chief J. J. Friedl was fully detailed in the issue of June 15.

Ed Seibel Promotes Theatre Golf Night

This year's St. Paul Open Golf Tournament was the most successful ever sponsored by the local committee, reports Ed Seibel, manager of the Paramount, St. Paul, in detailing how he tied in with an "Open Golf Night" at the theatre. The event fortunately happened on the opening day of his picture, "Front Page Woman," giving that date an extra sendoff.

The "night" was dedicated in honor of the golf contestants and a short program was put on to celebrate. This included introductions from the stage of 14 of the most prominent professionals, including the national champ and other well-knowns. Program was given a further lift by the presence of Dick Arlen, Paramount star, in town to take in the tournament. Arlen was promoted to act as master of ceremonies, which of course did the box office no harm.

Seibel only had two days to put across the entire campaign but in that time managed to get in a two-day advance trailer with the names of all those who would be on hand. Lobby stuff was also shot out and the front decorated with the announcement. Cloth banner was mounted atop marquee and three hours before the special show barker was out front further spreading the tidings.

Three-inch box topped opening day ad, and papers helped out with shots of Arlen and golfers with captions selling their appearance at show. Radio stations broadcast that those who could not get to the meet could see the stars at the theatre.

Day ahead, Seibel phoned clubhouses of all golf courses arranging for announcements on bulletin boards. Also invited the pros to be his guests.

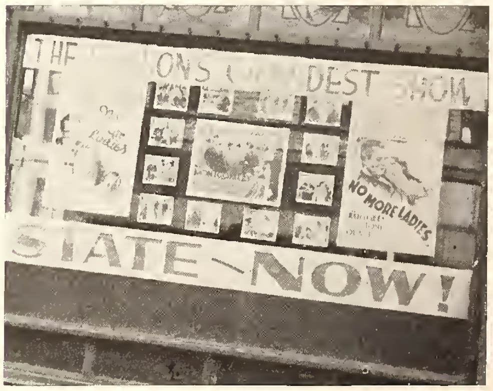
Ralph Phillips Parades Temple Contest Winner

As an extra feature of his Shirley Temple impersonation contest, Manager Ralph Phillips, State, Sioux Falls, S.D., promoted a new Chevvy, planted the winner in the car and with two ushers on the running boards holding theatre banners, proceeded to steal the spotlight in a long street parade.

Phillips has his own theories regarding effective windows for straight theatre display and the accompanying photo illustrates how much he gets out of an ordinary store window with proper arrangement of stock stills, one sheet and theatre banners.



Phillips' Effective Straight Window Display

"Watch for Ginger" Van Asks St. Paul

With the general excellence of the picture conceded, Manager Walter Van Camp, of the Riviera, St. Paul, Minn., realized the most important factor in the engagement of "Ginger" was to get an opening for the new starlet and with this in mind concentrated on a vigorous teaser campaign, with such lines as—"Who is Ginger?" "Watch for Ginger," "Ginger Is Coming," etc., etc.

These tag lines sold for two weeks ahead on single frame trailers at the end of every screen unit, placards and lobby setpieces, bumper strips, etc. All billing carried title 100 per cent and Jane Withers, 40 per cent, to tie in with the general drive.

Lobby was in keeping and for two weeks, only the teaser copy was used in standee panels and cards, followed by a spread of stills, inserts, etc., on the picture. When identity of Ginger was divulged the character was sold stronger by referring to her in all publicity as the "meanie" of "Bright Eyes," but stressing her current role as a lovable child.

So as not to weaken the effects of the teaser drive, all newspaper publicity was held off until the Sunday in advance, all papers turning in excellent breaks.

Topping the outside tieups was a stunt with the local "Uncle Tom" on popular radio program who plugged Withers and the picture at a picnic attended by thousands of St. Paul children. Twenty pairs of tickets were given in return as prizes in the youngsters' games.

Commissioner of Parks and Playgrounds also cooperated by allowing posting at all city playground club houses and further announced the date at various park celebrations. Guest tickets for winners of different children's contests were also given.

Shows Crime Exhibit On "G Men" Date

Manager Fred Weimar, Paramount, Mitchell, S. D., is another of the Minnesota boys who found effective the cooperation of his local police authorities on his "G Men'" date. Fred borrowed a number of holdup accessories and defense weapons from the sheriff's office and exhibited them (see photo) in the lobby.

Another interesting display was composed of newspaper tear sheets detailing recent captures and showing action photos of battles between the police and criminals.

CALLS FOR BRIEF TRAILERS

Dear Mike:

During the past few years, the Round Table section of Motion Picture Herald has opened its columns to exhibitors who wished to criticize or praise press books of the various producing companies. Much good resulted from this.

Now we make the suggestion that the same columns be opened to a problem that is becoming more acute every day—trailers!

A frank and honest discussion of this subject must be held, if certain problems are to be licked and the writer's humble opinion is that your columns provide the proper medium.

Certainly there is no greater advertising medium at the command of exhibitors than their own screens because of 100 per cent reader coverage, yet we abuse it unmercifully.

I can best explain that paragraph by telling you of the problems that confront us re trailers. Take for instance an "A" theatre in a town of 30,000 people running three changes of program each week.

Each program carries two advance trailers on coming attractions. Each trailer has been written to sell the particular picture it advertises and does so with claim copy that nearly exhausts the supply of adjectives. Run on the same program they draw a titter from the audience because of impossible claims.

Take a half dozen trailers and run them one right after the other. After screening, you'll wonder why the patron believes any of our advertising.

Advance Trailers a Problem

Then there is the problem of advance trailers. On outstanding pictures, various companies provide trailers to be run two, three and even four weeks in advance of playdate. Some of these have definite ticket selling qualities, others are of such length that they turn into short subjects instead of teaser trailers. Advance trailers are of extreme value in selling big pictures, but they should be held down in length and made of a teaser nature.

Another problem that demands attention is that trailers should be made to sell the public not the exhibitor on forthcoming pictures. A definite example of this is the trailer on "No More Ladies." In this trailer, with such stars as Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Franchot Tone, Charlie Ruggles and Edna Mae Oliver, "Leo The Lion" was permitted to dominate the trailer. The public doesn't give a damn about Leo in "No More Ladies"; they want to know who the stars are and what parts they play.

Says Small Towners Handicapped

Small town exhibitors generally are handcuffed as far as trailers are concerned. Right or wrong, they must run the trailer furnished them. The small town exhibitor has no facilities for making his own trailer, thus must rely entirely on the trailer ad men to sell his show properly on the best medium at his command.

If we were to make a definite suggestion to the boys handling trailer writing and makeup, it would be the following: Practice the first law of good newspaper work; make it brief and to the point, cutting down on length and eliminating adjectives and foolish claim copy.

A step in this direction by all makers of trailers would be a boon to exhibitors running more than one change of program each week.—Charles Winchell, Advertising Director, Minnesota Amusement Co.

Joe Ryan 'Dares To Tell the Truth'

Finding that a bit of the sensational now and then has a tendency to pep up the grosses, Manager Joe Ryan, Grand, St. Cloud, Minn., went for the "dares to tell the truth" angle on his "High School Girl" date, leaning also on the "not for children" slant and building up a big preview midnight show.

Ads followed this theme, as did the billing and advance trailers. Creating comment was a four-wheel trailer carrying six-sheets, threes and banners. This was pulled around by a little Austin in town and also was used to post the out-of-town billing. For local interest, Joe bannered one of the street cars (see photo).

Midnite show was announced with teaser that read: "Follow the beacon in the sky . . . tonite at eleven." Beacon was carbon-arc spot projected from the theatre marquee. For extra excitement, Ryan used railroad fusees in the center of the street, obtaining special permission for the stunt.

Eshelman Promotes Photo Of Bing and Local Paper

That sure-fire gag of a Hollywood star reading the local paper was utilized by Manager Jimmy Eshelman, of the Huron, Huron, South Dakota, who forwarded a copy of the local Evening Huronite to the Paramount studios, where Bing Crosby willingly obliged, the photo of course clicking in the Huron paper for a smart buildup on "Mississippi."

Receipts on "Caliente" were stimulated by Jimmy with a free ice cream giveaway to women and children at a Sunday matinee, the dairy going for a sock ad to help put over the tiein.

'PERSONAL INTEREST' PLAN PUTS OVER COOLING SYSTEM

This being the first Summer that patrons of the St. Cloud Grand Theatre have enjoyed the comforts of a Cooling System, we have made every effort to put this improvement over in a big way.

In addition to the regular "Cool" front, a poster campaign selling this feature, and newspaper "Cool" slugs and borders, we have gone just one step farther to make it a real ticket-seller, and I personally believe that this one extra item has done more to put it over than all the others combined.

Let us call it a "personal interest" campaign. All employees on the floor have permanent instructions to not only keep a close check on the temperature at all times throughout the house, but to make personal inquiries from time to time of various patrons in different parts of the theatre to check on their comfort. Possibly it is a little draught that is bothering someone in the front. A suggestion to move just a few rows toward the rear is entirely in order and is sincerely appreciated when this patron finds that the disturbing element no longer exists. Probably a person who has always sat in the very last row on the main floor and hasn't been getting as much breeze as he would like will never get over thanking an usher for the simple suggestion that it is a little cooler toward the front.

We have employed this thought from the first day we put our system into operation, and the thanks we have received from many patrons, not to speak of the inestimable amount of goodwill we have gained, has more than repaid us for this slight extra effort.

Another idea that has worked out nicely for us along this line is a tieup which we have arranged with a local ice company to ice our plant throughout the summer in exchange for a trailer credit on the screen. This trailer consists principally of calling attention to the cool, fresh air that patrons are breathing and credits the ice company for furnishing the pure, clean ice, etc. This tieup is so arranged as to run only as long as we need icing service and to be discontinued on the screen at the end of that time. Undoubtedly, we shall use this each summer, or at least until we find it possible to sink a well, and so obtain really cold water. At present, the city water temperature is too high to be of much use in cooling.

We offer these two ideas with the thought that perhaps other operations may be able to benefit by their usage.—Joe Ryan, Manager, Grand Theatre, St. Cloud, Minn.

Seibel and Kelly Create Lobby Floral Display

As a natural tiein on "Orchids to You," Manager Everett Seibel and publicity head Martin Kelly, organized a unique flower show one week ahead of the date at the Paramount, St. Paul. Holm and Olson, leading florists, cooperated by installing banks of flowers (see photo) in lobby and foyer. On mezzanine steps was placed waxed figure of a beautifully gowned bride carrying bouquet of orchids. Figure spotted under colored lights stopped patrons as they came in and caused lots of talk.

Display, reported one of the most unusual in any theatre, attracted wide notice.

Irwin Lands Much Space With Drawing Contests

Terming it one of the most simple, yet practical publicity gags to aid materially in calling his pictures to the attention of the buying public, City Manager George D. Irwin, Lyceum, Duluth, Minn., details a drawing contest put on regularly with one of his newspapers.

Mat of a drawing of the principals in the picture to be sold is selected from the press book and mat is run by the newspaper with instructions to readers to color the drawing with crayon or water color for prizes.

These prizes are cash, of five, three and two, with 20 additional pairs of guest tickets for the next best. George reports success with the stunt recently on "No More Ladies" and "Our Little Girl."

Star Reads Local Paper

Irwin is another of the circuit theatremen who gets a lot out of the Hollywood-star-reading-local-paper stunt and landed a nice two-column photo a few weeks ago for "Public Hero No. 1" of Chester Morris reading the Duluth Herald. Incidentally, Gus Carlson, of the Peoples, Superior, Wisconsin, pulled the same gag for an equally good break in the local press with Wallace Beery seemingly very interested in the front page of the Superior Telegram.

This good old reliable seems to be a sure shot for space in the Northwest newspapers with the smart Minnesotans going for it to good returns.

16-Day Press Tieup Tops "Town" Drive

That was quite a bit of all right, the campaign on "Goin' To Town" planned and executed by Manager Frank Steffy and ad chief, Don Alexander, at the State, Minneapolis, featured with two swifto newspaper tieups that obtained 16 days of consecutive publicity in the news section and on the classified pages.

The first tiein was hooked to the national West Round Robin telephone interview, based on the question to readers, "If you had one question to ask Mae West, what would it be?" The contest stories ran for seven days, feature yarn on the actual interview appearing the day ahead of opening. All stories landed two column heads. 25 pairs of tickets were prizes.

When this contest closed, the classified gag started, two column boxes planted daily at top of page offering pair of tickets to any one writing an advertiser and engaging his services. This angle ran right through the engagement of the picture.

Neatly handled also by Frank and Don was a tieup with a chain filling station outfit, one-sheet size posters (see photo) being planted in over 100 stations. Local election day was hooked in, too, with small "vote for" cards carrying picture copy and silhouette of West distributed by crew of boys around polling places. "It's Mae Time" blotters were handed out in office buildings and wrong number gag also clicked.

Auto parade of bannered Fords with police escort covered the downtown districts featuring a four year old West impersonator. Bally stopped at busy corners and when crowds gathered, heralds were forthcoming. Imprinted stickers were placed on rear windows of private cars by house staff who first obtained permission from owners. Cab fleet carried bumper strips.

Carlson's Doorman Is "Human Slate"

Add to the whimsies of the moment, the exploitation natural employed by Gus Carlson, at the Peoples, Superior, Wisc., on "Mark of the Vampire." It seems that Gus' doorman, Herman J. Collins, is one of those folks with a skin so sensitive that the pressure of a thumbnail will raise welts.

So-o-o, Carlson marked the lad's back with "Vampire" copy, which little job landed him a two-column story on one day and a two-column cut and caption the next, both extolling the unique billboard and giving Gus a sweet break for his date.

Molstad Stresses Trick Lobby Stuff

The execution of unusual lobby panels and displays has proven profitable for Manager A. J. Molstad, Grand, Fargo, N. D., who reports his trick exploitation has brought considerable word-of-mouth with resultant added business. Molstad describes some of his recent efforts as follows:

"Captain Hurricane"

Display composed of one-sheet cutout for background, compo board lighthouse, and toy sailing boat, set in compo board base. Around this, for water effects, torn strips of cardboard were torn to make a rough edge on one side, were folded and tacked down, painted with green water color and top edges with white to simulate whitecaps.

Display was set on table with lower half of latter covered with oilcloth (see photo).

"Four Hours to Kill"

Cabinet was built, outside covered with velour. Protruding from split in front center were two crossed hands, one grasping a revolver and other handcuffed at wrist. From bottom of velour hanging extended toes of pair of shoes giving impression of man standing behind curtain.

The hands were made by filling a pair of leather gloves with plaster of paris and molding correctly before they dried. Lath inserted between wrists before plaster dried was used to fasten hands on a cross beam behind curtain.

Lawler Gives Orchids On "Orchids to You"

The old saying that the way to a woman's heart is with flowers was ably demonstrated by Manager Harry Salisbury of the Lawler Theatre, Rochester, Minnesota, as part of his sales campaign re "Orchids to You."

In cooperation with Holm & Olson, local florists, Manager Salisbury gave away from the stage on the opening night of "Orchids to You" a beautiful orchid corsage, on a lucky number slant.

Tickets for this event were distributed to all patrons ten days in advance of play date. The florist also included a ticket with every delivery made during the same period. Both the theatre and florist took newspaper space on this stunt.

USES SALVAGED ACCESSORIES TO KEEP DOWN AD EXPENSE

One of our greatest aids in keeping the cost of our advertising down is through the use of salvaged accessories. For any second run theatre, any savings that may be utilized, will come in handy when figuring up the final results for the week. By watching the attractions playing the first run houses and picking up their used window cards, midget window cards, tire covers, etc., keeping them in good condition until your date on the pictures has been set and redating them with your dates and theatre name, you will be making the most of a good advertising medium which would otherwise be wasted and at the same time, at no cost to your theatre. I have been keeping a file of these used accessories for several months and have been able to use this file to an excellent advantage in the campaign on many of my pictures.

Another useful idea for lobby display in a small theatre, which costs nothing, is the use of press sheet novelties which can be spotted around the lobby in advance of showing, or used on a special board for Coming Attractions. Most of the press sheets put out by the various film companies contain some excellent novelties and press sheet covers which can well be used in this manner.

One of the best illustrations of the use of salvaged material that I have is three showings of "It Happened One Night" in this theatre, which was the second, third and fourth showing of the picture in Minot. Besides the routine lobby advertising, we utilized an art panel as the center of a three sheet display in the lobby, 24-sheet cutout heads of Gable and Colbert spotted in lobby with copy panels on the picture, special panel in lobby using small cutout heads of Gable and Colbert, press sheet novelties used on "Coming Attraction" board in lobby, five two sheets were spotted in choice locations throughout the business district, special photo enlargements used in cafes in advance and during the current showing. In advance of the fourth showing of the picture, we used the line, "See It Again" on all advertising, due to the fact that a large number of our patrons had already seen it. For the third showing, we included this picture in our "Month of Hits" mailing list, which was sent to surrounding towns and routes and on all showings we contacted the Women's Clubs and other organizations throughout the city.—Harvey Swenson, Manager, Orpheum Theatre, Minot, North Dakota.

Co-op Cost-Free Heralds Promoted by McCreary

Based on the code background theme of the Department of Justice, Billy McCreary, of the State, Hibbing, Minn., sends on a co-op herald put out by local market that was costless to the theatre and did a nice job of selling "Public Hero No. 1."

Herald is about nine inches by five and headed with cuts of the main characters in the picture, and immediately below, in reverse, the title. Readers are asked to supply the missing words from the following secret chart, prizes being 20 pairs of guest tickets. Here's the gag:

"Some people like to sit in a . . . chair
Unruly prisoners have to break . . .
Leave orders for the room clerk to . . .
It's time for a straw . . .
King . . . was a famous knight
The . . . is the trademark of MGM pictures."

The answers of course are the names of the characters which are not carried in the herald, but contestants are tipped off to the solutions.

Neat Photo Tieup

Effective selling is contained in the photographer tieup reported by Mike Wainstock, of the Lyric, Watertown, S. D., wherein regular size stills are reduced to three and a half by four and a half, at bottom of which are boxes containing theatre credits and photographer ad. Mike says distribution is no-cost and stunt clicks well.

Old Fashioned Ballys Click for Peldo

Firm believer in the old-time ballyhoo is Manager Louis Peldo, of the Orpheum, Aberdeen, South Dakota, who finds this form of exploitation brings a lot of attention and business for his theatre.

Pictured below is an old hayrack bannered for recent date on WLS Barn Dance for which Peldo dug up a local hill-billy orchestra to tell the folks about the show.

The unusual twist to this street ballyhoo was that it aided in the advance distribution of heralds into the homes, the hayrack following the boys all over town. And as the folks came to their doors to see what all the excitement was about, the bill boys took advantage of the opportunity to hand out the heralds on the Barn Dance engagement.

Shearer Runs Exhibit Of Cow-Hand Outfits

Evidently to give the ranchers and other folk out in Huron, S. D., an idea of what the well-dressed cow-hand is wearing, Manager J. B. Shearer, of the State Theatre broke out a lobby display of ranch clothing, saddles, lariat and all the other accessories as a tiein with "When a Man's a Man." "J. B." even included a cartridge belt and two business-like cannons.

Janssen Covers Marquee With 24's and Sixes

Operating the kind of a spot that makes circusing profitable, Manager A. Janssen, Aster, Minneapolis, gets a lot of return from his marquee posting. Meet Harry Greenberg's Ambulating Robot

Theatremen Create Unusual Ballyhoos

Quite different are the stunts put over by Minnesotans, Harry Greenberg, Byron McElligott and Fred Larkin. Their unique street bally and lobby gags are described below.

Harry Introduces "Robot"

The folks in Virginia, Minn., are still highly interested in Harry Greenberg's robot (photo above) which this Round Tabler uses to good effect at the State Theatre on "Phantom Empire" and which is put on display in lobby when not out taking the air. Robot is large enough for a small boy to get inside and furnish the motive power.

Byron Constructs Thrill Meter

Patrons' heart and nerve resistance were tested at the Capitol, Aberdeen, S. D., by City Manager Byron McElligott on "Frankenstein" by means of his "thrill-o-meter" (photo below left). Hot water bottle filled with red fluid was placed under foot pedestal at bottom of display and patrons standing on it forced fluid up to various indicators.

To offset summer baseball opposition, Mac has installed canvas backstops at all local and neighboring ball parks. Six-sheet from current show is placed between two signs, one reading—"hit a home run and win a pass to see—", and the other—"at the Capitol," playdates, etc.

Fred's Dancing Dolls Famous

Famed throughout the Northwest Division is Manager Fred Larkin, Paramount, St. Cloud, Minn., for his lobby dancing doll displays, photo below right showing how the stunt was tied up to his WLS Barn Dance radio show. Dolls are suspended from shuttle operated by off-center cam, and dance in perfect rhythm to hidden phonograph record. Larkin has used this idea often for the past three years, but still finds it one of his best lobby attention-getters.

Press Crime Stories Used on Three-Sheets

For the main part of decoration on lobby three-sheet boards, for "Let 'Em Have It," Manager J. B. Clements, Egyptian Theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D., obtained front page tear sheets carrying sensational crime stories. Background of the threes was a scarlet red covered at top with a white blot in which title and cast were lettered.

Clements also used the "I am your doorman" card, passed out at the door in advance and containing a strong plug for the coming date. This tied in nicely with a personal endorsement lobby panel from Clements, who duplicated the buildup in his newspaper ads.

For "Frankenstein," lobby display covered entire side of outer lobby made up of the 24-sheet head with cutout eyes surrounded by red crepe paper and three-sheets in green decorated with stills and copy. Flash was especially effective in the evening with flood of green and lobby lights dimmed.

STALLINGS ON WAY TO COVER THE WAR

Writer and Four Camera Men to Give Public Here a Close-Up of Fighting in Africa.

CARRY FLAGS FOR SAFETY

U. S. Emblem to Warn Bullets to 'Keep Off,' Leader Explains—Special Equipment Built.

Laurence Stallings, newspaper man, novelist and playwright, motion-picture writer and editor, is en route to Ethiopia to write and photograph for the North American Newspaper Alliance the story of the ominous events that are expected to occur there when the rainy season ends.

He is taking with him four crack photographers, 50,000 feet of film packed in sawdust, a fleet of motor trucks and motor cycles and a collection of American flags.

The American flags, according to Mr. Stallings, are to warn bullets to "keep off, this means you." In addition, the trucks will have their roofs covered with huge, luminous U. S. A.'s for the urgent attention of the bombs that may be dropping overhead.

For further protection, Mr. Stallings added, he will "lean heavily on the old, I hope true, adage that lightning never strikes twice in the same place." He was seriously wounded in the World War, in which he served as Lieutenant and Captain in the Fifth United States Marines.

EN ROUTE TO ETHIOPIA.
Laurence Stallings.

Expects to Film Action.

The reason for all these precautions, Mr. Stallings explained, is the terms of his assignment. "It does not include," he said, "covering events while playing poker with the general staff. We've got to go out and point our little boxes at shell holes in the act of creation, at bullets on their way to work."

Associated with the North American Newspaper Alliance in this enterprise is Fox Movietone News, of which Mr. Stallings is editor. The camera crew is made up of Len Hammond of New York, who traveled with the Nineteenth Route Army in China and photographed an air raid from one of the bombing planes; Georges Mejat of Paris, whose pictures of the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia and Foreign Minister Louis Barthou of France were voted the best newsreel shots of 1934; Alfred Waldron of New York, for ten years Fox's White House man, who

BACK TO PICTURES

"LOEW'S Drop Chance Games in 8 Houses" is a headline in Motion Picture Daily. And there follows a quotation from a Loew executive, saying: "We are going back to the picture business."

It is pleasant to record that there also have been a number of interesting and significant responses and reactions to MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S editorial of last week entitled "On Lotteries," declaring a preponderance of real showman opinion against the fever of chance games which have tended to make theatres into gambling houses where the public has been buying the suspense that must end in disappointment for all save an insignificant minority.

For instance, that seasoned showman, Mr. Louis Frisch of the Randforce circuit, strolled into Mr. A-Mike Vogel's Round Table office the other day and remarked:

"Thanks for that Herald editorial on lotteries last week. It helped us. Of course I've always had my doubts about the merit of these giveaway schemes, but the way they have been sweeping the country, and going into good houses, too, had us wondering. That Herald editorial brought us right back to the courage of our own opinion and judgment."

Meanwhile some of the fruits of community reaction began to be apparent within the week when legal actions against theatres under the lottery law were instituted in Ohio, as is related in the news pages of this issue of The Herald.

To be sure, there is no absolute unanimity of opinion about the giveaway policy and its effects, and it is proper to give those who differ their opportunity to be heard. For instance, we have at hand a communication from Mr. Mark G. Keller, of Oakland, California, district manager of the East Bay division of Golden State theatre circuit, who differs poignantly with a recent article against giveaways written by Mr. Willard Hatch of the Hayward theatre, Hayward, California.

Says Mr. Keller: "Giveaways came about in the effort of the smart showman to pull an audience into his theatre when he was forced to show pictures that had no drawing power regardless of how much time, effort and money was spent in advertising.

"Opinions vary in all forms of theatre operations and I am not upholding giveaways as a means of better showmanship, but there is little doubt in my mind but they have kept many an exhibitor from going to the wall in recent years.

"Like scores of others, I am patiently awaiting the day when the picture product will hold up alone, but until then the best type of showmanship, in my estimation, is displayed by those men who are resourceful and ambitious enough to operate their theatres at a profit."

Mr. Keller is obviously sincere, and entitled to his opinion. His opinion that the box office value of the flow of picture is waning is, however, not, in our observation, widely shared by exhibitors. It is, further, not supported by box office reports.

The fact, clearly enough, is that depression, unemployment, idleness, relief rolls and the like have conspired to make the dreams of easy money alluring to thousands of persons of low buying power—a situation exemplified continuously in the policy and numbers rackets of New York's dark and hungry Harlem. That there are thousands so afflicted with poverty and bad judgment does not, however, justify their exploitation. There are many ways of getting money that are not worth while.

The golden rod is in bloom and the katydids are tuning up, which means another summer wanes. We're so far behind in our fishing that part of it will have to go over to next year.

STANDARD REEL

NOW, what with the recommendations of the technicians of the Motion Picture Academy, the industry seems headed to standardization on the two thousand foot reel. Its advantages need no argument.

The existing and old thousand foot standard became obsolete that day so long ago when the feature length picture became established policy.

The thousand foot reel was evolved within the first year of the screen's evolution in that period when the career of the motion picture was almost entirely in vaudeville. It quickly became desirable to increase the capacity of the early projectors so that they could fill the typical time of a variety turn without rethreading. The projection rate was then standard at 16 frames a second, giving the average reel as delivered about fifteen minutes of screen time. At the standard rate of travel of sound films of today, 90 feet a minute, the new reel will give a practical capacity in the vicinity of twenty minutes, eliminating the while splicings and handlings. For many years the larger theatres have been assembling their film in two thousand foot units. It is time indeed that the ancient vaudeville standard be abandoned throughout the exchanges.

NO week passes that Russia does not emit some story of a scientific miracle. Material of the sort that once could be found only in the yellow Sunday supplements now comes over the press cables with a semi-official aura about it. This week's miracle is about a process of making handdrawn sound tracks for the motion picture's mechanisms. A Russian tinker has been able, it seems, to whittle a recognizable version of the "White Monkey" foxtrot. It may be good laboratory fun, but we'd rather hear a piccolo player do it.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Bank Nighters Sued

The most serious threat against the cash prize system of box office stimulation was leveled this week against four independent theatres in Ohio when they were sued for damages by some of their patrons, a procedure which is permitted under the state's statutes when such a practice is declared to be a lottery.

Sued by two patrons were Willard Hart's and Niel Kirchbaum's Norka and Rialto theatres in East Akron, and Harry Bickel's Majestic and Tivoli in Akron.

The law permits the patron to sue for the admission price and, also, for from $50 to $500 damages. This important development in the Bank Night situation is reported on page 13.

Antiquated Sound

Producers and exhibitors are both to blame for much of the unsatisfactory sound reaching the discerning ears of theatre patrons, said M. A. Lightman, southern circuit operator and past MPTOA president, addressing Hollywood's technicians last week on exhibitors' reactions to production technique as it relates to final consumption on the screen.

Producers, he said, put entirely too much volume into music used in talkers, and are considerably inconsistent in their treatment of playbacks. On the other hand antiquated reproducers still in use in theatres prevent 50 per cent of all houses from getting the best sound results as reflected by tonal improvements. Mr. Lightman's remarks are quoted on page 23.

ASCAP Enjoined

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers lost two important battles over the week-end for the continuance of its present system of collecting royalties from exhibitors and others for the use of the copyrighted music of its members. The Superior Court in the State of Washington enjoined the Society from conducting business until further court order. Exhibitors are not required to pay any royalties until such an order is issued, and ASCAP is prevented from interfering with their use of members' musical compositions.

Wisconsin dealt the second blow, passing a law, now awaiting the governor's signature, requiring music brokers such as ASCAP to pay a five per cent tax on their national gross. All must be licensed and are thereby placed under strict regulation.

The Society, however, felt that it would get a reversal in Washington on an appeal, and optimistically reported that (1) both National Broadcasting and Columbia Broadcasting have renewed licensing arrangements for five years; (2) North American Company, an important factor in television experimentation, had taken a license for the use of music in that field; (3) "Warner Brothers will probably renew their license"; (4) there has been a 100 per cent renewal of agreements with ASCAP's song writing and publishing members; and (5) there will not be any change in license rates when present contracts expire on October 1. The ASCAP story is told onp age 21.

Truce—and Bombs

A truce was called in the Local 306 operators' dispute in New York to permit circuit representatives to talk things over with the union. Mediators of the federal and state labor departments are acting as arbitrators of the theatres' demand for a wage reduction averaging 41 per cent.

A last-minute decision Saturday extended the theatres' notice for one week, whereupon the operators and supporting theatrical crafts deferred their threatened general strike.

Bombings of two theatres marked renewal of hostilities involving opposing projectionist groups, and picketing and arrests of disorderly pickets continued unabated. The story is on page 32.

More Fox Suits

Whether the special meeting of stockholders of Fox Film Corporation called for 11 o'clock Thursday to approve the merger with Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., and the plan of reorganization would be held as scheduled was an unanswered question Wednesday night.

Alexander Gilbert, owner of 50 shares of Fox Class A stock, filed an action in the New York supreme court and obtained a show cause order in an attempt to prevent the meeting. That was on Tuesday. A day later Eva Fox, wife of William Fox, brought suit, also in the supreme court, to enjoin officials from consummating the fusion. If the court denied Mr. Gilbert's application, his attorneys would bring an action similar to that of Mrs. Fox, they said.

Mrs. Fox's action, brought also in behalf of the All-Continent Corporation, which she controls, followed by two days a skirmish at Wilmington, Del., where the chancery court denied her plea to instruct the General Theatres Equipment receiver to vote Fox certificates against the merger.

Fox Film officials were noncommittal. Developments are reviewed starting page 35.

QP Award in London

First Quigley Award voted any overseas' showmen was presented in London on August 8 to John Armstrong, Paramount London Theatres' publicity director. Gordon Selfridge, head of Selfridge Stores, did the honors, the ceremonies being attended by members of the press and leading film distribution heads.

The attendance included John Cecil Graham, managing director, Paramount Pictures, England; J. Montgomery Beck, representing MPDPA in England; Neville Kearney, Film Industries Department, Federation of British Industries; Theodore H. Flegelston, vice-president British Cinematograph Exhibitors' Ass'n, among others.

Armstrong won the Quigley Silver plaque for June for his campaign on Paramount's "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" at the Carlton Theatre, London.

Mickey Mouse Week

Mickey Mouse and the characters of the Silly Symphonies will do a cross-country sprint over the screen in the week beginning September 28th, under the plans of United Artists for a comprehensive international campaign in observance of the seventh anniversary of the first appearance of Mickey Mouse.

Italy May Yield

Italy may take action this month to let down a bar or two of the high obstacle it has been raising against importation of pictures from other countries.

The Council of Ministers, meeting shortly, is expected to do something to ease the regulation whereby importation is limited to one-fourth of the footage imported last year.

Count Galeazzo Ciano has been named minister in charge of the department "for press and propaganda," which takes in the cinematographic section.

While American distributors still are facing governmental restriction, Italian producers are going ahead ambitiously, with 35 pictures to be released in the new season. One of them, "Christopher Columbus," will cost close to a million dollars, writes Vittorio Malpassuti, the HERALD's Rome correspondent. See page 33.

New Product Plans

Further enlightenment for exhibitors on the nature of heretofore undisclosed parts of 1935-36 feature programs comes with the acquisition of 63 additional originals, books and plays by 14 producers in Hollywood.

Many of them have considerable box office potentialities, representing as they do some of the successes of the season in the field of the drama and book publishing. Titles and available production assignments are published on page 29.

Answering Equity

Disagreement of Broadway managers of legitimate shows with Actors' Equity Association over Equity's order for double pay for performers on Sunday crystallized in denouncement of the idea by the League of New York Theatre Managers, at a meeting in New York Tuesday. Broadway's leading producers participated.

The producers' attitude is that a "hit" show needs no Sunday performance, while others would require extra payroll expenditures. Word from the meeting indicated that unless Equity changes its mind there will be no Sunday shows, now permitted under the new state law.

"Equity's demand of double pay for actors renders Sunday performances unsound economically and impracticable," declared Dr. Henry Moskowitz, executive director of the League. Musical producers added that even with a full house they would lose money on a basis of double pay for their huge casts.

Dr. Moskowitz added, as his personal opinion, that no Broadway producer would sponsor Sunday performances and said he had heard of none who wished to have his shows performed on the day of rest.

Their rejection of the double pay proposal was sent to Equity, with a request that the actors' group designate the exact amount of salary producers would be asked to pay for overtime and for a definite scale of rates for rehearsals. Equity is now demanding pay for rehearsal periods, a departure from a long standing rule.

The League will name a committee to debate both matters with Equity.

Writers Demand

Hollywood scenarists are "girding for war," demanding security and greater recognition. Literary Digest strips glamour from the profession of motion picture writing after learning from Francis Edward Faragoh, well known scenarist ("Becky Sharp," "Frankenstein," et al), that Hollywood's writers are not monarchs of the land who write by the Midas-touch system.

Mr. Faragoh warns that producers must deal with the Screen Writers' Guild and its 800 members. He tells of the plight of the studio writer on page 22.

Paramount's 1,092

Seven hundred houses have been eliminated from Paramount's theatre holdings during the process of rehabilitation, but the company still remains the largest theatre operator with 1,092 units under its banner. At the circuit's peak in 1932, it had 1,800 theatres.

The holdings abandoned were ones that gave little or no promise of profitable operation, or where lease revisions were not obtainable. Some 900 of Paramount's theatres are in the United States, about 200 in Canada and 35 in 11 foreign countries. The story is on page 14.

Labor for Quota

That the present Quota system should be continued is expected to be the pronouncement of policy of organized labor in the United Kingdom, at the Trades Union Congress opening at Margate September 2d.

The idea is to oppose any development which might reduce the number of pictures to be made in British studios and therefore adversely affect work hours.

The number of aliens employed in England under official permits has increased in the past two years, the minister of labor reported to Commons. The story, by Bruce Allan, London correspondent of the HERALD, is on page 44.

Filming Relief

Unemployed cameramen are filming the four billion dollar public works program of the administration at Washington, under a "motion picture record" division set up by Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress executive, with Sydney MacKean, director of the division. Mr. MacKean has three cameramen at work already, shooting Alabama projects, and plans a staff of five.

Mr. MacKean, who said he had had 18 years' experience with newsreel companies, declared the length of the PWA film had not been determined. It was believed in Washington that 200,000 feet of film might be used. Sound will not be used, which means there would be no speeches or sounds of pick and shovel. There is to be a "definite continuity," Mr. MacKean said.

To questions whether the film would be used in next year's national election campaign, Mr. MacKean, while saying that no plan for distribution had been formed, observed that "We can't stop a Young Democratic Club from asking for it, but the Young Republican Clubs and even the Young Communist Clubs will have the same right."

Newsreel companies, in return for the use of their equipment, will be permitted to borrow choice shots.

Mr. MacKean said the only cost to the Government will be salaries and film.

Handmade Sound

From Russia comes the description of a process for producing music for a sound film not by playing and recording it, but by drawing it on paper with a pen and brush and then transferring it photographically to the sound track.

The idea on the surface strikes a note of the fantastic, so far-reaching would be its possibilities. Yet such music has already been created by Soviet scientists for sound motion picture cartoons.

Its perfection could result in the supplanting by the new process of the physical rendition of music where it is used as background and where the musicians are not required to be seen in the picture. This present procedure cost the motion picture industry thousands of dollars in musicians' salaries. The first report on the new idea appears on page 34.

Libel Suit Settled

Judgment obtained by Gabriel L. Hess against Peter S. Harrison, publisher of Harrison's Reports, for libel, was settled Monday by the payment to Mr. Hess of $5,000.

BANK NIGHT THEATRES SUED FOR DAMAGES BY PATRONS

Attorney Declares That Under Ohio State Law, Customer May Recover Up to $500 from Theatre If Cash Prize Chance Scheme Is Ruled Lottery; New York and Akron Police Order Practice Stopped

The whole structure of cash prize chance schemes appeared threatened this week when evidence showed that exhibitors employing these forms of box office stimulants may be sued in some places by patrons for as much as $500 under state statutes when the practice is ruled a lottery in the state. Such action was taken by several theatre patrons in Ohio.

Whether exhibitors elsewhere are so liable under the statutes of their states is expected to be the cause of much speculation.

The Ohio statute, with reference to penalties for the operation of a lottery, has been discovered by local attorneys to be so far-reaching that theatre owners who actually have anything invested in the theatre cannot afford to gamble with the consequences.

Scott A. Belden, of the Akron, Ohio, law firm of Schnee, Grimm and Belden, representing patron complainants, advised that under the state statute every person who attends a theatre employing cash prize chance schemes may bring an action for the return of the admission price, and if the device is actually declared a lottery, these persons may recover a penalty of not less than $50 nor more than $500 damages. The statute goes further by granting the exclusive right to bring this suit to the person attending the theatre; and the right, for the next six months, to any citizen to bring the suit for and on behalf of said person, the recovery to go to the citizen bringing the suit.

Attorney Belden, on behalf of patron clients, has brought such suits in municipal court against Willard Hart and Niel Krichbaum, operating, respectively, the Norka and Rialto theatres in East Akron, and against Harry Bickel, proprietor of the Majestic and Tivoli theatres in Akron.

Kenneth Swartzel, of 332 South Main Street, Akron, is suing Mr. Hart and Mr. Krichbaum twice, as well as Mr. Bickel, asking in each case repayment of the cost of his ticket, plus $50 exemplary damages.

Edward Greissing, another Akron patron, is suing the four theatres, while Clarence R. Coulter, Akron, has filed suit against Mr. Bickel.

In each case it is claimed by the plaintiffs that Bank Night is illegal and contrary to the lottery laws of Ohio. State Law Director C. C. Benner has branded Bank Nights as lotteries and the police of Akron, speaking through Vice Squad Chief E. J. Heffernan declared: "We are going to stop these drawings if we have to arrest the theatre owners."

Meanwhile the value of the chance prize devices to the box office and the advisability of its use from the standpoint of trade practice and otherwise are hourly developing into a national controversy in exhibition. The usual trade arguments over other exhibition practices were being relegated to the background.

Despite the new situation in Ohio, 36 towns in the northern part of the state have added chance prize schemes. In both Cleveland and Youngstown, bitterly fought petitions for injunctions to stop the practice were denied competitors by common pleas court. Cleveland plaintiffs have appealed the decision and briefs are now in the hands of the court of appeals. The case is expected to be heard this month.

And although New York police warned all theatres on the continued use of chance games, Judge DeWitt H. Merriam, in Detroit, dismissed the petition of Ben and Lou Cohen, Roxy theatre operators, for a permanent injunction restraining Jacob Schreiber from using Cash Nights at his Detroit Colonial theatre. Judge Merriam so acted because, he said, a criminal case pending in Detroit against Mr. Schreiber will, when determined on September 2nd, dispose of the matter.

Loew's in New York immediately discontinued chance games at eight New York theatres, as a result of police action.

From the New York state capitol at Albany came word this week that legal authorities there regarded the various plans of cash prizes as clearly in violation of the state lottery laws.

In Kansas City there was some discussion of setting back clearance for Bank Night users.

Regardless, the practice appeared to be spreading widely. Typical of other territories were the reports that the prize schemes were in use in 250 Chicago houses and 117 St. Louis theatres.

Bailey, Greve Subpenaed In Prudence Inquiry

Frank Bailey, former Paramount director, and William Greve, member of the bondholders' committee of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, are among the officers and former directors of Prudence Corporation, realty investment organization subpenaed to appear for examination in an investigation of the company's dealings. There were 52 subpenas served in all.

Prudence Corporation and its subsidiary, Allied Owners Corporation, were identified with the financing and construction of a number of theatres for Paramount.

INDEPENDENTS PLEAD FOR CASH NIGHT CURB

Some independent neighborhood theatre owners are beginning to feel that the brake should be applied to cash giveaways, Kansas City independents being the first to move in that direction.

Blaming unfair clearance for the necessity of employing cash devices, the Kansas City owners have devised a suggested clearance schedule to bring about curtailment of these practices. The schedule will be presented to the downtown first-runs and to distributors, together with the following petition:

"We the undersigned exhibitors of Kansas City feel that the present zoning schedule under which we are operating is very unfair and detrimental to our business. The present clearance and restrictions placed upon the exhibitors in playing pictures have forced the lower-admission theatres, which constitute most of the suburban houses, to resort to socalled stimulants such as Bank Night, Jack Pot, premiums, refund checks, two-for-one tickets, gift stamps and other practices which tend to lower the standards of the business. These practices by the suburban theatres have forced the downtown first-runs to adopt similar measures.

"We feel that if a fair zoning and clearance schedule can be set up, most of these evils could and would be done away with."

The proposed schedule would penalize single bill theatres using cash stunts some 28 days after the regular single bill spot, and 56 days for houses using the stunts with dual bills.

Comparative Quiet On Legislative Front

Legislative developments of any importance involving the motion picture were confined this week to only four situations: Kansas legislators were seen returning for a special session to effect new tax measures, including, possibly, a 10 per cent amusement tax to pay for social security insurance; Lewes, Delaware, repealed its blue laws; Ohio's sales tax was declared illegal, assuring a local high-court test, while Philadelphia had accumulated 100,000 signatures to the local petition for Sunday shows.

Exhibitors of Ontario were complaining bitterly against the burdensome amusement tax, having payed $265,000 in July, compared with only $54,000 in July of 1934.

PARAMOUNT CIRCUIT STILL BIGGEST; 1,092 HOUSES AFTER DROPPING 700

Reorganizing of Holdings Practically Completed; Atlas Retains 25 Per Cent of $6,442,000 Stock It Underwrote

The rejuvenated Paramount is still the largest operator of theatres in the country, despite the elimination of 700 houses in the process of reorganization following the bankruptcy of two and one-half years ago. The company has under its banner 1,092 theatres.

This number compares with 1,800 houses directly or indirectly operated by Paramount at the circuit's peak of development in 1932. The discarded units represent unprofitable operations or instances where revisions of leases were not obtainable from landlords. In the main, they were considered by the company as the poorest of its theatre investments.

Many Returned to Owners

Many houses were returned to their original owners, and in other cases leases were transferred to new operators or otherwise disposed of.

A recently completed report of Paramount's theatre interests discloses that between 850 and 900 of Paramount's holdings are located in 39 states. About 200 are in Canada and some 35 are scattered in 11 foreign countries. The large majority of houses abandoned are in the United States.

Reorganization of the theatre holdings has virtually been completed. The Olympia Theatres circuit in New England is the only subsidiary still awaiting final rehabilitation. Many of Paramount's theatres are operated on a partnership basis.

Atlas Holdings Reduced

A report of the Atlas Corporation, large investment trust, to its stockholders, late last week, disclosed that it retained only 25 per cent of the $6,442,000 of Paramount second preferred and common stock which it agreed to underwrite. This was the first venture of the corporation into reorganization financing. Floyd B. Odlum, president of Atlas, is a member of the Paramount board.

The breakdown of the stock absorption shows that Hallgarten & Company and Lehman Corporation, both investment firms, each took 25 per cent of the Paramount issue from Atlas and the remaining 25 per cent went in various amounts to a group of investment houses including Goldman, Sachs & Company, White, Weldon & Company and Frederick H. Cassatt of Philadelphia.

With reference to its Paramount investment, Atlas' letter to stockholders said: "In previous reports your management has stated its opinion that larger profits could be realized in special transactions and operations other than mere dealing in a diversified portfolio of listed securities. Last April, as a first venture in reorganization financing, your group agreed to underwrite an issue of approximately $6,442,000 of second preferred and common stock of the new Paramount Pictures, Inc." The letter added that the entire underwriting would be closed in September.

Atlas Dividend 30 Cents a Share

Atlas declared a dividend of 30 cents a share on the company's 4,259,616 shares of common stock, the first since the trust was organized in 1929. Regular dividends however, have been paid on the preferred shares. Total assets of the company were estimated at $110,713,250, equal to $11.08 a share on the common on July 30 and $12.05 a share on August 6, according to the report.

The dividend declaration by Atlas, and the continued rise in holdings of the Lehman Corporation that carried the asset value of its shares beyond $100 for the first time since its organization in 1929, were considered by Wall Street as evidencing the sustained recovery of investment trusts.

Action on Claims

As the settlement of claims in the Paramount reorganization reaches its final stages, the claims of the Circle and Indiana, Indianapolis, were allowed at $370,000 by Special Master John E. Joyce. A rental claim of $35,000 awaits a ruling.

The $443,832 claim filed by the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, has been settled for $270,000. Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe directed that the amount be payable in new securities, subject to proof of title to the theatre by the claimant. The theatre is in litigation involving a foreclosure sale held some time ago. The condition of the settlement stipulated by the court is that the U. S. circuit court of appeals will not reverse the foreclosure sale against St. Louis Properties Corporation, which originally owned the claim. The amount asked was for rent due and future rent under the Paramount lease. Paramount has entered objections to the claim, which will be heard in event the foreclosure is not confirmed.

Trustees' Bonds Reduced

Since they will be less active from now on until they are discharged by the court, Charles D. Hilles and Eugene W. Leake, Paramount trustees, have obtained reduction of their bonds from $100,000 to $10,000 each. Judge Coxe signed the order.

Directors of Paramount Productions, Inc., indefinitely postponed a meeting scheduled for last Friday in Jersey City, headquarters of the corporation, to pass on contracts and other production matters. The contract of Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur for two pictures and an option on a third was to have been taken up for ratification.

The one-year agreement provides that two features will be made at the Astoria studios at a cost of $250,000 each. This figure is subject to revision in event additional finances are needed. The budget on the optional film has not been set. The contract provides that the first two scripts must be completed before the first picture is placed in production, so that the producers may start on the second without delay.

Pettengill Would Put U.S. in Films, Exhibitors Told

"The loss of the NRA motion picture code is a calamity; the Pettengill anti-block booking bill will put the government right in the middle of this business."

Thus did Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, sound the keynote on Monday for the two-day convention at Jacksonville, Fla., of the Southeastern Theatre Owners' Association, assembled 300 strong at the Carling hotel.

And while Mr. Kuykendall was leading the southeastern MPTOA affiliate in a discussion of industry problems, leaders of Allied States Association were preparing to trek to Atlantic City for the annual meeting of the New Jersey unit, opening August 21, at the Ritz hotel. Expected are national officers: Abram Myers, Aaron Saperstein, Herman Blum, Walter B. Littlefield, Sydney Samuelson, Nathan Yamins and Abe Stone. Mr. Samuelson is slated for reelection as New Jersey president.

Allied was busy in New England, too, where the Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts met at Boston, on Tuesday, to hear the report of Nathan Yamins, Edward Ansin, Walter B. Littlefield and Arthur K. Howard regarding their trip throughout New England to establish Allied outposts. Exhibitor problems were also discussed, principally the music tax bill, utility rates and sales policies.

The convention at Atlantic City will open next Wednesday with a meeting of eastern regional directors.

The southeastern owners gathered at Jacksonville heard Mr. Kuykendall say that exhibitors supporting the Pettengill measure are "destroying themselves with their own near-sightedness."

He professed little faith in the proposal for a voluntary code for the industry, and said it was too early to prophecy the practicability of setting up the Film Boards of Trade, as substitute machinery for the code.

Hugh Manning of Atlanta, president of the southeastern association, presided. Informal talks were made by Nat Williams, a past president, and R. B. Wilby, southern circuit operator, who is treasurer.

Owners in Ashland, Wisconsin, organized the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Northern Wisconsin, and elected E. F. Daniels, of the Daniels theatre, Iron River, chairman, and Roy McMinn, Capitol theatre, Superior, secretary. There was some talk of joining Allied of the Northwest.

WASHINGTON STATE ENJOINS ASCAP; WISCONSIN TO REGULATE SOCIETY

Washington Superior Court Ruling Brings Actions to Recover Fees; Chief Radio Chains Renew Music Licenses

Troubles of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers are mounting. Two states late last week dealt severe blows at the methods it uses in forcing the collection of fees from exhibitors, broadcasters and others for playing the music of its members.

Washington state superior court enjoined the Society in its present form from doing further business in the state.

Wisconsin passed a law regulating and taxing "music brokers" such as ASCAP.

Both actions were sweeping victories for exhibitors and other music users.

ASCAP did not appear at the hearing but an appeal was considered certain.

The immediate effect of the Washington decision was to prevent the society from continuing the collection of royalties from theatre owners, and others, pending further order of the court, nor can it disturb present license rights.

Under the new Wisconsin bill, which is awaiting the governor's signature, all "music brokers," except the original composers, who desire to make contracts for the playing of copyrighted music, must first obtain a state license, render an accounting of the identities of the company's officials, their salaries, rates charged the player and fees paid the author, and, furthermore, must pay a 5 per cent tax on the music broker's receipts for the preceding year, whether they were paid in or out of the state. There will be a $500 fine for any person convicted of requesting the performance of a copyrighted number in order to start an infringement suit.

Striking at the Society for its allegedly monopolistic practices and for its arbitrary fixing of royalty fees under a rule of "as much as the traffic will bear," the State of Washington, through its attorney general, G. W. Hamilton, asked for an injunction, and when on July 22 the Society failed to appear in answer, Superior Court Judge D. F. Wright took the case under advisement, granting the injunction last week.

License agreements between the ASCAP and exhibitors, radio stations, hotels, dance halls and the like were ordered to remain in full force, except that no payments are to be made to the Society until further court order.

New Contracts Delayed

The order bars the Society from signing new contracts unless the court is shown they were valid and legal under the state laws. The Society was enjoined from suing to prevent licensees from using its music pending final disposition of the matter.

Leading the fight for the exhibitors, in support of Attorney General Hamilton, were H. W. Bruen, president, and J. M. Hone, secretary-treasurer of Allied Amusements of the Northwest, their counsel being Allen and Wilkins, Seattle. Kenneth Davis, likewise of Seattle, was attorney for the radio broadcasters.

Exhibitors were quick to take advantage of the decision, proceeding to file complaints for the recovery of license fees paid ASCAP, exhibitors on "open account" suing for three years' back payments, and those holding term contracts suing for payments for six years, under the state conspiracy act.

The law under which the state proceeded, Section 22 of the State Constitution, prohibits monopolies and trusts and prevents price fixing, or limiting the production or regulating the transportation of any product or commodity.

Broadcasters Renew Licenses

Meanwhile news more optimistic for ASCAP was forthcoming from officials of the Society. Although admitting that the Society was facing some "troublesome situations" (the new copyright bill in Congress and the Washington decision), Gene Buck, president, disclosed that both National Broadcasting and Columbia Broadcasting have just renewed their license agreements for five years; that North American Company, which he said had spent $11,000,000 in television experimentations, has signed for a franchise to use copyrighted music of ASCAP members; and that Warner Brothers probably will renew its license.

Furthermore, there has been a 100 per cent renewal of memberships of music writers, publishers and composers.

The Society, said a spokesman, contemplates no changes in its music licensing rates when the present one-year contracts expire on October 1.

Predicts Overturning of Ruling

Mr. Buck expressed the belief that the Washington decision would be set aside on appeal.

The decision grants ASCAP the right to make a showing to the court "that they have absolved and cleansed themselves of the illegal practices; but until such time, the Society and its agents will be enjoined from conducting its business in its present illegal manner in this state."

The court further ruled that exhibitor and other licensees who "make a clear showing that they are entitled to equity or other relief from the defendant Society, requesting relief and reimbursement for money alleged to have been paid said Society by reason of extortionate and oppressive tactics and as result of business compulsion and duress" shall be given such relief by ASCAP, and the Society shall be enjoined from further collections until it is prepared to grant such relief.

The court decreed that no new license agreements may be entered into by the defendant unless a clear showing is made that the payment for performing rights to musical compositions "is predicated upon free and open competition" and the Society is further "enjoined from harassing" the licensees "by suits at law or in equity, or until such time as the Society appears before the court and submits to the police power of this state."

Supreme Bench of Washington Bars All New Licensing Until Shown That Payments Are Based on Open Competition

The order compels the Society to continue to grant the right to the licensees to use its members' music under the existing licenses, and where licenses expire before the Society "have submitted to the jurisdiction of this court, said license agreement shall notwithstanding remain in effect until such time as the court might need to appoint, upon request, any officer of this court, to effectuate and make new arrangements with the users of music in this state in order that our people may not be deprived of music, by reason of the defendants' unwillingness to obey the civil and criminal laws."

The court made the following findings:

"That ASCAP members have agreed not to sell music performing rights to any other person (other than the ASCAP "pool"), and have so organized said Society that it is governed and its business affairs administered solely by a self-perpetuated board of directors and officers. That said Society now enjoys a practical and complete monopoly of the public performing rights of all acceptable and marketable copyrighted music in the United States and certain foreign countries. That said Society by its combination and conspiracy to affectuate certain unlawful purposes is able to and does regulate, limit and control the production of musical compositions by admitting to membership in said Society only those persons who possess certain qualifications other than merit and which are arbitrarily fixed by the Society.

Price Fixing Cited

"The Society is able to and actually does fix and control prices for licenses to publicly perform such music without regard to the public interest, merit of the compositions, or the demand therefor, and they limit the production and sale of such music and the performing rights therein; they effectually limit and prevent competition between members of the Society with the users of music and entirely eliminate the right of the public to free trade or bargaining with any of the members of the Society, or with the Society itself for the performing rights in and to the copyrighted works of the individual members; that said Society, arbitrarily fixes the prices for such music, as the evidence shows, under a rule of 'as much as the traffic will bear,' instead of permitting competition to naturally adjust a fair price between producer and user of said music."

The court declared that the Society so conducts its business that no citizen of the state could successfully engage in or carry on any business requiring the use of popular music without submitting to the "extortionate and oppressive demands of the Society in purchasing of the Society the right to perform the copyrighted works of the members of the Society at a price arbitrarily fixed by the Society; that the business of said Society affects the public policy. . . ."

Studio Scenarists "Gird for War"; Demand Security and Recognition

Francis Faragoh, Writers' Spokesman, Warns Producers Must Deal With Guild

Producers in Hollywood will accept the Screen Writers' Guild and its 800 members as a mutual court of fair understanding rather than as a writers' weapon — and they'll like it!—is the warning sounded by Francis Edward Faragoh, one of the most militant of the Guild's members and one of Hollywood's most successful and workmanlike scenarists. He is demanding greater recognition and security for writers.

Setting out to establish the true meaning of "the oldest enigma in Hollywood," as old, indeed, as the venerable Yucca tree in front of the Paramount studio, the enigma of whether scenarists are men, mice, or merely writers wallowing in a fabulous land of make-believe, the Literary Digest strips much of the spurious glamour from the profession of motion picture writing. Hollywood's writers, they find, are not monarchs of the land who write by the Midas-touch system.

"Actually, some of the most miserable authors in existence are working in California's film studios, and, if not in them, at least for them," the Literary Digest observed in its issue of last week. "The tales of princely pay are true—for a few. The stories of long periods of rest are true, too true—for the majority. And the rain of thousand-dollar bills and even five-dollar bills ceases cruelly during these rest periods."

The problems of the general run of studio writers, concerning both the conditions of work and their relations with the employing producers were taken up some months ago, when, as a step toward correction, half a dozen of the ablest and best-paid writers in Hollywood organized the Screen Writers' Guild. They had, individually, no great worries. They were handsomely employed, their annual incomes were enormous. But they saw all about them acute conditions. They believed that they, as eminently successful writers, could do more in a corrective way than the banding together of failures.

Calls Ignoring Temporary

All of which led the Literary Digest last week to seek the answers to questions about the extent of the improvements from one of the Guild's most militant members, Francis Faragoh, a playwright, short story writer, dramatic critic, translator of plays, stage director and, since 1929, the author of many of Hollywood's outstanding scenarios: "Becky Sharp," "Little Caesar," "Frankenstein," "Return of Peter Grimm," and others.

"For the time being," advised Mr. Faragoh, "there is refusal on the part of producers officialy to recognize the Guild. But this is temporary. Tomorrow the producer will deal with the Guild and its 800 members. And he'll find that he likes it and profits by it. Just as the theatrical managers have profited by Actors' Equity Association so will Hollywood's producers find a sturdy, cooperating help in the Screen Writers' Guild," even though, he said, the film-makers have fought the Guild, have tried to ignore and, even, in a few remote cases, have tried to prevent writers from joining.

WEALTHY EXTRAS BANNED BY BRITISH

In a move to aid the unemployed, producers in England have determined that henceforth men and women of means will not be permitted to act as extras in film productions. It had been the habit of people of wealth who wanted the pocket money or knew production executives to work as extras for $5 per day, thus crowding out professional players, who needed the money received.

"There are 1,000 writers in Hollywood," explained Mr. Faragoh. "And they all write. Whether they have jobs or not, they write. One thousand writers pounding away on 1,000 typewriters.

"You can find them everywhere," he continued. "In pseudo-Spanish bungalows with false beams lacerating the ceiling and plaster gargoyles smirking from the cornices. In hotel suites, where the carpets are turquoise and the walls orchid. In attics, spare bedrooms, rented offices, empty garages.

"But by far the greatest number of them woo their Muse right on the 'lot' — in cubby-holes hastily fashioned from abandoned cutting-rooms, or, perhaps, from dressing-rooms no longer fit to house stars. Here, in their plaster-board ivory towers, are the boys who jump every time some one opens the door, who regard every telephone-call with fear, who know that every finished page of a manuscript brings the hour of reckoning that much nearer.

"You see, they write for a living. They are employees, wage-earners, workers. And their lives are short, insecure, their fate uncertain. Jobs are hard to find, easy to lose. Nor is the loss of one's job necessarily the result of bad writing. A general wave of studio-economy may do it. The change of somebody's mind. The vaguest whim. The refusal of a star or director to have anything to do with the finished 'script.' A shake-up of personnel. The sudden decision not to star the newest child-wonder in a bedroom-farce."

What about salaries, the Literary Digest asked?

"True, while the writer is lucky enough to be employed, his salary is good—probably. Probably not. For every four-figure pay-envelop, there are dozens containing less than $100. For every author under contract, there are hundreds without work. The average salary is $300. The average work-year runs 40 weeks. Juggle these figures, bearing in mind that out of the 1,000 writers, only 200 or so are regularly employed—and see what you get! And consider further that the luckiest of writers can hope for only a given number of years in the profession; after that, he must make room for younger men, fresher talent.

"People who cut short careers in the theatre, authors of successful books and short stories, newspaper men who gave up pretty good jobs to turn to screen-writing, have a right to demand some sort of economic security. And, I think, assurance that their calling is a profession and that, having made a place for themselves in that profession, they can continue to look upon it as a means of existence."

What means, Mr. Faragoh was asked, had the Screen Writers' Guild arrived at after long shuffling of the facts?

"To hasten the coming of an era of collective bargaining in the matter of working conditions and minimum basic guaranties relative to compensation, length of employment and proper credit on the screen, the writers of Hollywood are organized in the Screen Writers' Guild with a membership of nearly 800.

Open Guild Shop Sought

"Let's look at what Ernest Pascal, President of the Screen Writers' Guild, has to say. Here it is: 'The Guild is a business organization dealing with the facts of the writers' business problems. It has for its aim the Guild Shop. This is an open shop, which any writer may join, regardless of professional qualifications, previous condition of servitude or fame and glory. By joining the united front of 800 of his fellows, the writer is put into an advantageous bargaining-position, and receives the backing, as well, of such affiliated organizations as the Dramatists' Guild and the Authors' League of America.'

"This does not mean, obviously, that once a writer is a member, he may jump the reservation and do as he pleases, safe in the knowledge that the Guild will protect him and nurse him back to employment and forgiveness. For, at the moment of joining, the writer also submits to the self-discipline rules of the Guild, with its arbitration machinery and severe penalties for any breach of professional ethics. It is sad to have to acknowledge that writers sometimes, in individual cases, breach ethics, good taste, honesty. And, thus, the Guild is as rigid a protector of the rights of the film-producer, who is the employer, as it is of the rights of the authors."

"Tomorrow the producers will deal with the Guild and its 800 members—and like it!" concluded Mr. Faragoh, their spokesman.

HALF OF THEATRES NOT EQUIPPED FOR BEST SOUND, SAYS LIGHTMAN

Former President of MPTOA Tells Technicians Exhibition Is Least Advanced Branch; Urges Less Volume in Musicals

Sound problems of the exhibitor which are uncontrollable in the theatre because they originate during studio recording were brought for solution to Hollywood's sound technicians last week by M. A. Lightman, who asked, for one thing, that producers lower the volume of some of the blasting sound being poured into talkers, especially into musicals.

On the other hand, Mr. Lightman said that 50 per cent of all theatres today are not properly equipped to get the best results from the improvements made in recording. The reason, he said, is that the original reproducers, installed in 1927 and 1928, are still being used in these houses and no provision or attempt has been made by their owners to effect the improvements required to get the full tonal values since developed.

Mr. Lightman, who is president of the Malco theatre circuit, operating out of Tennessee and into Mississippi and Arkansas, and who served five terms as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, talked about production technique from an exhibitor's standpoint, before the Technicians Branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Says Music Should Vary, Too

"I can't understand why producers think it necessary to throw so much volume into musicals," Mr. Lightman told the technicians. "After all, music is something definite, concrete, and why music shouldn't vary, just as sound varies, as dialogue varies, I don't know. I certainly agree with you that when a symphony orchestra strikes a note you have an effect to create and to do that sometimes you must have very high volume, but one should have climaxes in music as one does in dialogue, and there is even more range in music.

"I'll admit that a great deal of fault for poor effect in the theatre is with the exhibitor, but in the recording of the music itself there should be shadings and some soft as well as loud passages. Why should all music be loud in an operatic production?

"Music lovers looking at a picture will appreciate a whisper from 100 instruments, if that whisper is called for in the writing of the music," he continued. "If it is necessary to cover up scratches and extraneous noises with high volume, I don't know about the technical part of it, but at least let music stand for what it does and give it the shading and beauty that the writer intended it to have.

"There is one criticism with regard to playbacks which I have noticed often and which was particularly brought to my attention as a result of my experience with a picture we ran recently in Memphis. I appreciate the fact that a star should look beautiful in a picture. We don't want to see their veins popping out, or their eyes staring, so if you can put the singer in a small room and record the singing with the maximum quality that should be done by all means. But for the life of me I can't understand why an experienced artist will be permitted to go through a song for recording and then forget that she's a singer and try to have the playback show her as a great actress.

"If a star is singing a big number, — if the volume is high and she is supposed to be singing with great gusto and great power, for heaven's sake don't give us a high volume sound track and at the same time show us on the screen a picture of the lady walking about the set exercising her vocal cords with about as much effort as she would exert if she were standing in a room conversing with four of her friends.

Must Maintain Illusion

"The audience knows just exactly what expressions should be on the face of the singer, therefore it is necessary for the singer to be interested enough to really give a true illusion," Mr. Lightman warned. "You have a perfect right to use technical processes. We wouldn't have a performer actually go and stick his head into the mouth of a lion when after all we are only being shown a picture, and if these processes save a lot of money and are efficient, they certainly should be used.

"However, I think you should exercise the greatest amount of care in your use of playbacks. The minute an audience get the idea a scene is faked, they lose their interest. The illusion of reality must be maintained, —your audience is critical, and believe me when I say that they will detect the minutest flaw in your work. If you think an audience is not very discerning, you're mistaken. Remember that people going to musicals today are people primarily interested in music.

"Musicals are not accepted universally yet. Some exhibitors can sell a picture of that kind where others definitely fail to do anything with them. I think the day will come when they will be top pictures. They have a place in our business and personally I am heartily in favor of them.

"In Memphis recently we even went so far as to have a Hollywood premiere, with arc lights, a radio broadcast, a master of ceremonies and everything that goes with such an event, when we opened with one of the musical pictures and we had the crowds blocking traffic in front of the theatre.

Calls Exhibition Least Advanced

"In my opinion the exhibitor as a class is less advanced than any other branch of the industry," Mr. Lightman said. "Exhibitors must be forced, so to speak, to keep in tune with the times.

"There are equipments today in some of the deluxe houses which are original equipments installed in 1927 and 1928. No provision has been made in these houses to take care of what you are doing out here now. The best results cannot be obtained from such equipment. Fifty per cent of the theatres today won't get any more out of your product than just ordinary results.

Declares Some Deluxe Houses Still Using Equipment Installed in 1927 and 1928; Asks Shading in the Recording Music

"Some theatres and some exhibitors have advanced but I think that in general the exhibitor must be told and must be kept acquainted with what you are doing out here. The exhibitor has an obligation to the industry to keep his equipment up to the best possible efficiency.

"I understand that you are now releasing some pictures with two types of prints; one for equipment that has been brought up to meet the very top volume requirements and one for equipment that isn't prepared to take care of great volumes. I think that is a very fine way of handling the situation," Mr. Lightman told the technicians.

N. V. A. Sanitarium to Receive Help of Major Film Companies

Major motion picture companies have advanced sufficient funds to the N. V. A. Sanitarium at Saranac Lake to remain open for an additional 30 days and will meet at an undetermined date to discuss plans for arranging sufficient finances to allow the theatrical institution to continue without suspension.

The meeting will be arranged upon the return from Hollywood of Will H. Hays, Harry M. Warner and John E. Otterson. The sanitarium requires from $90,000 to $150,000 for operation.

Pathe-Natan Auxiliary To Release 25 in U. S.

Distribution of 25 Pathe-Natan releases in America will be inaugurated September 1 by France Film, new company, which will have the former Fifth Avenue Playhouse, renamed the Cinema de Paris, for premiere showings. The first, opening Friday, will be "Look Out for the Paint." Other pictures will be "The Last Billionnaire," "Wedding March," with Tullio Carminati, "Charlemagne," "Mystery of Paris," "Maria Chapdelaine," "The Orderly."

Cocalis After Circuit of 25

Sam Cocalis, operating 14 theatres in Greater New York in addition to his interest in the Springer & Cocalis circuit, has a number of other deals pending which would bring the total to around 25. Mr. Cocalis recently acquired the Park, Newark, N. J., in a foreclosure sale. The house will be reopened this week.

PRODUCERS BUY 63 ADDITIONAL BOOKS AND PLAYS FOR 1935-36

41 Originals, 12 Books and 10 Plays Included in July Purchases, Exceeded in Number Only by April

Paramount Gets Exclusive Rights to 22 of Zane Grey's Outdoor Romances; Many Outstanding Plays and Novels Acquired

Hollywood producers invaded the story market during the month for 63 manuscripts with which they will further round out those parts of 1935-36 programs that had not been determined when their distribution divisions sent new product announcements to exhibitors, earlier in the summer.

July's story and play acquisitions exceeded those of any month this year, except for April's 100 purchases, and were represented by 41 originals, 12 books and 10 plays, many of them having great potential box office value. They compared with purchases of previous months as follows:

Month	Originals	Books	Plays	Totals
September	28	40	7	75
October	25	20	6	51
November	39	17	8	64
December	19	19	6	44
January	26	14	7	47
February	21	17	3	41
March	28	15	5	48
April	43	44	13	100
May	23	19	9	51
June	24	19	7	50
July	41	12	10	63
Totals for Ten Months....	317	236	81	634

The additions made in July to 1935-36 programs are in line with the policy of virtually all companies to refrain at sales convention time from making complete announcements of the nature of all product intended for the new season, so as to permit them to acquire more timely subjects and the latest successes of book and play as they appear in the season. The many purchases, then, serve to enlighten exhibitors as to the nature of some of the product the identity of which was unknown when they signed 1935-36 contracts.

One of the outstanding story deals of the year was consummated when Paramount acquired exclusive rights to all of Zane Grey's writings over a term of years. Twenty-two of Mr. Grey's outdoor romances, his complete output, are involved and will serve immediately as material for a series of Grey westerns to be made this season. This deal placed Paramount far out in front of all other companies insofar as the number of acquisitions were concerned, and compared as follows:

The extent of the potential box office value of the new group may be gleaned from the nature and past performances of some of the books and plays acquired. MGM will do Alexander Dumas' "Camille," to star Greta Garbo. Samuel Goldwyn acquired Edna Ferber's best selling novel, "Come and Get It," for Miriam Hopkins, and Warner contracted with Warden Lewis E. Lawes, of Sing Sing, for his story about the comeback of "Alabama" Pitts, ex-convict whose invited invasion of the baseball diamond, after his release from prison, occasioned considerable controversy in the press.

Outstanding Purchases

"Gentle Julia," well known Booth Tarkington story, went to Fox, and "Green Grow the Lilacs," New York Theatre Guild play by Lynn Riggs, was purchased by Radio. Universal got Nina Wilcox Putnam's "Her Excellency, the Governor," while David O. Selznick closed with Mary Pickford for the sound rights to "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which Miss Pickford appeared in some years ago. It will be the first Selznick release through United Artists.

Shirley Temple was supplied with Edward Peple's stage success, "Littlest Rebel," by 20th Century-Fox, and Damon Runyon's "Money from Home" went to Paramount, which also bought Zoe Akins' Pulitzer prize play, "The Old Maid," successful Broadway production which still is running.

"Rose Marie," Broadway musical of a few years ago, was Metro's outstanding acquisition. Reliance closed for an untitled Elmer Rice play. July's story purchases complete, with available production credits, follow:

RELIEF JOBS PROPOSED FOR 10,000 WRITERS

Federal relief jobs for 10,000 writers, with an allotment of $6,288,000, was recommended this week, by an advisory committee on allotments, to the administrators of the Work Relief writers' project in Washington. It was reported that the sum would be used for a "wide variety" of useful projects upon which newspapermen, fiction writers, even architects and geologists, would be employed.

Among the plans is one for employment of a staff of 200 special reporters to provide weekly "narrative reviews" of the progress of the work program, these reports to go to President Roosevelt and Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress Administrator. Seven or eight thousand would be employed compiling a National Guide Book, with detailed reports on historic landmarks, restaurants and whatnot, in each of five sections of the country. There would be a department of translation of historical documents, another on an "encyclopaedia of government functions," with 30 writers at Washington doing the final dressing up of the material.

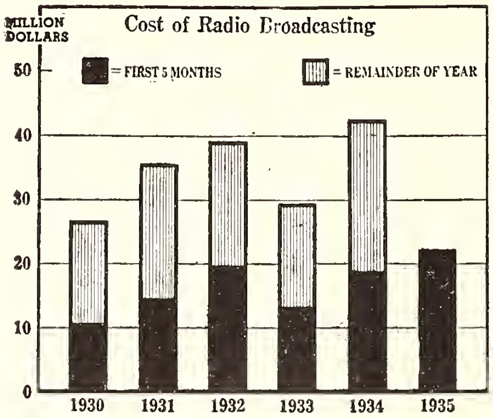
LEGITIMATE THEATRES AIM FOR SMOKES, DRINKS

The old complaint of Broadway's stage producers, that motion picture theatres receive special privileges was voiced again this week by the Actors' Equity and the League of New York Theatres in a new drive to make theatre-going more enjoyable by permitting audiences to drink cocktails and, perhaps, smoke.

Radio Advertising Shows Large Gain



In the first five months of this year, radio broadcasting advertising exceeded the record for any corresponding period in preceding years. In 1934 a high was established for the full year of $42,600,000. For the first five months of 1935 the total of $22,148,000 was more than half this amount.

The cost of radio broadcasting facilities was compiled under the direction of the Department of Commerce. The first five months of 1930 the total was $10,656,000. This year's comparative total was more than double that figure, and only $4,672,000 under the full year total of 1930.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

This is the 86th anniversary of a theatrical riot in New York the tragic consequences of which would put present day political or social riots in a class with church picnics.

A petty theatrical jealousy came to its climax on a warm summer evening when friends and followers of Edwin Forrest, American actor, staged a protest demonstration against William C. Macready, English player, upon his opening in "Macbeth," at the Astor Place Opera House. Before the brawl was over 300 Irish policemen had been battled to a standstill, the Seventh Regiment was called out to restore order and 141 soldiers were injured and 34 rioters killed.

The riot, so John Hix tell us, had its background four years before in England, when Macready bought a play in which Forrest was playing. Forrest was said to have been shown every consideration by Macready, but in spite of that he seemed to think that the English actor was plotting his humiliation. Four years later, when Macready came to America, Forrest and his friends staged their demonstration.

United Artists halts for a moment in making box office claims for Mickey Mouse to pin on him a medal for a miracle. Mickey, it is said, was performing on the sound screen at the Manoir Richelieu Casino at Murray Bay in the Canadian north, and among the audience were numerous patients from the Murray Bay Convalescent Home nearby. One patient was seen entering the Casino on crutches, navigating the aisles with what was said to be considerable difficulty. During the Mickey Mouse screening he laid his crutches beneath the seats. For the next half hour he forgot all about his affliction as he laughed at the antics of the Disney brainchild. When the show was over, he got up and walked from the theatre without even a limp, leaving the crutches behind.

Bing Crosby's dignity was upset somewhat by a telegram that he received at the Saratoga racetrack in upstate New York. Turfman Crosby had brought six horses on from Hollywood to race at the Spa. Broadway Bill Rose wired him an offer to pay him $2,000 a week to appear with the horses in his "Jubilee," and $2,500 per week for the horses alone.

Some few hours before Hollywood press dispatches announced that Joan Blondell's "perfect" screen romance had hit the rocks and that the actress was suing husband George Barnes for divorce, charging incompatibility, a publicity blurb of a biographical nature quoted Miss Blondell as saying her marriage "will last," and that "constant association with her husband is her formula for happiness."

Further on they said that Joan has three cats: "Washy," "Screwy" and "Scramy."

A few months ago Joan Blondell received from Cameraman Barnes a gold and platinum history of their romance and marriage, put together on a chain bracelet. There are two little gold hearts, joined, a miniature telephone, a tiny engagement ring with the smallest of diamonds, a wedding ring and a baby carriage, half as large as a fingernail. March of Time this week brings to the public through the exchanges of RKO a picturization of the not generally known reason why Father Coughlin commenced the fight he is conducting for social justice. Nine years ago, when the athletic priest was starting a new parish at Royal Oak, his present headquarters, in Michigan, he was threatened with violence by the Ku Klux Klan. He swore on the spot to stamp out bigotry and intolerance, and to reach out beyond his little audience of 16 parishioners, began broadcasting sermons by radio. Today Father Charles Edward Coughlin's radio followers, organized as the National Union for Social Justice, number 8,000,000.

The part of Edward Arnold (born Guenther Schneider) in Universal's new "Diamond Jim" Brady is, literally and figuratively, one of the fattest that it has ever been the good fortune of a Hollywood actor to achieve. (B. P. Schulberg has him under contract the year round at $1,000 per week; Universal paid Arnold $5,000 a week on a "farm-out").

For the part of Diamond Jim, Carl Laemmle's company ordered him to fatten up. Eating is Arnold's only hobby. In his dressing room, the only one on the Universal lot with a private kitchen, he consumed enormous lunches of boiled beef with horseradish sauce, weiner schnitzel and beer, putting on 15 pounds.

The work finished, Actor Arnold is now engaged in removing poundage at the Beverly Crest house where he lives with his wife and three children, and where each piece of furniture is tagged with a brass plate giving the name of the stage play from which he earned money to buy it.

WALKOUT AVERTED IN OPERATOR DISPUTE

Modified Scale for New York Indicated After Week's Delay; Saturday New Deadline

Negotiations for a new basic wage scale for operators and for a settlement of the controversy with Local 306, IATSE, which threatened a general walkout of the local and allied crafts from New York theatres last Saturday night, were continuing this week following the intervention of two Government mediators.

The rescinded cut averaging 41 per cent will go into effect next Saturday at RKO, Loew and Skouras houses unless a settlement is reached by that time, according to a statement by the theatres' committee. It is expected the negotiations will take several days. Any agreement for a new scale finally agreed upon will be retroactive to last Saturday, when the notice became effective.

Meanwhile picketing and disturbances, marked by the bombing of two neighborhood houses early this week, have been resumed at non-union theatres. From various centers in the field came reports of negotiations with operators for new contracts.

Commissions Win Delay

Postponement of the new wage scale for one week was made by the theatres at the suggestion of the federal and state labor commissions, said a statement issued by the committee representing the Greater New York circuits. The committee said the delay was granted to give the mediators "a full opportunity to learn all the facts in the case" and that their interest is "very welcome."

"The theatres are confident that with the full facts before them, the federal and state officials will use their good offices to bring about negotiations between the theatre circuits and the union which may avert a strike and result in cleaning up a situation which for a period of years has become impossible and cannot be continued," the committee declared.

The union had refused to discuss a wage adjustment unless the theatre owners withdrew their notice of the reduction. Joseph D. Basson, president of Local 306, hailed the theatres' action as a "smashing victory."

Circuits Charge Discrimination

The circuits, which ask for a $1.25 an hour wage scale instead of the $2.12½ in existence for some years, say that the union has been discriminating against them. The theatres claim further that while the American Federation of Labor stands for a definite, uniform scale in each locality, Local 306 maintains no uniform scale and sets up different hourly wages and conditions for different theatres.

"Hundreds of New York theatres pay as low as $1 per hour for the same work for which the union demands $2.12½ from the circuits," the committee's statement said. "This is discrimination which the circuits insist on having corrected. The circuits still are willing to pay a fair rate of wage but not more than the union furnishes the same labor for, to other theatres for the same number of hours.

"It should be remembered that the $1.25 offered by the circuits is still above what the union itself sets up as a wage scale for comparable theatres for the same work and the same hours."

Two conciliators from the U. S. Department of Labor arrived from Washington Saturday in an effort to adjust the dispute. Both sides previously had agreed to mediation. Colonel Ruddick of the New York State Labor Department also intervened.

Modified Scale Indicated

Unless a compromise is reached by Saturday, the unions will make good their threat to strike, according to their officials. It is understood the negotiations this week had reached a point where modifications in the present scale were indicated.

Leslie E. Thompson, chairman of the theatres' committee, C. C. Moskowitz and George P. Skouras represent the circuits in the negotiations.

Provided the two camps get together, a new long-term contract will be effected beginning September 1. According to Local 306, plans are underway to increase wages in a number of unaffiliated theatres.

Warner, Paramount and United Artists theatres, as well as the RKO Music Hall, are not concerned in the dispute.

The union says the situation was brought about by the absence of any working agreement in lieu of the NRA code. During the life of the industry code, scales and conditions were set under a modified agreement with the understanding it was to remain in force until a permanent agreement was worked out, Mr. Basson said.

Two Theatres Bombed

Two theatres at Columbus Circle were the targets of bombers Tuesday morning. The ticket booth and front of the Circle theatre were hit. The bombers missed their aim in hurling explosives at the Park theatre and struck a nearby building. The Park theatre had experienced a disturbance over the employment of non-union operators the night before, when two pickets were arrested.

The Circle is operated by Consolidated Amusement Enterprises, and the Park by the Brandt brothers circuit. Both employ Allied operators and have been picketed by Local 306. An unexploded bomb was found Tuesday night in Brandt's Times Square theatre.

Mass picketing increased. By Tuesday 500 to 700 pickets of Local 306 swarmed the Times Square area. The police detail was augmented by 175 patrolmen and police guards were stationed at downtown Manhattan houses. Arrests totaled 10 pickets Monday, 48 Tuesday.

Disturbances elsewhere in the metropolitan area show no signs of abating, as a result of the situation brought about by the existence in the field of Local 306, Allied and Empire State. Local 306 calls the two others "company unions."

A number of houses refusing to do business with Local 306 are being picketed in Brooklyn and elsewhere in Long Island. Samuel Allen, prosecuting attorney at Bay Ridge, complained he had been threatened by eight men as he was leaving the court building after successfully prosecuting two operator pickets. They were found guilty of picketing the Sanders theatre and paid fines of $15 each. Opening of the Colony, a Brandt operation, in Jackson Heights last Thursday night was the signal for a demonstration by Local 306 members, sympathizers and Communists. Three men were arrested, two of whom said they were members of the union.

An odd situation was presented this week when Clarence Brown, MGM director, faced a demand from Jack Hauser, stagehands' representative at Worcester, that union electricians and carpenters from that jurisdiction be employed in making "Ah, Wilderness," on location at Grafton, Mass. Mr. Brown had brought his own crew along from the coast studios.

Rumblings of a battle between operators and exhibitors were reported from Milwaukee as the local was preparing to ask for an increase in new contracts beginning September 1. The union has sent out 40,000 letters to determine the extent and frequency of patronage at downtown and neighborhood houses. The union will base its demands on the returns of the questionnaire. The exhibitors contend the present scale is excessive.

In St. Louis, the latest angle on the dispute over the non-employment of colored operators in three negro houses, the Criterion, Star and Strand, is an ultimatum from Clyde Weston of Illinois, international representative of the IATSE, that the union will not accept a settlement unless the colored operators affiliate. Another development in St. Louis was the temporary suspension of officers of Local Union No. 143 by Mr. Weston, pending an investigation. An internal dispute is said to be the cause of the suspension.

New scales in Cleveland are being negotiated by first-runs. The present contracts expire August 31. It is reported the operators are asking a 15 per cent increase and the stagehands 25 per cent more. Negotiations for subsequent-runs are being conducted by the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association.

Wage and hour conditions in the Southwest are being maintained at code levels, it was reported from Kansas City. New contracts are being negotiated to start in the fall.

ITALY MAY MODIFY QUOTA LAW TO ADMIT MORE FOREIGN FILMS

Action Expected at Session of the Council of Ministers This Month; Footage Still Limited to Fourth of Last Year Quota

by VITTORIO MALPASSUTI
Rome Correspondent

Modification of Italy's quota law, to permit a larger percentage of foreign picture importation, is a possible outcome of the next meeting of the Council of Ministers, to take place before the end of the month. At present importation is still restricted to about 25 per cent of the meterage imported during the corresponding period of the previous year.

Count Galeazzo Ciano has been named minister in charge of the department for press and propaganda, which supervises the Cinematographic Section, since promotion of the former undersecretary to secretary of state. Grand Ufficiale Luigi Freddi of the Cinematographic Section continues in his position as general manager.

Preparatory work of all American distributors is now very much behind schedule, while Italian production is being pushed ahead. Another group of 15 pictures is ready to go before the cameras, which will increase to 35 the number of Italian films to be released this new season. Two of these will be historical films: "Cristoforo Colombo" ("Christopher Columbus") and "I Condottieri" ("The Leaders"). "Cristoforo Colombo" will portray on the screen the life of America's discoverer. The scenario is to be written by H. E. Massimo Bontempelli and will be directed by Carmine Gallone, director of "Casta Diva."

The cost of "Cristoforo Colombo" has been estimated at more than 10 million Italian lira—a little less than a million dollars.

"I Condottieri" is to deal with the life of Giovanni dalle Bande Nere ("John of the Black Bands") at the time of the Renaissance, and will be directed by Luis Trenker, Italian director, born near Bolzano and well known for his work both as director and actor in Germany, particularly by his last picture, "Der Verlorene Sohn." In "I Condottieri" Mr. Trenker will also play the leading male part.

Other Films in Production

Other pictures in production are:

"Lo Squadrone Bianco" ("The White Squadron").

"Nina Non Fa La Stupida" (Nina, Don't Be Silly").

"Mater Admirabilis."

"Fratelli Castiglione" ("The Brothers Castiglione").

"Ginevra Degli Almieri."

"Idilio 1848" ("1848 Idyll").

"Non Ti Conosco" ("I Do Not Know You.")

"Be Burlone" ("King Jester").

"Il Serpente a Sonagli" ("Rattlesnake").

There are two other pictures to be directed by the Czechoslovakian, Machaty, the man who created "Ecstasy," storm center in America and greatly discussed at the Venice Cinematographic Exhibition last year. One of these two pictures will be taken from a scenario by Maolo Monelli.

While Italian production is straining every effort to obtain a better degree of international value, the 1934-35 season, just closed, confirms once again the higher class of the American production. All the American producing companies represented over here have scored big successes. MGM's best money-makers in Italy last season were: "Queen Christina," "Tarzan and His Mate," "Viva Villa" and "The Painted Veil."

Fox Films's best successes were with "The World Moves On," "Marie Galante," "The First World War" and "Bright Eyes."

Favored Players

Little Shirley Temple divides with Greta Garbo the greatest popularity among all-American stars, whilst Ketti Gallian was the most appreciated debutante-star of last season. Wallace Beery was the best liked male star.

Warner Bros.' four best pictures were: "The Mystery of the Wax Museum," "Footlight Parade," "The Kennel Murder Case" and "Dames."

Paramount's successes were: "The Scarlet Empress," "Crime Without Passion" and "Death Takes a Holiday."

The four best Italian pictures of last year's production were: "Teresa Gonfalonieri," "Lorenzino de Medici," "Campo di Maggio" ("100 Days"), "Vecchia Guardia" ("Old Guard"). The first three were historical pictures; the fourth developed a Fascist theme. These pictures are having a good European success. Italian producers are hoping that in the near future their films will cross the water into the American market. To this aim the Italian producers, and for them the General Direction for Cinematography, Via Veneto 56, Rome, Italy, are ready to consider any proposal of collaboration with American producers and directors.

Stage and Screen Improving Team, Says Alex Yokel

Better understanding between stage and screen is sure to come, in the opinion of Alex Yokel, producer of "Three Men on a Horse," who recently returned from Hollywood and discussions with Warner Brothers executives on the picturizing of his play. "Three Men on a Horse" completed its 230th performance at The Playhouse in New York on Wednesday night. (A picture of Mr. Yokel appears in the pictorial section.)

There are so many ways in which a motion picture company, with its resources and theatre affiliations, may help to put across a play that the money invested would be little indeed in comparison with results obtainable, said Mr. Yokel this week. On the other hand, he pointed to the wide source for players, directors and writers which the stage holds for the screen. The stage, he predicted, is headed for bigger things this year.

Mr. Yokel observed that a stage play in remaking into a picture gained more detail, more vision, more actuality. At the same time it had to be explained to a vaster audience, "whose average intelligence is not as high as that of stage audiences."

Mr. Yokel believed the star system of rating motion pictures will gradually pass away, not from any drastic upheaval but because the story is the thing and story material constantly is improving.

Equity does not belong in Hollywood, said the producer, who added that Equity cannot get a foothold in the industry. Working conditions around the studios he found very good.

The summer theatre, he said, has lived up to its function of developing new plays and players to some degree, adding "it has definitely created an audience, of which 50 per cent are children." The dramas themselves are not of the best, he said, but young girls between the ages of 12 and 14 are taking advantage of a great opportunity to appear on the stage and some of the youngsters are really talented. He said he had noticed five in particular and had signed two of them for his new production. Then, too, country audiences are much smarter than they were 10 or 15 years ago, he said.

Mr. Yokel is not new to the motion picture. He produced the Briggs "kid comedies" back in 1918, with Mary Carr and her seven children, released by Paramount, and he roadshowed a reissue of "Quo Vadis."

Triple Premiere Set

A triple premiere is planned by Paramount for the forthcoming "Annapolis Farewell," which will open simultaneously in New York, Washington and San Diego on August 22nd.

RUSSIANS DRAW MUSIC INSTEAD OF PLAYING IT

Scientists Sketch Music on Paper and Transfer It to Sound Track by Photography

Soviet scientists are engaged in applying synthetic music to the art of the talking motion picture, producing the necessary music for a sound film not by playing and recording it but by drawing it on paper with a pen and brush and then transferring it photographically to the sound track of a film, a process with such revolutionary possibilities as to appear fantastic.

Obviously this procedure, if ever perfected to the point where it becomes economically practicable, never would take the place of music requiring the presence on the screen of the orchestra or musician, but, it could possibly be the medium for providing music for cartoons, newsreels and features where the music is background and the musicians are not visible. Background music costs the motion picture many thousands of dollars for musicians' salaries alone.

Word of the development was brought to America over the weekend by the New York Times, which said that the Russians are captivated by the idea, undeterred by the fact that musicians who heard some of the first experimentations of hand-drawn music thought it sounded like bad broadcasting rendered audible by the worst of obsolete loud-speakers.

Already half a dozen scientists are experimenting in Soviet laboratories and producing synthetic music (usually wellknown melodies) for motion picture cartoons.

"That a musical tone can be photographed every high-school student of physics knows," the Times account said. "Jagged peaks and valleys appear on most pictures. Do, re, mi, fa as played on the piano look on a photograph like a saw or a comb. It takes more patience than skill to copy the teeth on paper, rephotograph the copy on a sound track and thus make a record which when played sounds like the 'Star-Spangled Banner.'

Musical Draftsmen

"Every musical tone consists of a fundamental and overtones or harmonics. The fundamentals of all tones are alike, but the overtones differ. It is the difference that accounts for the characteristic timbre of violin, piano, horn, flute and other instruments. By drawing a picture of a comb and giving the teeth fanciful shapes it is obviously possible to obtain something which, when photographed and played, may or may not sound like anything ever heard in heaven or on earth," according to the Times report.

"Single notes or a few bars of a song can be synthesized by this method. But when it comes to fast, complex melodies, like the allegro or a symphony, it is evident that the musical draftsman has his hands full.

"If this method of synthesizing music has any merit at all, it is clear that it must be simplified and mechanized, so that the labor of putting it down in black and white is not too arduous and costly. The Russians think so, too.

"There is N. Voinov of Moscow, for example. He has been building up a library of musical cut-outs. Beginning with the piano, he drew a set of eighty semitones. These he can photograph in various combinations. If he wants a given long note, he simply reproduces its picture over and over again. By this method and by arranging the available notes in the proper order he made a recognizable three-minute sound film of Rachmaninoff's much-played C sharp minor prelude and of the 'White Monkey' fox trot.

Whirls Patterns in Disc

"But E. Sholpo of Leningrad finds this still too complicated and tedious," the Times continued. "He cuts out geometric patterns in a disc, whirls the disc as he projects their images on a screen. Behold! Jagged comb or saw teeth, which, when photographed on a film, can be converted into musical sounds. This saves a tremendous amount of tedious drawing.

"Play a Sousa march on the phonograph at one speed of revolution and the notes well out at a certain pitch. Increase the speed and the march is played not only faster but at a higher pitch. So when Sholpo wants to make notes shriller he simply spins the disc faster. On the other hand, slower speeds give him lower notes. With such discs he managed to piece together photographs of images which, on the sound track of a film, played the largo of Dvorak's 'New World Symphony' and the hackneyed Toreador's song from the opera 'Carmen.'

"Perhaps Avranov and Yankovski of the Potylikha studios, Moscow, are most ingenious of all," declared the Times. "They can take a curve which shows the rise and fall of stock quotations and convert it into something that sounds like a moan or a whistle, depending on the ups and downs and indentations of the slopes and peaks. In fact, any recurring ornamental design will do. They have even gone so far as to combine and play silhouettes of faces. The tones that resulted were like those of a violoncello.

"Avranov and Yankovski see possibilities in retouching the tones of familiar instruments. They think that the attack of a violin bow—the momentary rasping of a horse-hair on catgut—is not particularly pleasant. Or they doctor the proper part of the note as it appears in black and white. Result: A finer timbre, in their opinion.

"But it is the mechanics of artificial tone production, quantity production, that interests the two most. They select an octave—the eight notes played by some instrument which gives rich values from fundamental to the last overtone. They obtain all the other notes in the scale by rephotographing this black-and-white picture in different sizes. Thus they collect the material for piecing together a scale which runs from the deepest to the highest obtainable note. The same timbre is preserved throughout—an advantage. The treble notes of a piano as we hear them ordinarily have a tinkling quality. But Yankovski says that his are much fuller. Other instruments are even more limited and can therefore be correspondingly improved.

"It may be that in what the Russians call 'acoustic design' we have the beginning of a new art which supplements that of the animated cartoons," the Times concluded. "It is not likely that the richness of a Beethoven symphony or of a Wagnerian opera can ever but put down in black-and-white saw-tooth silhouettes. On the other hand it may be possible to create just the bizarre effects which a Walt Disney may want and which may lie beyond the scope of any instrument—even of the versatile electron tube."

Distributors Win Point in St. Louis Conspiracy Case

Distributors won a preliminary skirmish this week with the Department of Justice in the St. Louis case, while denial was entered to charges filed by independents against distributors and competitors in the $1,353,000 Nebraska action.

Federal Judge Charles A. Dewey, of Des Moines, sitting in the St. Louis action declined to order hearing on August 19th on the application of the Justice Department for an injunction to restrain Warner Brothers, Paramount, RKO and others from negotiating new distribution contracts in that territory pending disposal of the anti-trust suits pending. Judge Dewey gave the defendants until September 4 to show cause why the preliminary injunction should not be issued, the government having fought against any postponement from August 19th.

The case is an outgrowth of claims of operators of the Missouri, Ambassador and Grand Central theatres that the distributors discriminated against them in refusing to supply product, and will go to trial on September 30th.

Bruce Bromley, Louis Phillips and I. Levinson will leave New York August 28th to argue against the injunction.

Complete denial was filed in Lincoln, Nebraska federal court by Robert Livingston, one of several defendants, against conspiracy charges in the $1,353,000 suit brought by Independent Theatres Corporation.

Derr Denied Application To Study Pathe Books

Application of E. B. Derr, former Pathe president, for authority to inspect the company's books in connection with stockholders' actions against officers and directors of Pathe, was denied this week by Justice Louis Valente in the New York state supreme court. Mr. Derr is associated with Pat Casey in the current Pathe litigation.

In denying the application the court observed that Mr. Derr "shows enough knowledge of alleged irregularities to bring an action, if he desires," without inspecting the Pathe books. The court stated that by joining Mr. Casey's pending action against officers and directors of the company, Mr. Derr might apply again for permission to inspect the books, but said that "he should not be given a roving commission at this stage."

Martin King, attorney for Casey and Derr, said that a new application would be made to the court.

State supreme court justice Kenneth Kenneth O'Brien on Wednesday denied Ben Hilbert, minority holder, an injunction to restrain Pathe from effecting its reorganization plan, which, according to Pathe officials, will be consummated within a week. Mr. Hilbert charged unconstitutionality of the stock corporation law amendment providing for extraordinary meetings of stockholders such as that in Pathe's case.

ACTION BY MRS. EVA FOX TO BLOCK MERGER FOLLOWS 21 MILLION SUIT

Court Move by William Fox Nine Days Before Scheduled Stockholders' Meeting to Approve the 20th Century Deal

Financial and film circles in New York this week were pointing to the coincidence of the filing by William Fox of suit for $20,958,333.33 against the Fox companies and Chase National Bank interests a few days before an action was brought by All-Continent Corporation and Mrs. Eva Fox, wife of the former magnate, to block the merger with Twentieth Century.

Mr. Fox chose to bring his action just nine days prior to the scheduled meeting of Fox Film stockholders to approve the consolidation. It was reported, also, that attorneys for Mr. Fox were preparing a supplementary action involving several million dollars, to be filed against Fox Film and other companies.

Attorneys in the William Fox and Mrs. Fox actions are Hirsh, Newman, Reass & Becker.

Notice of appearance in the suit against Fox Film Corporation, Fox Theatres Corporation, General Theatres Equipment, Inc., Chase National Bank and Chase Securities Corporation, and their officers and directors, on the ground they failed to carry out agreements with Mr. Fox, must be made in the state supreme court in New York county by August 28. Appearance must be entered not later than 20 days after service of the papers on the defendants.

Says Payments Were Not Made

In detailing his claim for damages Mr. Fox charged he had been damaged to the extent of $1,458,333.33, plus interest, as a result of failure to pay him $500,000 annually in monthly installments from June 30, 1932, to May 1, 1935. He also claimed that as a result of decline in security values of Fox Film, Fox Theatres and General Theatres Equipment, due to "unlawful acts" of the defendants, he had been damaged to the extent of $12,000,000, and that because of repudiation of other obligations to him he had been damaged in the further sum of $7,500,000.

The latest action is merely one of a series involving Mr. Fox since he relinquished control of his film interests in 1930. He is a defendant in a suit for accounting brought by stockholders and creditors of Fox Theatre Corporation, hearings in which have been held at Mineola, N. Y. Testifying at one of the early hearings, Mr. Fox said that all of his financial records from 1925 to 1929 had "disappeared." The petition filed by Mr. Fox alleges, chiefly, that:

1. Fox Film and Fox Theatres failed to fulfill an agreement that he be elected chairman of the advisory boards, to serve from May 1, 1930, to May 1, 1935.

2. That the companies failed to pay him $500,000 a year in monthly installments for a five-year period beginning May 1, 1930, in return for assignment of protection on his American Tri-Ergon and Grandeur patents and the assignment of 250 shares of Fox-Hearst Corporation. As part of the transaction in 1930 by which General Theatres Equipment gained control of Fox Film, Mr. Fox granted American Tri-Ergon rights to the Fox enterprises for 25 years without payment of royalties.

Other Fox Charges

Fox Film and Fox Theatres failed to supply three-year contracts to 10 employees and to live up to them, alleges Mr. Fox, and failed to designate the Fox estate as beneficiary of $3,500,000 in life insurance policies owned by the companies; and to carry out an agreement to repurchase 87,000 shares of Fox Theatres Class A stock from Bankers Securities Corporation, and to protect Mr. Fox personally from liability in connection with the transaction.

They failed or refused to protect Mr. Fox from liability in connection with any suit or action arising out of any transaction relating to the conduct of the business of Fox Theatres or subsidiaries, he says.

Mr. Fox also charges that Chase National Bank and Chase Securities Corporation assumed control and "connived in the repudiation" of the agreements made with him; that they cooperated in depleting the assets of the companies, with the result that the plaintiff has been sued in New York supreme court by the Chicago Title & Trust Company, and the companies have refused to contribute to the defense. This action is believed to be an upshot of a personal guarantee by Mr. Fox for the payment of $1,000,000 to Herbert Lubin in connection with the purchase of securities of Roxy Theatre Corporation.

Diverting of Business Charged

It also is charged that the companies diverted business from the Fox theatre in San Francisco to the Warfield, and have refused to assist in defending a suit brought by the Capitol Company of California in connection with defaults on the Fox theatre.

In the San Francisco case Mr. Fox says he has been compelled to pay $3,750 as a premium to the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company of Maryland; $94,652.91 rental on the theatre and additional expenses totaling $40,000, a total of $138,402.91, and is liable for additional amounts in excess of $2,000,000 on the unexpired portion of the lease.

It is further alleged that the Chase National Bank and its securities affiliate financed syndicates to trade in the stocks of the Fox companies and General Theatres Equipment, and executed a loan of 26,600 shares of Fox Class A stock to Pynchon & Company, a brokerage house, which never was returned because the Pynchon firm went into bankruptcy.

Two Actions Brought in New York to Prevent Fox Stockholders' Session and Merger with Twentieth Century

The proposed merger and plan of reorganization of Fox Film Corporation and Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., were beset with legal difficulties this week when two different actions were brought in the New York state supreme court, one to prevent a Fox stockholders' meeting scheduled for Thursday to ratify the merger, and the other, filed by Mrs. Eva Fox, wife of William Fox, to block its consummation.

As a "sequel" to the hearing in Wilmington, Del., on Monday when the chancery court refused to sustain objections to the merger by All-Continent Corporation and Mrs. Fox, both became plaintiffs Wednesday in an injunction suit aimed at the merging companies and others. This followed an action filed Tuesday by Alexander Gilbert, a small stockholder, to restrain the stockholders from voting.

Fox Film officials were noncommittal about the court actions. It was said at the Fox home office, however, that the stockholders' meeting would proceed as scheduled Thursday morning unless court decisions forced a delay.

Minority Attack Withheld

A threatened attack from the minority stockholders' committee headed by L. T. Pidwell failed to materialize. Henry L. Sperling, counsel for the committee, who had been profuse with statements regarding possible "legal redress," explained the reversal in tactics by saying that the court actions filed covered all legal courses open to the committee, and that the stockholders' rights to bring future actions in the event of losses were not impaired.

Reports were current that the minority stockholders' committee was "fronting" for other parties and that its efforts were merely a maneuver preliminary to actual court actions to be undertaken by others. Refusing to disclose the identity of the committee members and their stock representation, Mr. Sperling explained that the committee did not care to show its hand prior to possible litigation but that the data would be made public in event any legal measures were taken.

Deny Interrelation

Counsel for the plaintiffs in both injunction suits on Wednesday denied any interrelation between these actions or among the three dissenting groups.

Filing her suit in the supreme court of New York in Nassau county, where she resides, Mrs. Fox, with All-Continent Corporation, named as chief defendants Fox Film Corporation, Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., Chase National Bank and General Theatres Equipment, Inc., as well as U. S. Senator Daniel O. Hastings as receiver for GTE, and officers and directors of the two film companies, including Joseph M. Schenck, Darryl F. Zanuck and Sidney R. Kent. In addition, GTE voting trustees were listed as defendants.

Summonses and copies of the complaint were served on the defendants shortly after the suit was filed, and Judge Alonzo G. McLaughlin immediately signed an order directing them to show cause why they should not be enjoined from consummating the plan of reorganization and merger. The order was returnable at 12 o'clock Thursday, one hour after the Fox stockholders' meeting was scheduled to begin.

FOX MERGER ATTACKED IN TWO SUITS

Possibility that the stockholders' meeting would be delayed appeared likely late Wednesday as a result of the injunction suit brought by Alexander Gilbert, a New York insurance broker, who sued as a stockholder in behalf of himself and others not named. Mr. Gilbert's attorney said that if the court refuses to stay the meeting an injunction will be asked to prevent consummation of the merger.

In signing an order requiring Fox Film to show cause why the meeting should not be halted, Justice McLaughlin set the time for the hearing at 9.30 a. m. Thursday, one and one-half hours before the meeting was to begin. Efforts were being made by Hughes, Schurman & Dwight, counsel for the Fox companies and for the Chase National Bank, for an earlier hearing.

Many allegations are listed in the suit brought by the All-Continent Corporation and Mrs. Fox. Chiefly, it is charged the Fox Film directors are wasting the assets of the company in merging with Twentieth Century and that rights of Fox Film stockholders are being prejudiced in the transaction. The plaintiffs attack the provision in the reorganization plan giving Fox Class B common stock an exchange value double that of Class A stock, as virtually amounting to confiscation of the stockholders' property.

Holding Company

The All-Continent Corporation, reputedly owned by Mrs. Fox, is a holding company controlling voting trust certificates of GTE, under the voting trust agreement of June 10, 1931; 18,000 shares of Fox Film Class A common stock; holding a claim against GTE for $2,300,000, reduced by agreement to $1,850,000, and holding 18,900 shares of GTE preferred stock and 42,900 shares of GTE common.

Mrs. Fox owns 37,000 shares of the outstanding Class A Fox Film stock and 25,000 shares of Fox Film B stock, according to W. M. Caro, of Hirsh, Newman, Reass & Becker, who filed the suit. Mr. Caro said the action was brought also for the benefit of all stockholders who wish to join in the suit. He has been handling matters for Mrs. Fox in connection with the merger.

Mrs. Fox is the largest individual stockholder fighting the consolidation. She attempted to attack the plan "at its source," said Mr. Caro, when Murray Becker of the same New York law firm argued for several hours on Monday in opposition to the voting of Fox certificates held by GTE in favor of the merger, at a hearing before Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott at Wilmington. There were no other opponents.

Mr. Becker contended that the proposed merger was evolved by the Chase National Bank, a large creditor of GTE, and was not to the best interests of Fox stockholders or stockholders and creditors of GTE. He charged that "the court can safely assume that what Senator Hastings, as receiver for General Theatres Equipment, does is what the Chase National Bank wants done." Several times Mr. Becker was cautioned by the court to confine his argument to the merits of the plan under discussion.

Chancellor Wolcott signed an order authorizing the receiver to direct the voting trustees of Fox stock owned by GTE to vote the stock in favor of the merger at the stockholders' meeting. Senator Hastings had informed the court he believed the merger would be advantageous to GTE. The Fox stockholders' committee last week appealed to him to oppose the plan. General Theatres controls 8 per cent of Fox Class A stock and 86 per cent of the Class B stock.

"I played golf in the morning.

"I went to the races in the afternoon.

"I stayed up to two and three in the morning dancing. So, you see, I was a pretty sick man at Saratoga."

Thus did Nicholas M. Schenck deny to Motion Picture Daily the reports published in the New York Evening Journal that he was resigning as president of Loew's and MGM as a prelude to a merger of those two corporations with the proposed Twentieth Century-Fox consolidation.

"The reports are silly, of course," added Mr. Schenck. "Not only have I absolutely no intention of resigning, but I suppose I shall die still occupying my present post."

Chase Bank Large Holder

The Chase National Bank owns approximately 64 per cent of the outstanding 2,400,000 shares of Fox A common stock. Other large shareholders are Hayden, Stone & Company and White, Weld & Company, New York investment firms.

Mr. Gilbert in his action to block the meeting to approve the merger charges that officers of Fox Film are "conspiring" to deplete the company's assets and that the merger would result in turning over to Twentieth Century assets far in excess of the latter company's own worth.

He also challenges the veracity of Twentieth's balance sheet as submitted to Fox stockholders and declares that the merger is being "railroaded," against the stockholders' interests.

Mr. Gilbert describes Twentieth Century as a closed corporation owned by Mr. Schenck and Mr. Zanuck, and says that as chairman of the board of the new company Mr. Schenck would receive a salary of $125,000 a year and Mr. Zanuck $250,000 a year as vice-president in charge of production, both on seven-year contracts. The petition refers to reports that A. C. Blumenthal, who engineered the merger, will receive more than $1,000,000 in commissions. Mr. Gilbert also objects to the failure of the plan to detail the terms of the employment of Mr. Kent as president.

Mr. Gilbert is described as the holder of 50 shares of Fox Film Class A stock. He is represented by Alfred F. Rutter and Howard S. Guttman, Brooklyn attorneys.

The Pidwell stockholders' committee, through Mr. Sperling, announced Monday it was now seeking proxies and powers of attorney from stockholders, not because the committee had any hopes of outvoting the majority interests, but to show tangible evidence that many small stockholders oppose the terms of the stock exchange by which they claim their holdings are being "diluted."

Mr. Sperling added there were "certain definite court actions which would tend to change, estop or delay the planned course of the consummation of the merger."

The committee, he said, has "failed utterly" to obtain any further information regarding the basis of appraising the worth of the securities which are offered under the plan in exchange for the present stock. He explained requests for information made to Mr. Kent, Mr. Schenck, Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank, and United Artists, were either evaded or ignored.

Meanwhile, at the request of the New York Stock Exchange, to which application has been made for listing of Twentieth Century-Fox Film new stock, the financial statement of Fox Film, as issued May 4, has been revamped to eliminate undistributed profits of the subsidiary companies. The new statement shows an earned surplus of $2,674,396 on May 4 instead of $4,169,230, as reported in the original listing. The net profit for 1934 was reduced from $1,332,458 to $645,008, and the net income for 18 weeks to May 4, this year, was revised from $1,162,418 to $87,798.

Application for registration on the New York Stock Exchange of $11,917,500 of certificates of deposit of General Theatres Equipment bonds has been made with the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington by the consolidated committee for 6 per cent gold debentures. The committee has called for deposit of $29,493,000 worth of GTE bonds, of which $11,922,500, or 40 per cent, has been pledged. Expenditures of some $35,000 during the more than three years of the life of the so-called Loasby committee were shown.

Will Make 10 in London

Twentieth Century-Fox plans to make 10 pictures a year in London at the Korda studio with Robert T. Kane, now an associate producer for Fox in Hollywood, in charge, were announced this week. The first film of the British studio will be "St. Joan," said Mr. Schenck, who arrived in New York Monday from the Coast.

Fox Realty Corporation of California has announced that first mortgage 6 per cent sinking fund gold bonds due March 1, 1942, in the amount of $14,900, will be redeemed and interest will cease on September 1 this year. Redemption will be at the rate of 102 per cent of the principal.

Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., is expected to be the new name for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses following approval of the reorganization by the federal court. Early transfer of assets to the new corporation and election of officers is anticipated.

Chaplin Brings Action Against International Cinema Service

Acting on a complaint brought by Charles Chaplin through Nathan Burkan, attorney, federal judge Murray W. Hulbert in New York on Wednesday ordered a United States marshal to confiscate prints of "Shoulder Arms" and "A Dog's Life," both Chaplin releases of 1918, which, it was charged, are being reproduced without permission by International Cinema Service.

SO RED THE ROSE

Paramount

The entertainment and showmanship materials in quality of story content, value of cast names, prestige of author and director credits and worth of production values, in addition to title, out of which this picture is being spun, should be all that is necessary to stir the most convincing exploitation talents.

"So Red the Rose" is the picturization of Stark Young's best selling novel. The screen play is by Laurence Stallings, coauthor of "What Price Glory," and Edwin J. Mayer, author of "Affairs of Cellini," as well as numerous other screen plays. It is being directed by King Vidor, maker of "The Big Parade" and more recently "Our Daily Bread" and "The Wedding Night."

Semi-historic and military in atmosphere and background; the time being just previous to, during and directly after the Civil War, "So Red the Rose" is essentially a story of a great love, great sacrifice and triumph. While it includes several sequences of martial conflict, it is not a war picture. Taking the Southern side of the famous lost cause, it is a story of friend torn from friend and members of the same family made enemies. It tells a story of heroism, not on the battlefield but in the struggle to retain an ideal, while all about the might and power of a great nation are creating shambles of the wealth and pride of a proud people. Through it all runs a heart-warming love story.

Margaret Sullavan, brought to notice in Universal pictures, has the lead and shares the romantic love interest with Randolph Scott. Included in the cast are Walter Connolly, Janet Beecher, Elizabeth Patterson, Dickie Moore, Daniel Haynes, Alfred Delcambre, Johnny Downs, Emma Reed and Warner Richmond.

BALL OF FIRE

20th Century—Fox

A comedy, in which the main action is a behind-the-scenes exposition of how some persons may get a break in pictures, this story, rather than being a satire or burlesque on the art of picture star making, is a straightaway farce. It's a yarn of colossal nerve and amazing achievements. It deals with an ex-band leader who, unable to make good on his promise to elevate the singing star of his smalltime traveling vaudeville show to screen stardom, and reduced to the position of second assistant hash-slinger, suddenly takes charges of production, fires the star of the picture, picks his protege out of the line, and has the good fortune to have the producer drop in on the midst of things and suddenly discover he's "found" a star. The climax is much happiness all-around.

The yarn is adapted from a play, "Private Beach," by Gladys Unger, who has written many pictures for Universal, and Jesse Lasky, Jr. The screen play is by Lou Beslow and Eddie Eliscu. Music and lyrics are by Oscar Levant, Arthur Johnson and Sidney Clare. Dances are directed by Jack Donohue. George Marshall, who recently made "$10 Raise" and the forthcoming "In Old Kentucky," is credited with the direction.

Alice Faye, currently in "Every Night at Eight," will be seen in the role of the embryo star who makes the grade. Ray Walker is her resourceful promoter. Bebe Daniels is the supplanted star who finds solace in the fact that she can now consider as her daughter Rosina Lawrence, previously palmed off as her sister. Comedy specialties will be contributed by Mitchell and Durant, with Andrew Tombes as the producer.

Fun is the angle to stress in connection with this attraction. While not a burlesque, no attempt is being made at anything resembling seriousness.

THE RAINMAKERS

(Tentative Title)

Radio

Farce comedy, packed to the brim with gags and stunts, is the substance of this story. With Wheeler and Woolsey in the leading roles, quick identification of its character is established. With Woolsey a professional and somewhat visionary rainmaker whose attempts to irrigate parched midwest farms only results in further dust storms, and Wheeler his agent, the pair land in California to bring rain to the withering bean crops. To the tune of a lot of dramatic hocus pocus, they succeed, but in a way far from the manner in which they anticipated. It takes the detonation resulting from the collision of two locomotives to bring not only rain but a blizzard to establish them as super-scientists.

The yarn is an original by Albert Treynor and Fred Guiol, who also is directing. The screen play is by Grant Garrett and Les Goodwins.

In a supporting role, Dorothy Lee, who appeared with Wheeler and Woolsey in several of their earlier pictures, rejoins the pair to assume the romantic angle with Woolsey. Other players are Frederic Roland, as a harassed, kindly banker who looks upon the strange pair as his deliverers; Berton Churchill and George Meeker, who as father and son are the heavy menaces to the leads' scientific and romantic ambitions, and Edgar Deering.

The yarn appears to be a natural for funny, tricky, showmanship gags, a cue to which may be found in the antics of Etienne Girardot and Charles Sellon, as they function in a similar endeavor in the current Will Rogers picture, "In Old Kentucky."

BEAUTY'S DAUGHTER

20th Century—Fox

Although the title might suggest otherwise, dramatic romance which has a unique appeal is the idea of this story. It is based on a novel by Kathleen Norris, who in addition to having many followers in the book and magazine field is also credited with several successful screen stories. The screen play is by Sonya Levien, who did the scenario on the somewhat similarly premised "White Parade," also "Change of Heart" and "Berkeley Square." Direction is by Alan Dwan.

In idea, "Beauty's Daughter" is the love story of a nurse and a navy doctor. Locales are the San Diego Naval Training Station Hospital and Pearl Harbor. Spurning marriage, as she recalls the unhappy experience of her parents, the nurse, through affection for the doctor's crippled child, enters into a friendship trial marriage. While absent, the doctor enters into a rendezvous with another woman only to have a near tragedy prove the medium through which two persons who really love each other are brought together.

Claire Trevor, currently in "Dante's Inferno," and Ralph Bellamy play the leading roles. Ben Lyon, long absent from the screen, will be seen again, as a suitor for Miss Trevor's affections. Others in the cast are Jane Darwell, Warren Hymer, carrying the comedy contrast, George Irving and Jed Prouty.

Relating the kind of story that has more than usual appeal to women, showmanship which capitalizes on that trend and while using the strength of cast names to the full value, also devoting attention to the prestige of Kathleen Norris, looks to be the type necessary to stimulate interest in this attraction.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE

Warner

Though a western, more than usual significance is attached to this picture inasmuch as it is the inaugural number of a proposed series of outdoor action pictures to be made by this company. This character of entertainment having been absent from its program, it is to be assumed that it will put its best foot forward in an attempt to produce a picture the equal or superior of any others that will be forthcoming on other company programs.

To that end, D. Ross Lederman, who has achieved considerable success in making pictures which featured Tim McCoy and Buck Jones, has been assigned as director. As this type of entertainment is his forte, the story chosen is an original screen play by William Jackobs, who is credited with the adaptation of "Night of Terror."

In embarking on the new series, Warner is also spotting a new player, as far as westerns go, in the lead role. Dick Foran, formerly known as Nick Foran, has the principal role, in which he will be featured with Sheila Mannors, who has appeared in many western pictures. The supporting cast includes Joseph Sawyer, Dickie Jones, Robert Barrat, Joseph King, Richard Carle, Milt Kibbee, Gordon Elliott, Raymond Brown and Herbert Heywood.

While several novel touches have been added, the story follows the familiar, established theme. It is that of the hero, a circus star, returning home to find himself accused of murder, but aiding the girl to recover what is hers and round up the real killers and thieves. For a spectacular production feature, it presents a wild horse stampede.

ROSE OF THE RANCHO

Paramount

In this production, many things worthy of showmanship consideration are being included. It is an action thrill picture which combines the thrill of the outdoor western, the interest of a semi-historical, the charm of good music and the fun of specialized comedy. Originally "Rose of the Rancho" was one of the outstanding of the David Belasco stage productions. He wrote the play in conjunction with Richard Walton Tully. It's a story of the early days of American venture into California, when the Gringos, with little regard for established custom and rights of those there before them, just moved in and took what they wanted. Likewise it is the story of the daughter of an old Spanish family and American government agent. With both having love in their hearts for each other, there is clashing conflict, the whole of which is given a musical relief with a spectacular battle in which the vigilantes of the old Spanish families triumph in a desperate battle over the invaders.

Origin being as noted, this screen play is by Harland Thompson, Brian Hooker and Charles Brackett, with adaptation by Frank Partos and Frank Adams. The modernized music is by Ralph Ranger and Richard Whiting, with lyrics by Leo Robbin.

It presents John Boles, currently in "Curly Top," and Gladys Swarthout, noted Metropolitan opera star, making her screen debut in the lead roles. It supplements these personalities with Charles Bickford, now in "Farmer Takes a Wife," Willie Howard of vaudeville stage-musical comedy fame, H. B. Warner, Grace Bradley, Charlotte Granville, Don Alvarado, Minor Watson, Louise Carter and Arthur Aylesworth.

Dealing with a heretofore unused period in American history and telling a gripping love story in conjunction, the production offers in addition to the worth of cast names and opportunity for a fresh showmanship slant.

LIVING UP TO LIZZIE

Warner

Showmanship that is the attribute of a novel story, replete with comedy and drama, which is also available when such an exceptional cast as this is presented and which takes advantage of other values included, should do much for this picture. In this case, though others are billed above her, Ruth Donnelly is the focal point of all interest and action. To give meaning to the title, she is Lizzie, a servant girl. Taking a job, she inspires the young couple who employ her to amazing accomplishments in the business and social world by providing the proper contacts. In these situations the story majors in comedy. But when a girl whom she introduces into the household, that has progressed from a side street flat to a Long Island mansion, is caught in an embarrassing position with a member of the family, the yarn turns dramatic as it is learned that the girl is her own daughter. However, when the mother-daughter relationship is understood, she contrives a happy marriage and an all's-well-that-ends-well finale.

The picture is adapted from a story written by Lillian Day, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. The screen play is by F. Hugh Herbert and Lillie Hayward. Direction is by Arthur G. Collins.

With Miss Donnelly in the most active role, Warren Hull, making his screen debut, will be seen with Margaret Lindsay as the couple who employ her. Featured roles are occupied by Anita Louise, soon to be seen in "Here's to Romance," and Frank Albertson, whose work in "Alice Adams" is certain to increase his popularity. Minor roles will present Ronnie Cosby, Arthur Treacher and Lillian Kemble Cooper.

HI, GAUGHO

Radio

Romance, adventure and excitement, tinged with music and dancing, in the haciendas and cantinas of Argentina and on the pampas, is the tune to which this production moves. An action story, embracing all the elements that go toward making popular entertainment, filmed against new and unusual locales, it could be described quickly as a high-class western adventure story set in a unique and appealing locale.

For romance, it's the story of a gaucho and a beautiful lady who stirred within him sentiments he never had known before. For drama there is the kidnaping of a decrepit old suitor by a dashing bandit traveling incognito, who, in addition to bending every effort to save his own neck, would dally a bit when a pair of sparkling eyes attract him. For action, with little comedy, there is a whole series of exciting incidents, including hand-to-hand combats, wild chases, spontaneous cantina revelries in which music and dancing assume an important entertainment-showmanship function, the climax of an old family vendetta and a lot of romantic, dramatic skullduggery that continually intensifies the motivating theme.

The story is an original by Thomas Atkins, author and director of "The Silver Streak," who also is directing. The screen play is by Adele Buffington, who did the recent "Lady Tubbs" and "Keeper of the Bees."

It presents John Carroll, a newcomer, who is noted as a concert and radio singer, in the leading role. Steffi Duna will be seen as the inspiration for the eruptive romantic-dramatic interest. Rod LaRocque, long absent from the screen, returns in the featured role. Many of the supporting players are Spanish in name; those who are more familiar to American audiences are Montague Love, Ann Codee, Tom Ricketts and Paul Porcasi.

THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII

Radio

Being produced by Merian C. Cooper and directed by Ernest B. Schodesack, a team that has given the screen some of its most amazing pictures, the story values, substantiated by awe-inspiring spectacular effects, should be something to stir even the most sluggish showmanship minds, in addition to cast names.

By no stretch of imagination can "The Last Days of Pompeii" be considered a mere piece of mechanical trickery. In the first place it is motivated by a gripping story. It deals with a man, Marcus who, forced into the Roman arenas to get gold, becomes the foremost killing gladiator of his day. Then, a trend of kindness elevating him, he adopts the orphan son of a fallen foe. As the action depicts the thrilling sports of the pagan arenas, he, becoming an ancient racketeer, rises through the years to a position of might and power that has all Rome at his feet.

His son, who has met the First Christian, comes under the spell of His teachings and as the path leads from Judea and Jerusalem back to Rome and Pompeii, the son, revolting at his foster father's principles and following in the path of the now deified Teacher, frees slaves. As Marcus rises in resentment, Mount Vesuvius also rises in fury. As earthquakes shake the land and torrents of fiery lava rush downward, Marcus enables the boy and his bride to escape as he dies, while an eerie voice whispers, "He that loseth his life for my sake shall never die."

The production is adapted from a story by James Creelman and Melville Baker. The screen play is by Ruth Rose, with added dialogue by Boris Ingster. Preston Foster is featured in the leading role, with David Holt as his son the boy and John Wood the man. Basil Rathbone is Pontius Pilate and Dorothy Wilson is Wood's bride. Others who will be seen among the many are Alan Hale, Louis Calhern, Wyrley Birch, Gloria Shea, Frank Conroy, William V. Mong, Henry Olker and Zeffie Tilbury.

As "The Crusades," recently previewed, undoubtedly will stimulate wide audience interest in entertainment that is semi-spiritual and highly spectacular in character, this production should not only be the beneficiary of advanced showmanship knowledge and understanding, but, in its own right, inspire exhibitors to a brand of salesmanship automatically insuring its commercial success.

THE CASE OF THE LUCKY LEGS

Warner

With Warren William again in the Perry Mason role, this picture resumes the "Case" series made popular by the preceding "Case of the Howling Dog" and "Case of the Curious Bride." As were the others, "The Case of the Lucky Legs," authored by Erle Stanley Gardner, appeared serially in Liberty Magazine. In this instance, Brown Holmes is credited with the screen play and Archie Mayo takes up the directorial assignment which previously engaged Alan Crosland and Michael Curtiz.

Though the cast is an important consideration, the dramatic murder mystery content, together with the erratic methods utilized by William in solving the case, naturally become the logical showmanship—exploitation feature. The story seems to embrace a more easily adaptable showmanship idea than any of the others. The title, alone, establishing it as something entirely different, it concentrates on what happened to two girls who won shapely legs contests. Threading through a baffling series of complicated and dramatic situations, in which the expected romantic and comedy contrasts fulfill their function, it is climaxed by Mason again exercising his unparalleled and almost occult ability to see more clearly than either police or criminal and put his finger on the killer.

That William is again in the familiar role is an interest-creating asset of no little worth, a fact that the strength of the supporting cast accentuates. Allen Jenkins again is his stooge and Genevieve Tobin succeeds Claire Dodd and Helen Trenholme as his alluring secretary. Patricia Ellis and Peggy Shannon are the prize winning girls responsible for the dramatic complicated mystery, and supporting roles are occupied by Lyle Talbot as the menace, Anita Kerry, Porter Hall, Olin Howard, Craig Reynolds and June Travis.

RKO Plans Giant Sign

RKO Radio studio on the Coast has let contracts for the construction of a giant neon-lit replica of the RKO emblem, to be in part a tower 100 feet high, which will be visible for miles about the studio. The RKO dot-and-dash signature will be flashed continuously from the tower.

Leases Three in Canada

The three theatres in Winnipeg operated by Universal for many years have been leased to Allied Amusement, Ltd., of Winnipeg, starting September 1, according to Clair Hague, general manager of Canadian Universal Films. The houses are the Lyceum, College and Starland.

No More Single Deals

Single picture deals for his company's product are barred from now on, according to Howard Stubbins, western exchange manager for Republic. The new policy stipulates exhibitors must buy the entire lineup.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

WESTERN AND ACTION STORIES ON INCREASE
NINE FILMS COMPLETED, EIGHT STARTED
CAREWE SEES NO EXHIBITOR COMPETITION
AMERICAN WOMEN THE DRAW — HORNBLOW

MAJOR and independent studios having increased the number of western and action stories on their programs, exhibitors will be given a wider range of outdoor subjects for the coming season. Choice will include everything from the quickest of the "quickies" to "The Robin Hood of Eldorado," on which MGM will spend several hundred thousand dollars, with a goodly number of well made features for first-runs.

Warners, for instance, is reentering the field for the first time in three years. It's new series of six with Dick Foran, the singing cowboy, will be their first since they made the John Waynes. Paramount, in addition to the "Hop-a-long-Cassidy" series, will have at least two Zane Grey stories. Republic will have eight Gene Autreys, to augment the eight John Waynes. RKO has three lined up for Richard Dix, and may make more. Sol Lesser will make his usual George O'Briens for Fox release, and in addition will make two Harold Bell Wright stories with Richard Arlen starred for release elsewhere. There will be at least fifty others made independently and so distributed.

Goldwyn completed "Barbary Coast." Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson and Joel McCrea head the cast, directed by Howard Hawks. Also included are Walter Brennan, Frank Craven, J. M. Kerrigan, Donald Meek, Rollo Lloyd, Clyde Cook, Harry Carey, Brian Donlevy, Herman Bing and Ethel Wales.

Sees No Exhibitor Competition

"My plan for releasing 10 complete programs a year through 180,000 churches and schools cannot possibly interfere with attendance at any commercial theatre," said Edwin Carewe. "In fact, my pictures will have a tendency to break down the resentment, disinterest or disapproval felt by 60 per cent of the American public for Hollywood product."

Mr. Carewe's plans call for release of one complete program each month, with the exception of July and August. The programs will consist of a feature length film, a two-reel travelogue titled 'How the Rest of the World Lives', a one-reel 'See America First' in color, a one-reel cartoon and a half-reel scientific short.

His first feature will be "The Pilgrimage Play," story of the life of Christ which has played for many years in an open air theatre in Hollywood during summer months. To follow are "Courageous Hearts," an original about the American Revolution written by his brother, Finis Fox; "The Life of Daniel Boone," and "La Fitte, the Pirate."

He plans to "roadshow" his programs in 20 key cities, in school and civic auditoriums. Subsequent-runs will be in schools and churches on a share-profits rental basis. After that, if commercial theatres wish to rent the films, they may have them.

Films will be shot on 16 mm. and on 35 mm. film, and there are plans for distribution of equipment as well as of product.

BRITISH LABOR TO ASK QUOTA SYSTEM REMAIN

Theatrical Employees Would Insure Film Output Maximum; Newsreel Theatres Planned

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Definite pronouncement in favor of the present Quota system is expected from organized labor in the United Kingdom, at the instigation of the National Association of Theatrical Employees, which includes studio workers.

The subject is to be discussed at the Trades Union Congress which opens at Margate September 2, when the Theatrical Employee's Association is to introduce a resolution asking the Government to take into consideration, in any revision of the Films Act, the interest of the studio employees.

The Trades Union Congress is the deliberative body representative of the whole of organized labor of the U. K. Its resolutions more or less determine the national policy and have a big influence on the decisions of the Parliamentary Labor Party.

In asking the Trades Union Congress to support its attitude, the association is expected to announce opposition to any policy which implies, or threatens, a reduction in the number of films to be made in British studios in future years.

This attitude must make it unfavorable to various projects for revision of the Act which imply the reduction of "compulsory" production by the substitution of a cash quota for a footage quota.

Instructions from the recent N.A.T.E. conference to its executive to watch all such plans, from the point of view of their effect upon studio workers, first showed which way the wind was blowing. The resolution to be introduced at Margate, and the fact that the N.A.T.E. already has been in conference with the Federated British Industries Film Group, emphasize the extent to which Labor is likely to stiffen the opposition to any relaxation of the Quota. Conversely, the unions may be regarded as probable supporters of the "Rowson" policy of stiffening the Act by a £10,000 minimum cost clause, which may be regarded as stimulating the demand for labor in studios.

"Alien" Labor Increases

The interest in the film industry as a channel of employment also was illustrated in the House of Commons last week when the Minister of Labor was asked for statistics showing the increase in the number of "aliens" employed under official permits.

The official reply was that while detailed figures were not at hand, there had been an increase in the number of permits issued during the past two years but that careful inquiries had been made to insure that British employees were not available.

Most of the permits referred to are granted to artists, technicians and writers. There is an absolute ban on low priced labor but the studios want specialists from Hollywood, and periodical attempts by all-British zealots to reduce this import of grey matter have received no official encouragement.

Before any details of the Beaverbrook-Trans-Lux plans have been made public, announcement has been issued of several ambitious news theatre projects in the West End of London. Erection of a theatre in Park Lane has been already published; a few hundred yards away, at the junction of Oxford street and Edgware road, another 450-seater is planned and a third plan is for a 350 seater in Mount Royal, the residential hotel at Marble Arch used by a great many permanent and temporary American residents in London.

The British Board of Film Censors has issued a ruling that all trailers must be of universal category whether the films to which they refer have "U" or "A" (Adult) certificates. This action follows on the discovery that children attending the exhibition of a "U" film might witness the trailer of a forthcoming "A" attraction. Licensing authorities have the power, and some of them the will, to exclude children from programmes in which such trailers are shown. In future, therefore, trailers must exclude the scenes which were the reason for their parent films being placed in the adult category.

First Korda Technicolor

Alexander Korda's first full length Technicolor feature will be "King of the Jews," from the Mary Borden novel picturing the life of Mary of Nazareth from the Crucifixion to the Resurrection. Victor Seastrom will be director.

The statement corrects various stories in circulation as to the color plans of London Film Productions, which originally was believed to have scheduled the Kalmus process for its "Queen Elizabeth" picture and, later, for a Laurence Olivier feature.

It also makes it plain that Mr. Korda does not intend to lose the distinction of producing the first British all-color feature by waiting until the new London Films plant at Denham, and the Technicolor laboratory adjacent, are completed. "King of the Jews" will be made at Worton Hall with camera equipment specially shipped by Technicolor, which will also improvise laboratory facilities.

Questions of censorship in connection with "King of the Jews" are answered in advance by the statement that the script has been passed by the British Board of Film Censors. This implies that, to comply with a definite prohibition of the censor rules here, the figure of Christ will not be seen.

"St. Joan" Film Plan

The filming of George Bernard Shaw's "St. Joan," a standing item of film news for more than a year past, becomes a definite project with the flotation of Inter-Allied Film Productions, Ltd. This private company has a very strong directorate. Joseph M. Schenck and Charles B. Cochran are associated with Dr. Paul Czinner (husband and director of Elisabeth Bergner), Dixon Boardman and Oswald Balfour (G-B directors and Chase representatives here), F. J. Chart (representing other city interests), and F. M. Guedalla, solicitor to and director of United Artists, Ltd.

Lewis Casson, husband of Sybil Thorndyke, star of the stage production, will advise on the film version, in which Miss Bergner will play Joan.

Here Comes the Band

(MGM)

Romantic Drama

This picture is not only satisfactory audience entertainment, but in title, cast names, motivating story idea, substantiating specialties and unique production values, it provides a wealth of showmanship exploitation material. Geared to a topical theme, it combines an appealing romance with a light drama, is gayly embellished with a lot of hectic comedy in both action and dialogue, includes a bit of double crossing skullduggery, presents a new idea in chases and seasons the whole with several musical interludes both instrumental and vocal.

In the yarn Happy and Piccolo Pete are a pair of taxi-driving ex-doughboys. They have learned to know what music means as a result of their experiences with Ted Lowry and his military band during the war. Back home, carrying on in their typical combative style, Happy discovers Ollie Watts, a young singer, who he is convinced needs only a break to become famous. As he arranges an audition on an amateur radio program for Ollie, there is plenty of fun. Included in this are sequences given a romantic twist as Ollie becomes more than platonically interested in Margaret. Margaret's attempt at radio fame results tragically, and as Ollie goes over big, she disappears.

Abetted by Happy, Ollie's ambition is to write a typically American melody. Happy and Pete contrive to get him an appointment with song publisher Simmons. The latter sneers at the boy's efforts, but in the meantime publishes the number secretly. While this is going on, Happy and Pete meet their old colonel, Wallace. A few drinks, as they conjure up old memories, and Wallace announces that he's going to give a party, the feature of which will be the reunion of Lowry's old band. As Ollie's song sweeps to success the party is held. Brought along as an entertainer, he again meets Margaret, who he believes is there in the same capacity, only to be disillusioned when he learns she is Wallace's daughter. This sequence is featured by the presentation of Ted Lewis in several of his best known specialties and a few that are brand new.

Then the yarn turns serio-dramatic. Wallace combines with Happy and Pete to recover Ollie's song and its accrued profits from Simmons. In a court scene the case is going against the complainants until Ollie conceives the idea of rounding up all the native Americans who provided the theme. Flying about the country, he gathers groups of Negroes, Indians, hillbillies, and presents them in court. There they sing their own natural melodies and it is proved that they were the inspiration for Ollie's song. The climax is a triumph for Happy and Pete, with love and kisses for Ollie and Margaret.

With Healy and Pendleton to assure patrons that they are in for a pleasant dose of comedy, Ted Lewis embellishes his familiar antics with a new number, "You're My Thrill," and the newcoming songster, Harry Stockwell, scores with two, "Tender Is the Night" and "Roll Along Prairie Moon," in addition to the theme song, "Headin' Home."

As the field for exploitation is broad, not only making tieups with veterans' associations easily procurable, inasmuch as it illustrates in entertaining style what has become of many of the ex-soldiers, but it also provides opportunity for worthwhile interest-creating contacts with radio stations and music stores.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Produced by Lucien Hubbard. Directed by Paul Sloane. Original screen play by Paul Sloane, Ralph Spence and Victor Mansfield. Without Regret

(Paramount)

Dramatic Romance

After an exciting and promising start, which, though essential, gives little clue to the picture's real meat, "Without Regret" settles down to a serious exposition of tangled dramatic romance. Ultra modern in theme and atmosphere and dealing with situations that are more fictional than actual, the picture is by nature an adult attraction with the main appeal directed at women. Given the proper showmanship, it is the type of attraction that probably will cause much talk.

In China, Jennifer Gage, rather than subject herself to the probable ravages of bandit leaders, elects to marry soldier of fortune Steven Paradine. By illusion it is inferred that their marriage is happy, but Jennifer's happiness is menaced by the talked about but unseen erstwhile paramour of Steven, Mona Gould.

The scene shifts to England. Jennifer is married to Sir Robert, and a newspaper insertion explains that Steven is dead. Robert about to be elevated to the peerage, there is considerable publicity which features Jennifer's pictures. Mona sees this and simultaneously sees Steven. She embarks on a career of blackmail, making Jennifer's life one of fear. Coming to Robert's home for treatment, Steve and Jennifer meet. He learns from her what Mona has been doing. At the same time Sir Robert becomes aware of what is going on.

Then the story turns to mystery drama. Sir Robert goes to Mona's swank apartment to settle the matter once and for all. Jennifer is there but her husband does not see her. Upon their separate departures, Steve enters and poisons Mona. The body is discovered by Sir Robert, who, seeing Jennifer's handkerchief and also a bottle from his laboratory, concludes that Jennifer, driven to despair, has committed the crime. He fixes things to look as though it is suicide and then has Scotland Yard called. Discovery of circumstantial clues convinces Inspector Hayes that either Sir Robert or his wife killed Mona.

As husband and wife are being taken to prison Steve reappears. With only a few months to live he confesses the crime and its motivation.

While there is undoubted entertainment and showmanship value in story content, the picture nevertheless presents several problems that will require smart showmanship to crack. In the matter of attention-stimulating names, the cast leaves much to be desired. This condition naturally throws most of the selling burden on story character. It offers two kinds of romantic love interest, melodramatic drama, only a trace of comedy and murder mystery on which to found a campaign. If one plays to specialized audiences who have sophisticated tendencies, the problem is not so difficult. On the other hand, if patronage is composed largely of general theatre goers, heading the interest creating publicity in proper direction becomes most necessary.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Harold Young. Associate producer, B. P. Fineman. Screen play by Doris Anderson and Charles Brackett. From the play "Interference," by Roland Pertwee and Harold Dearden. Photographed by William C. Mellor. P. C. A. Certificate No. 1022. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 75 minutes. Release date, August 23, 1935. Adult audience classification.

Jalna

(RKO Radio)

Comedy Drama

The appeal of down-to-earth entertainment, plus the publicity strength of a well-read author and story, Mazo de la Roche's Atlantic Monthly prize winning novel, constitute the foremost showmanship assets of "Jalna."

It is the story of a Canadian farm estate, whence the title of the picture, and what happens to its family traditions when one of its members brings home a bride from the States. True, practically all the action takes place within the walls of the Whiteoak family's home, but the occasional glimpses of the out-of-doors are compensatory. And the human note has been caught up and utilized fully in a number of intimate moments.

What lack there may be of top-of-the-ladder names is made up for in part by the number of wellknowns, among them Kay Francis, Ian Hunter, C. Aubrey Smith, Nigel Bruce, David Manners, Theodore Newton.

Conflict of emotions carries the action through the pitting of brother against brother, when each turns his eyes toward the other's bride, tragedy finally setting aright the complicated internecine strife. Comedy element is provided by the irascible 99-year-old grandmother, Jessie Ralph.

Hunter manages the Ontario farm, with his sister, Peggy Wood, who has submerged her love for Bruce for 18 years because a foundling (Molly Lamont) was placed on his doorstep. Manners, poet, comes home with a bride, Miss Francis, but on the same day Newton brings his bride Miss Lamont. Hunter and Miss Francis calm the family storm. Manners goes to seed so far as poetry concocting is concerned but his amorous inclinations become very active, in the direction of Newton's wife. Manners' own wife finds herself falling in love with Hunter, and it's mutual. When a younger brother tells Newton what is happening he goes tc find Manners, revenge in his heart and on his lips. On a cliff he meets up with Manners, who turns to run and falls to his death, clearing the highroad of real love for Hunter and Miss Johnson. So, too, Miss Wood and Bruce break down the barrier between their long-interrupted romance.

The sequence of story is adult in essence, but the Pranks of Clifford Severn as the spoiled 9-year-old hold something of general interest.—Rovelstad, New York.

Circumstantial Evidence

(Chesterfield)

Comedy Drama

There is considerable action in this picturization of what happens to a newspaper reporter when he arranges with a supposed friend to prove the injustice of convictions on circumstantial evidence, and plans go awry, leaving him sentenced to die. Whatever may be lacking in outstanding names is made up for by swift moving development of the story.

There is as well a readymade subject for problem play tieups with newspapers and the police. Is there justice in a conviction based solely on circumstantial evidence?

Chick Chandler and Shirley Grey are the principals. Other known names are Arthur Vinton, Dorothy Revier, Claude King, Huntley Gordon, Barbara Bedford.

While there is an element of the solve-the-murder style of mystery picture. the turn of plot is away from the stereotyped gathering of police, detectives and whatnot to sift evidence and clues.

Chandler finally wins Shirley Grey's hand at a trial they're both covering. and they go to receive the congratulations of Vinton, columnist, who has been turned down by Miss Grey and, as it develops later, has played too freely with Dorothy Revier, wife of Claude King, the publisher.

To prove that circumstantial evidence is insufficient for true justice, Chandler proposes to Vinton a plan whereunder they will quarrel in public over Miss Grey, a skeleton will be found in the burned home of Vinton, and Vinton will stay under cover in Dallas and then appear to show up Chandler's conviction. Vinton, however, sees in the hoax an opportunity to put Chandler in the chair, but before he can start on his exit to France he is murdered mysteriously in the burning house. Chandler is convicted and sentenced to death. Miss Grey and his other friends have about given up hope when Vinton's successor is approached by a former tipster for the slain man. This clue, to a former affair with Barbara Bedford, proves of no avail, but Miss Grey has found a note from the publisher's wife in the Vinton desk. She goes to Miss Grey's to get further evidence, is interrupted, Miss Grey tells her the whole story but insists she has not committed the crime.

Publisher King has arranged a prison break which brings Chandler to King's penthouse for a hideout, but detectives have trailed the go-between. King tries to escape and is shot. Mortally wounded, he confesses he knew of his wife's relationship with Vinton and killed the columnist.

The production is essentially of an adult audience nature.—Rovelstad, New York.

Golden Taiga

(Amkino)

Melodramatic Travelogue

But for the ponderous dramatic development that is basically Russian and the dialogue in Russian, and, apparently, Mongolian as well, this Soviet-made production would have general audience value as a scenic travelogue, climaxed by a forest fire of wide scope. While subtitles in English make clear the simple story, the spoken words throughout are unintelligible to the average American theatregoer.

It is a story of conflict between a band of gold hunters who do not hesitate at murder to gain their ends, and an official scientific expedition seeking the lode in the name of the government. An exiled medicine man plays a part in the action which follows, including the setting of the conflagration to drive out the scientists.

The geologist of the expedition is killed by the outlaws, and when a new man approaches the base of operations in the golden Taiga (forest) of the Altai Mountains, between Mongolia and Siberia, the slayers push him off a cliff and take the girl guide prisoner. The geologist escapes uninjured, however, and makes his way to the camp. One of the band is working from the inside, as one of the camp crew. The geologist, hunting the girl, comes upon the scene just as the band is about to shoot her. He binds the men to stakes, but when the girl gives the warning of a forest fire he releases them and all begin a mad rush for safety. The outlaws perish, as does the medicine man. The geologist and the girl finally make a contact with the expedition. The renegade in the camp attempts to escape but drowns in a swamp. Meantime the geologist has discovered the gold vein.

Heavily tragic in its theme, the picture holds little of interest for juveniles except in the scenic background.—Rovelstad, New York.

Produced by Mejrabpomfilm. Distributed in America by Amkino. Directed by Vladimir Schneiderov. Photographed by A. V. Shlenkov. Music by S. N. Vasilenko. Cast: A. Novoseltsev, V. Tolstova, A. Fait, M. Grodsky, V. Savitsky. Running time, 93 minutes. General audience classification.

Soviet Journey

(Amkino)

Propaganda Travelogue

While this production is basically a travelogue, the frankly propagandistic nature of the subtitles as well as many of the shots limits the audience value to those communities where Russian interest is racially predominant. An example of this characteristic of the scenes themselves is evident in the frequent repetition of large groups engaged in physical training exercises.

In Moscow, opening the film, are shown many thousands of young men and women celebrating "Youth Day," with parading units representing various fields of sports. In Leningrad are pictured palaces and cathedrals, turned into rest centers for workers and their families, also new avenues and factories. There are air views of the Volga lumber country, of the seashore play grounds of the workers and the Red Army on vacation in the Crimea on the Black Sea, and finally the rice fields of the Soviet Far Eastern frontier.—Rovelstad, New York.

Produced by Soyuzkino. Distributed in America by Amkino. Running time, 91 minutes. General audience classification.

Java Head

(First Division)

Drama

Produced in England by Basil Dean and released in this country by First Division, this is an adaptation of the wellknown novel of the same title by Joseph Hergesheimer. With two names at the head of the cast which probably will be familiar to the regular run audiences in the United States, there are apt to be problems, nonetheless, for the exhibitor selling the picture here.

The first of those is the fact that the pronounced English accent is occasionally difficult to understand. The second problem lies in the picture's rather conspicuous lack of action. It is a story of a social problem, that of the marriage of an Englishman to a Chinese girl, and the attendant complications arising from his basic love for an English girl. Although it is a story of seafaring persons and shipping firms, there is none of the aboard ship action which may be expected by the audience.

The strong selling factor is the origin of the story, the Hergesheimer novel, which was a prize-winner when published, and has been very widely read since then. A concentrated tieup, then, of novel and picture, should be of value in the selling.

Heading the cast is Anna May Wong as the Chinese wife, a player once extremely popular in this country who has appeared but rarely in American films in recent years. In support are Elizabeth Allan, young player of promise, Edmund Gwenn and John Loder, English actors. The romantic conflict, coupled with a long standing feud between the fathers of the boy and girl, which brings about the problem in their romance, may be used to attract feminine patronage.

Loder, son of an old shipping family in the England of the early 19th century, is in love with Miss Allan, and she with him, although they have never confessed their feeling. A bitter enmity exists between the fathers of the two, who, it is understood, were shipmates years before. Just before Loder leaves in command of a ship bound for the Far Eastern trade, he quarrels with the pseudo-religious father of Miss Allan.

Long overdue, he finally returns to Bristol, with a Chinese wife, Miss Wong. The arrival is a great shock to the family, especially resented by Loder's brother, Gwenn, the business man of the family. Miss Allan is hurt and amazed. But the family makes the best of the situation, and Miss Wong cares only that her husband shall not lose his affection for her. Miss Allan's uncle, who spent many years in China, forms a deep interest in Miss Wong, which she resents.

Finally, after an attempt at reconciliation with his old friend, Loder's father dies when he learns Gwenn had been engaging in the opium trade. To aid Miss Allan, for whom his old attachment has returned, Loder helps to build up her father's business. Miss Wong realizes she is losing Loder. Miss Wong is riding in a carriage. The horses run away and Miss Allan is hurt, Loder goes to visit her. He confesses he loves her but says he will not desert Miss Wong. She in turn visits the girl, understands her worst fears are fact, and commits suicide, having lost the love of her husband. The way is then clear for the couple.—AARONSON, New York.

The Vodka Boatmen

(Vitaphone)

Fair

A fair comedy features the antics and singing of the Yacht Club Boys. The promise to obtain a prince for the daughter of a socially minded mother sends marriage broker Smallanoff, one of the Yacht Club Boys, over to Ellis Island to bail out his three cousins, Romanoff, Dumbanoff and Tallanoff, who have arrived from Russia, with the hope of passing them off as Russian Princes. There's trouble in obtaining their freedom and more trouble when the mother arrives, accusing them of being impostors, all of which occasions the song "Romanoff," in which they proclaim their royal birth. In attempting to escape to New York City, they wind up in a patrol wagon. Running time, 20 minutes.

Inside the Ropes

(RKO Radio)

Good

Bill Corum reviews the professional side of boxing with particular emphasis on the heavyweights. With him is Jack Dempsey, who is also shown sparring in his younger days. Others presented are Braddock, Louis, Baer and Carnera, going through their routine. Gene Tunney at his Connecticut estate, Leach Cross, now known as Dr. Louis Wallack, in his dentist office working over Little Jack Sharkey, and Mickey Walker conversing with Benny Leonard, complete this interesting sports review. Running time, 10 minutes.

Going Places No. 13

(Universal)

Mildly Interesting

Highlighting this number in the Lowell Thomas series is the bad man's burial ground at Dodge City, Kan., statues and headstones fashioned by a local doctor in reminder of the throbbing days of the old frontier. Other subjects are ancient missions in the American Southwest, a modern pottery works in California, and the Akeley African Exhibit in New York.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Metropolitan Nocturne

(RKO Radio)

Effective Fantasy

This musical fantasy, a picturization of Louis Alter's symphony of the same name, interprets the thoughts of a young and unsung composer, while giving a composite pantomime of life in New York. Fired by his love for the girl across the way, he composes a symphony. Visioning himself as the conductor of a great orchestra he arouses the ire of the neighbors with his incessant piano playing. Going out on the fire-escape he awaits the return of the girl, falling again into a reverie. When the light flashes on in her room he starts over, only to halt when he sees a silhouette of the girl in another man's embrace. Heartbroken, he tears up the music, throws it away and jumps from the fire-escape. Horrified, the girl and the neighbors rush to their windows, but their interest soon passes and life goes on as usual. Entirely without dialogue, this fantasy is effectively done. Running time, 18 minutes.

Vitaphone Music Hall

(Vitaphone)

Fair

A concoction of four vaudeville acts, featuring Ray Hurling and Seal, Harry Burns and Company, the Honey Boys and the four Mullen Sisters, this short subject contains a little bit of everything. A battleship scene, the four Mullen Sisters at mirrored dressing tables, the Radio Rubes in a cabin scene and an Arctic setting with Charlie the Seal, all help to make this a fairly entertaining reel. Running time, 10 minutes.

The Bronco Buster

(Universal)

Lively Cartoon

There's laughable action and some cowboy harmonizing in this Oswald cartoon. Oswald is a hair-tonic salesman who gets the ranch hand job by riding the killer bronco, after the bronc has drunk liberal amounts of the tonic out of a watering trough. There's lots of fun in the caricaturing of the animal.—Running time, 7 minutes.

A Merry Old Soul

(Vitaphone)

Pleasing

This "Merrie Melody" color cartoon, produced by Leon Schlesinger, is both amusing and pleasing. Old King Cole weds the Old Lady who lives in the shoe, only to find that along with the bride he has acquired her menage of mischievous children. His bathing, dressing and rocking the youngsters to sleep, with the aid of mechanical contraptions, is delightfully done. Running time, 7 minutes.

Freddy Martin and His Orchestra

(Vitaphone)

Entertaining

There is tuneful entertainment in this number of the Melody Masters group of subjects. Freddy Martin plays various popular numbers, each in a setting characteristic of the song. The last, "The Isle of Capri," is reenacted while a member of the orchestra effectively sings a solo. —Running time, 10 minutes.

A Quiet Fourth

(RKO Radio)

Amusing

Here is an amusing comedy centered around a family on the Fourth of July. Determined that her daughter shall marry a rich ne'er-do-well and unaware that daughter secretly married early in the day, the mother makes plans for a picnic in the country. Arriving at the picnic grounds the rich boy and the newly married groom, who has invited himself, fight over the girl. The girl's brother, delighting in setting off firecrackers, is a constant irritation to the father. Some amusing scenes occur when it is discovered that the army is having maneuvers in that area and the artillery already has commenced firing. Running time, 15 minutes.

Alibi Racket

(MGM)

Point and Pace

There is fast-paced action and considerable of point and possible value for the younger generation in this number of the "Crime Doesn't Pay" series, which details the manner in which the agents of law enforcement track down the crook, no matter how cleverly he seeks to cover his tracks. This particular subject treats of the socalled airtight alibi, which is successfully broken. As a police officer recounts the story, it is re-enacted on the screen, with a capable cast and plenty of action. As entertainment it is good, and its treatment should lend itself to worthwhile exploitation on the part of the exhibitor.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Radio Rascals

Tuneful

The Cabin Kids, group of Negro child singers with an entertaining manner of rendition and a good sense of harmony, are featured in this subject, which touches on the current radio craze for amateur performers. The Mountain Melodeers contribute a bit of music, two comedy "amateurs" follow, and when the studio runs short of talent, the Cabin Kids are brought in off the street, and entertain with two numbers, effectively put over. An entertaining subject.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Mickey's Garden

(United Artists)

Good

A good color cartoon of the Mickey Mouse series by Walt Disney, this finds Mickey and his dog Pluto, in their colorful garden, and experiencing all sorts of difficulty with insect pests. But Pluto shoots some bug-killer on Mickey and in his dizziness he imagines the bugs attacking him and Pluto after having grown to gigantic size. The result of that idea makes for highly amusing and entertaining cartoon material.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Hunting Season

(RKO Radio)

Entertaining

Entertaining and colorful is this cartoon from the Rainbow Parade series. In a woodland setting a cow and two ducks are becoming fast friends when a hunter enters the scene and fires at the ducks. Believing the ducks, dead, the cow hurries to their side, shedding large tears, and discovers to her joy that the ducks were only faking. Planning revenge, they steal the hunter's guns and with the aid of a squirrel and two birds they bombard the hunter with vegetables fired from the guns. Finally one animal fires a wasp's nest at the hunter. He dashes away, pursued by the irate wasps. Running time 7 minutes.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 278 (one of a special group on sound).—(A If you are using an equipment which uses a separate rectifier power source for each exciter lamp, would the failure of one of the rectifiers mean that the show must be continued, using only one projector? Or what emergency connection might be made to enable the use of both projectors? (B) What precaution should be observed when handling a mercury tube such as, for example, an 866? (C) What is the correct procedure when switching on an amplifier equipped with a type 866 tube?

Answer to Question No. 272

Bluebook School Question No. 272 was: (A) How far ahead of the picture is the corresponding sound recording placed on the film? (B) Why is it important to thread the projector and sound mechanism using only the exact loop sizes specified by the manufacturer of the sound equipment being used? (C) Just what effects will dirty or scratched film sound track have on the reproduced sound? What precautions should be taken to keep the films clean and unscratched while in the projection room?

The engineers who prepared this question answer it thus:

"(A) The sound recording for each picture, or frame is twenty frames ahead of the picture. (B) Therefore proper loop sizes are required to keep the reproduced sound in synchronism with the picture. A slight variation in loop size is tolerable, however, but it is good practice always to use exactly the correct size.

"(C) Dirty sound film will produce a poor picture and poor sound. Particles of dust or dirt and oil on the film will introduce extraneous noises; in some cases the volume level will be lowered. Dirt on the film will sometimes collect in the sound gate aperture, resulting in flutter or raspiness in the reproduced sound. The film should be handled carefully to prevent dirt or oil from collecting on it, and to prevent it from being scratched. When rewinding, it is good policy to see that the reels have no rough edges. Poor condition of the projector or soundhead mechanism, especially under-cut sprockets, worn parts at either projector or sound head gates, are major causes of film damage."

This week the length and excellence of some answers induce me again to omit a list of names so as to permit publication of some replies.

(A) D. Danielson of Russell, Kansas, says, "Copying from the Journal of SMPE (Vol. XXIII, No. 5, pp. 249, section 11, title: Sound Record Relative to Picture Aperture), 'For 35-mm. sound film, the center of any picture shall be 20 frames farther from the beginning of the reel than the corresponding modulation of the sound track. In other words, the "Sound Start" mark shall be twenty frames nearer the beginning of the reel than is the "Picture Start" mark.' "

May I compliment Brother Danielson. Of all the mass of answers, he is the only man who cited an authority for his answer.

(B) F. H., S. and P. Dalbey of New Orleans, answer, "There must be exactly twenty frames of film between the projector and soundhead apertures. However, loops are necessary, and it is essential to the best results that they be of correct dimensions or film length as recommended by the makers of the equipment. If more than 20 frames of film be between the two apertures, then there will be a surplus of film which must be taken care of by either the lower loop following the projector intermittent movement or elsewhere; also, it is evident under this condition that the sound will not be in perfect synchronism with the picture. If there be less than 20 frames between the two apertures, we plainly see that the film required for loops of correct size is not there, and a loop must and will be short, which is a very bad condition; also, the picture and sound will be out of synchronism.

"It is possible for a variation of one or even two sprocket holes either way without serious results, but such a fault is nevertheless serious to the careful, conscientious projectionist, who regards any fault as serious. If he does not, he then is not entitled to be called a careful, conscientious projectionist."

(C) G. Thompson, of St. Louis, sends this reply (and I regard it as among the best replies the "school" has received in its many years of existence): "A dirty or scratched sound track (or both) will prevent the projection of good sound. According to the amount of oil or dirt deposited on the sound track will be the amount of noise and distortion introduced into the sound. According to the amount of scratching or of dirt and oil on the sound track will be the amount of noise introduced by those faults.

"Concerning how film should be taken care of, etc., that is a matter that involves many things. As you yourself have many times told us, Mr. Richardson, the film should be stored in the coolest place available in the projection room, and protected so far as is possible from dust, dirt and deposits of every kind, including oil. This means, among other things, that the room must be kept as nearly as possible free from dust, which if present in the air, will settle on the film, where in projecting, rewinding, etc., it will produce fine scratch marks. To accomplish this condition the room floor should be thoroughly vacuumed each morning, and the walls and ceiling at least once each week.

"Rewinding speed must not exceed 165 feet of film per minute. Reels must be unbent and have no rough edges on the flange openings. Rewinder elements must be in perfect alignment with each other. There must be sufficient tension applied to the reel being rewound from to make any pulling down unnecessary.

"Projector and soundhead parts must be kept in good condition, and the film track kept clean and free from any and all deposits of film cement and emulsion, as they will of course inflict scratches on the film. Sprocket idlers must be exactly the correct distance from the sprocket at each end and have the correct tension applied. They must rotate.

"Film must be stored in a proper cabinet when not in use, the same fireproof and containing sufficient water to keep the air therein in humid condition so that a portion of the moisture evaporated at each projection will be returned and thus the film not become brittle and the more easily damaged.

"In short, proper care of film in the projection room includes (1) proper storage as described, (2) slow rewinding speed, (3) cleanliness of the room itself (free from dust), (4) proper tension while rewinding, (5) all mechanical parts of projector and sound head in contact with moving film in perfect condition and clean, (6) proper aperture and takeup tension, (7) rewinder elements in perfect alignment, (8) proper respect by the projectionist for the films entrusted to his care.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

La Crosse, Wisconsin

Dear Herald:

We have traveled about twenty-six hundred miles since coming into this state and there aren't very many places we haven't been. There are some places, however, that might have been better off should we have missed them. Today we are located right in the heart of the brewery section, although Milwaukee might dispute this. However, one doesn't have to drink Mississippi river water here, that is if he has a dime to spend for half what he used to get for five cents.

If the argument held good that they used to use, that to bring back beer would bring prosperity, this state should have prosperity to throw at the birds. They used to say that the saloon would never come back. Well, it hasn't here in Wisconsin, but there are at least three "Taverns" in its place, all selling "prosperity," we know, for we have almost become "prosperous" ourself. Old John Barleycorn is fuller of subterfuges than an Airdale is of fleas, but then of course that's none of our business.

There are only two towns in the U. S. that are longer than Merrill, Wisconsin, and those are Rock Springs, Wyoming, and Belleville, Illinois. Belleville might have been longer if it had not been that St. Louis cut her off on the west end and Robinson on the east end. Rock Springs might have been quite a town had not the rocky mountains hemmed her in on the west and Lusk on the east, while Merrill spread herself all over northwest Wisconsin. We liked Merrill for two reasons, one being the boy who operates the Cosmo theatre at the east end of town and the other the one who operates the Badger theatre at the west end, both good theatres well operated.

Did you ever go up to Spooner, Wisconsin? You didn't? Well, should you ever be chased into Wisconsin by the officers (and we hope you won't?) you should be sure to go and see Mr. Grengs, who operates the best, and, we might add, the only theatre in Spooner.

When we called on him he had forgotten and left his shotgun at home, so we both went across the street and bought some "prosperity" and then went back and saw a mighty good show at his theatre. Grengs knows the different brands of prosperity better than most of the boys, but that's probably because Spooner is so prosperous. When you leave Spooner for the north you want to turn around and come back. For the further north you go the deeper you go into the jungles, until after awhile you run into Lake Superior, and Lake Superior is just about as wet as Lake Michigan. Grengs says that his forefathers are the ones who camped on Plymouth Rock that time. Be sure and go and see him, he's a dandy.

We wanted to see our old friend Roser, who operates the Ringland theatre at Baraboo, but he was camping on some lake, and probably fishing, but we did see Clark Wilkinson who, by the way, is about as enthusiastic for the HERALD as anyone we have found, so enthusiastic is he, and his wife, that they read it from cover to cover (except this colyum) which indicates that they know a good thing when they see it.

We were down to the Mississippi river this morning and saw an oldtime river boat land. It was most likely one of the boats that used to haul mules, niggers and cotton down the lower river. It looked something like "The Showboat" that Captain Henry operates, except that we didn't see Mariar and Lanny Ross get off. Guess they must have been asleep.

George Baurer of the Grand theatre at Durand looks, and probably is, about the youngest operator in Wisconsin. Not only that but he knows how to pick good shows. That's why they drive so far to get to his theatre.

If you never met Doc Honeck, who sells Warner Bros. pictures out of Milwaukee, it is because you are not in the show business. Doc hits all the high places in the state and he has never been arrested for stealing chickens yet, although he is very fond of chicken (we mean the kind that lays eggs). Doc is also very much in favor of boosting prosperity along. Yeah, we helped him a little too.

Speaking of Black River Falls

Jack Schnell and Mrs. Schnell are the two busiest people in Black River Falls. That's because they are trying to prove to Black River Falls folks that they have the best and most comfortable show house in the state and show the best pictures. But speaking of Black River, it looks like somebody had poured black ink in it, but that's probably because it runs over mineralized rock.

The Smith Brothers, who operate the theatre at Menominee, are not the Smith Brothers you know. Neither of them wears whiskers. Bob Smith (we call him Bob for short, his real name is William) grabbed onto us as soon as we called and took us to Rotary dinner with him. Bob said we wouldn't have to make a speech and we didn't, which goes to prove that some exhibitors are truthful. Menominee is a right good town and it has a right good lake close by and a right good theatre is well managed, and what more could one ask for?

When those trees begin to sprout
In that "Shelterbelt" out there
And the corn and melon vines are turning brown,
Then we'll all begin to shout
And perhaps we'll tear our hair,
When the "Brain Trust" starts the rain to falling down.

Should you come into Wisconsin and not go to Osseo to see Mr. Gleason, who operates the theatre, you ought to be ashamed of yourself. We are ashamed of ourself for not having gone there before, but then you see we didn't know about him until this trip. It was none of our business, but we kinda wanted to know if he was related to Dave Gleason and Oliver Gleason, who used to live in northern Indiana, but he isn't. Dave Gleason used to be a farmer and he raised a lot of weeds, and some corn, and Oliver owned a racehorse that couldn't run much, but Oliver thought he could, and he cost him a lot of time and what little dough he had. We doubt if Mr. Gleason of Osseo is related to them but we surmise that he is some kin to Jimmy Gleason, who plays some excellent comedy on the screen. We hope to see him again.

In the shade of the old apple tree
Gertie Smith came and sat on our knee,
Well—you probably know the rest, so, as "Ginger" said, "Skip it."

There is no doggone sense in anyone coming into Wisconsin without going to La Crosse and attending some one of the theatres and meeting Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Friese. Mr. Friese is the manager of all of the theatres here for the La Crosse Theatre Co., and he manages them, too.

When we were here before, we went out and played golf with them and Mrs. Friese beat the tar out of us; in fact she is the only woman in the United States who has that distinction, but this time they didn't ask us to play golf, but had us out to the club house to dinner. Oh gosh, gee whiz, what a time we had. We may miss some huckleberry pie some time but we don't intend to ever miss coming to La Crosse.

Yes sir, and that isn't all of it either, there's that boy, Charles Morrissey, who is the assistant manager to Mr. Friese, and who took us out last evening about all over the country, and showed us a lot of places that we would have missed only for him. Mr. Morrissey is another reason for coming to La Crosse. And that isn't all either. Another reason is Mr. Bender, who operates the Riviera theatre. You should never overlook that boy either. But if we don't stop pretty soon Ernie will overlook us. Anyhow, we hope to be in Minnesota and the two Dakotas this summer and fall.

Sussman Demonstrates New Lens Process

Jack Sussman, newspaper photographer, on Tuesday in New York demonstrated a new type of lens which he calls the "Eye-Lens" and which he claims has both speed and definition. Pictures recorded by the eye lens, he said, will show a rounded structure, not flat, and even in extreme closeups, such as an object photographed but a few inches away, there is no evidence of distortion, he claimed.

Mr. Sussman said that the utmost in color photography would be reached by the eye lens, in that the lens would give a complete separation of colors by separating the objects. He plans to leave next week for Hollywood where he hopes to lease the lens to producers on a footage basis.

FROM READERS

To the Editor of the Herald:

I must congratulate you on an unusually timely section which adds a degree of prestige and charm to your great magazine, it's the This Week News Summary. These pages are of particular interest to me because Printer's Ink weekly, which I have been taking for many years, features a dandy summary. And while we're on the subject I wonder how many exhibitors take outside trade journals for ideas, such as Editor and Publisher, and Western Advertising; some of my most successful theatre ideas and exploitation stunts came from these magazines.

Then give us more newspaper ads; in your issue of July 27, I was greatly pleased to know just how England advertised the "Bengal Lancers." Please devote more space in your fine magazine to this particular feature.

As for giveaways and double features, almost everything that there is to say has already been said. If exhibitors would come to realize what the average patron thinks of giveaways they would stop it immediately. Nothing will ever take the place of a diversified program. I have personally taken special pains to discuss this particular phase of show business here in Milwaukee with hundreds of theatregoers, and three out of four are decidedly in favor of a variety program consisting of a feature and selected shorts.

With the new short subjects just announced, being of much better quality than ever before, an exhibitor can build a 2 or 2½ hour show that will make his patrons go out praising his theatre and saying, "That was a 'program of excellence and good taste.'"

No matter how you look at it, giveaways and double features will soon die a sudden death, and as for myself, the sooner the better.—Louis C. Shimon, Garden Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

Martin Quigley 20th Anniversary Edition

No promises or predictions but productions already completed, pictures in production and pictures greater in number and more wonderful in artistry than ever before will mark the new season which opens in September. Not only producers and distributors but exhibitors everywhere are feeling keenly the mounting pitch of impending events, bringing with it expectations of big box office grosses unmatched in the annals of the industry. It is a happy coincidence that the publication of the Martin Quigley 20th Anniversary Edition of Motion Picture Herald, in September, will indeed be the herald of an eventful and fruitful season.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

First National

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni, Karen Morley—A perfect nose dive here. No coal mines in this section and public refused to be interested. Poor business resulted. Played June 30-July 2.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler—The fans went wild over this production. They are still raving about Ruby Keeler's dancing. A wonderful picture that satisfied them all. Played to average business. Running time, 11 reels. Played July 28-30.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler—Another musical flop. Musicals do not draw any more, no matter who is starred in them. Worst Sunday gross in weeks. Played July 28-29.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart—Another Warner musical. The day of elaborate musical extravaganzas is over. They won't pay money to see a lot of dance creations. Poor business. Played July 7-9.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Adolphe Menjou, Gloria Stuart, Alice Brady—Good production which drew above average business. However, it did not please more than fifty per cent.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee, Tom Brown—Fine program comedy. Pleased everybody and drew extra mid-week business. Played July 24-25.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe E. Brown—Good midweek business. No complaints on the picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TRAVELING SALESLADY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Good, pleasing comedy. By no means as good as "Convention City" in spite of producer's statement it is. Fair midweek business. Played July 17-18.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

WHILE THE PATIENT SLEPT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee, Lyle Talbot, Patricia Ellis—Just fair.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

Fox

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—Nice little picture. Good Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Good comedy drama. Good Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—This one played to above average business. Although story wasn't so good, Will rescued the play by his humorous remarks. Running time, 8 reels. Played July 25-27.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn—I call this a 100 per cent audience appeal production. Every minute had something new to challenge attention. Up-to-date and far ahead of the 1934 "Scandals." Good anywhere. Played July 27.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple—Shirley is as wonderful as ever. Some of my patrons liked "Bright Eyes" better. Personally it would be hard for me to say as both were very good. The colors were the most beautiful I have ever seen in any picture. Played May 30-31.—Harriett A. LeRicheux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor—Just average Sunday business on a rather pleasing little picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan—Just a program picture sold as a special and it did not draw. I did not take in enough at box office to pay for the feature and the few who came were disappointed with it. Played June 10-11.—Harriett A. LeRicheux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

SPRING TONIC: Lew Ayres, Claire Trevor—You will need a tonic after you see this one. We pulled it after the first day! Running time, 58 minutes. Played July 25.—Gail E. Lancaster, Jefferson Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—Rather above the average for this kind of picture. Plenty of action and thrills. A satisfactory production. Played July 13.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

Invincible

SYMPHONY FOR LIVING: Evelyn Brent, Al Shean—A good family picture. Some fine music to it. Not much comedy.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Mascot

BEHIND THE GREEN LIGHTS: Norman Foster, Judith Allen—Below average draw.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MGM

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Clark Gable, Constance Bennett—Another so called special which is just an ordinary program picture. Played on double bill with "Behind the Evidence." Received more favorable comments on "Behind the Evidence" than on "After Office Hours." Played June 1-2.—Harriett A. LeRicheux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

CALM YOURSELF: Madge Evans, Robert Young—Comedy drama, fairly good evening's entertainment for those who like to come in and cool off during these hot, blistering days. Nothing extra as far as motion pictures are concerned. Played to average business. Running time, 8 reels. Played July 31-August 1.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Freddie Bartholomew, Edna May Oliver, Maureen O'Sullivan, Madge Evans—Very good except at the box office.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Clark Gable, Charles Butterworth—Here is a good picture. While it did not draw so much extra business, it pleased all that came out.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker—Light comedy affair with exciting situations in the last two reels. Very good picture, with a moral. Played to average business. Running time, 7 reels. Played July 19-20.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye, Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel—Can't say very much for this. It did not draw enough to be able to tell if it pleased or not.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

RECKLESS: Jean Harlow, William Powell, Franchot Tone, May Robson—As the title goes, it is the first production I have presented to my patrons that has lived up to the title in quite some time. Good picture. Played to average business. Running time, 8 reels. Played July 21-23.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—Here is the most wonderful and extraordinary picture I have ever played. It drew more business and pleased nearer one hundred per cent than any picture I have played during the past eighteen months.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

SHADOW OF DOUBT: Ricardo Cortez, Virginia Bruce—Just a picture which failed to pay its way.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

VAGABOND LADY: Robert Young, Evelyn Venable—Slightly better than average program offering. Pleased generally. Played July 24.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda, Ted Healy—Left a sour taste at the box office. Junk it.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

Paramount

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray—Good Saturday business on this. The local Ford dealer furnished me a new car for street ballyhoo which helped materially.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray, Ann Sheridan, Sir Guy Standing—A fair story of Michigan highway police.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

COLLEGE SCANDAL: Arline Judge, Kent Taylor—The picture lacks names for the marquee that mean anything, but the picture will please the average patron. Running time, 79 minutes. Played July 28-29.—Gail E. Lancaster, Jefferson Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

DEVIL IS A WOMAN, THE: Marlene Dietrich—This gave me the worst Monday I have ever known but I am glad very few came to see it because it shows me that the people in this little country town are still sane. Had I had a good night on this one, I would have been convinced that all here were without sound minds and a real picture would have flopped. Running time, 80 minutes.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. General patronage.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL: Richard Barthelmess, Joe Morrison, Helen Mack, Gertrude Michael—Just another programmer with the same old line of gangster mix-ups. Played to average business. Running time, 8 reels. Played July 17-18.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert—Nice little light comedy. A little extra business on Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft, Edward Arnold—Here is a George Raft picture that will please the masses. It is fast moving melodrama with an engrossing murder mystery spiced with clever comedy and sufficient romance. Our audience okayed it at the B. O., and that's where it counts. Running time, 77 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—Gail E. Lancaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Randolph Scott, Jackie Cooper—A good Saturday bill. Quite a lot of comment because of the all star cast.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Cooper, Randolph Scott—About the usual Zane Grey fare, probably not quite up to average. With this title I looked for extra business but it didn't materialize. Receipts just about average for a mid-week show.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—Hot weather hurt this one. It's a very gripping and entertaining picture.—Roy W.

Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—Played this ahead of "G Men." Better picture but star drawing power was poor. Those that saw it liked it better than "G Men." Fair business. Played July 19-20.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES: Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans—Another one of the "G" men cycle. However, it's interesting and the cash customers liked it O. K. Running time, 66 minutes. Played July 28.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby—Biggest Thursday-Friday gross in 1935. What more can an exhibitor ask? Played August 1-2.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONE HOUR LATE: Joe Morrison, Helen Twelvetrees—An interesting picture but below average draw for us. Played August 3-4.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charlie Ruggles, Zasu Pitts—Very good. It brought them out and kept them howling while they were out.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

SMART GIRL: Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino—A modern story of tangled romantic affairs, embellished by an "all is not gold that glitters." A good program picture. Played to average business. Running time, 8 reels. Played August 2-3.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

SMART GIRL: Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino—Played this release date. No paper and no trailer. In spite of that did extra business. Good comedy-drama. Joe Cawthorn furnishes plenty of laughs. Pinky Tomlin good as dumb son. Pleased everybody. Played July 26.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie and his Band—Fair to middling program offering. Please the younger element but not much for the older folks. No great loss if you pass it up. Running time, 74 minutes. Played July 20.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Myrna Loy, Cary Grant—This one pleased generally. My town likes action in the air.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

Republic

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Norman Foster—They have used many of the incidents of the original story but changed the plot clear out of recognition. Eggleston's story is a much more powerful drama than this picture. It got by here on Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

KEEPER OF THE BEES, THE: Neil Hamilton, Betty Furness—Good picture, however changed a great deal from the original story. Good cast and well directed. Played to average business. Running time, 8 reels. Played July 14-16.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

BREAK OF HEARTS: Katharine Hepburn, Charles Boyer, John Beal—Fine music, beautiful photography and excellent acting will have to make up for a weakness in story. We have installed Wide Range sound and had favorable comment on the symphony reproduction. Katharine Hepburn gives a great performance and a discriminating audience will appreciate the picture. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 25-27.—Gail E. Lancaster, Huntington Theatre, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

GRAND OLD GIRL: May Robson—Reports have been misleading on this. Will have to call it "one grand flop." Poorest show Robson ever played in and a total failure in the draw. Gave us the poorest gross in nearly five months. If you have a selective deal this is a mighty good show to pass up.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Gene Raymond, Ann Sothern—Good little picture that did not mean a thing at the box-office. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—A good clean picture. The old ladies thought it was fine. Played July 27-28.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—Positively one of the finest screen entertainments ever made for the agricultural community. This glorifies the farmer and naturally goes over extra big with that class. 85 per cent of our customers are "haymakers" and the comments were plentiful and exceptionally fine. Little Virginia Weidler has a great part and puts it over like a million. Did a nice business in spite of extreme heat.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—One swell picture from RKO. Received more favorable comment on this picture than I have received for a long time. This is a small town natural. Little Sister sure stole the show. My patrons told me that she is better than Shirley Temple. However, I can't say as to that as I have never seen Shirley. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 14-15.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. General patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER THE: Katharine Hepburn—The highbrows came in to see this and seemed to enjoy it but the regular fans weren't so hot for it. The climax of the picture is very tame compared with that of the original story.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—A very commendable production. Some of our regulars remained away, but we had quite a number of people who seldom attend the motion picture house. Played July 24-25.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason, Lola Lane—Very good. Murder and comedy together that went over all right. Did better than average business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 27.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PEOPLE'S ENEMY: Preston Foster, Melvyn Douglas—Believe me and don't show this one. Smallest night's receipts this summer and those that did come walked out. Played July 30.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROBERTA: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—The seldom-comers thought this was pretty good but the regular fans said it wasn't up to the standard of Astaire's and Rogers' previous vehicles. The weather was hot but business was not.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—If they all come as good as this there would be no kicks. Irene Dunne is sweet but her singing numbers are too long.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—I had heard so much about the picture that I was interested in seeing how good it was or whether it was overrated. It is a wonderful production. I consider it the best of the year. In my judgment it is great, and should be a record breaker almost any place. Played August 3.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—If you insist on calling this a program picture, I will rate it the best in that class to come from RKO this season. This is one of those rare pictures that will please and delight 100 per cent of any business. Lederer has a part that is made to order for him. We want to see a lot more of this exceptional lad.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SHE: Helen Gahagan, Randolph Scott—A weird spectacular picture from Rider Haggard's book "She." Did a good business.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Charles Starrett, Sally Blane—An interesting Saturday bill to fair business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—This is a good enough picture of its kind, but didn't please so well due to the fact that the ladies didn't know that it was a murder mystery. They don't care for that sort of thing. However, it did average business and that is something. Ginger Rogers is out of place in anything except msuicals. Running time, 90 minutes. Played July 7-8.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. General patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix—Very good Saturday bill.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

FOLIES BERGERE: Maurice Chevalier, Merle Oberon, Ann Sothern—Another semi-musical. Well liked but for the footage wasted on chorus dances. Chevalier liked here in straight song-comedy roles. Fair business. Played July 14-16.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD: George Arliss—This did not draw. It seems that the young people don't care for Arliss. George Arliss is one of the best actors on the screen. Running time, 94 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery—Rather disappointing. P. T. Barnum was not the vulgar boor that he is depicted in this picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery—Pretty good picture that did not do very good at the box-office. Running time, 105 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND: Gene Raymond, Nancy Carroll, Jack Benny, Mitzi Green—About all I can say about this one is that it is one swell picture. The best yet from United Artists outside of Cantor. It has everything, murder, musical numbers, crooks and anything you want to satisfy all of the trade. Also glad to report that I made a few dollars on it and that is something to report on a United Artists picture. Running time, 90 minutes. Played July 25-26.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. General patronage.

Universal

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN: Boris Karloff—One of those pictures that no one likes but they come just the same. We played this on Sunday and did a very good business on same. Every one of Universal's horror pictures has made money for us and that is what counts. If any of you exhibitors have not played this, you are missing a good box-office hit. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN: Boris Karloff—One of Universal's best drawing cards. This picture drew the largest gross so far this season for a Universal picture. It is a thriller all right. It drew a larger percentage of the women who I didn't think cared for that sort of thing. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 21-22.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. General patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—Why, oh, why don't the producers make more pictures like this. It is one of the best pictures I have ever seen. Claudette Colbert is fine, in fact the whole cast is excellent. Am proud to have played it. Played May 18-19.—Harriet A. LeRicheux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN NEW YORK: Lyle Talbot—Pleasing little picture that got by acceptably on Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN NEW YORK: Heather Angel, Lyle Talbot—Fairly good, but nothing big. There were some good spots in it but as a whole it was just an average picture. Played July 20.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM: Mary Carlisle, Edward Arnold, Phillips Holmes—Better than average program show. Would call it a very entertaining gangster picture. Business not so good.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

MISTER DYNAMITE: Edmund Lowe—Good action picture that drew fair at the box-office. Running time, 69 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PRINCESS O'HARA: Jean Parker, Chester Morris—This is a real one. Most people were pleasantly surprised. It deserves high commendation. Usual number of fans on hand. Played July 27.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Warner Bros.

G MEN: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay, Ann Dvorak—Cagney always a good star. Picture exciting and up to the old Cagney pep and zip. Fair business. No comments from patrons. Played July 21-23.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

NIGHT AT THE RITZ, A: William Gargan, Patricia Ellis, Allen Jenkins—Another one that is not worth your time. When they made this, story material must have been very scarce.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. General patronage.

SUPER-STUPID: Coronet Series—Just another comedy. Belongs in your weak spot.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RAINBOW CANYON: FitzPatrick Travel Talks Series—Good color travelogue. Nice program filler.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

YOU BRING THE DUCKS: Irvin S. Cobb—Not much to these comedies. Cobb had better stick to his writing. Running time, two reels.—Harriett A. LeRicheux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CAB CALLOWAY'S JITTERBUG PARTY: Headliners Series—Not as good as the last reel on this band. Music played not as "hot" as former ones. Satisfied, however.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

DANCING ON THE MOON: Color Classic—A fine colored cartune with a trip to the moon by the animals.—C. I. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FAMOUS PEOPLE AT PLAY: Paramount Varieties Series—Not so good. Slow and not interesting except to morbid fans.—John H. Rorrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

FELINE ATHLETES: Grantland Rice Sportlights Series—Excellent sport reel with animals. Pleased.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

KIDS IN THE SHOE, THE: Color Classics—Fine. Well liked. Theme song, "My Mama Don't Like No Music," put in cleverly and is a riot.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

MUSICAL COCKTAIL, A: Anson Weeks and Orchestra—Just average band reel.—John H. Forrester, Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. Rural patronage.

YACHT CLUB BOYS GARDEN PARTY: Headliners Series—A good quartette in a novel number.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO Radio

FLYING DOWN TO ZERO: Clark & McCullough Series—About an average comedy from this team. They have made some very good ones, but I don't believe this one is hardly up to standard, as the audience didn't get the laughs from this one that they mostly do. Running time, 2 reels.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. General patronage.

HENRY THE APE: Bert Lahr—This is not amusing.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

JAMAICA: Vagabond Adventure Series—A pleasing educational travel reel in black and white.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PICNIC PANIC: Rainbow Parade Cartoon—A good colored cartoon with novel idea of coffee pot. This family on a picnic.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SIMP PHONEY CONCERT: Headliners Series (1934-35)—Personally, I thought this a fair comedy, but the audience gave it the clap at the end. And I am not sure but what they were glad that it was over. Running time, 2 reels.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. General patronage.

SPINNING MICE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—Good. They all liked this. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FUNNY LITTLE BUNNIES: Silly Symphonies Series—Very nifty but I can't see where they draw any extra business. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MICKEY'S MAN FRIDAY: Mickey Mouse—A very good cartoon of this series. Mickey is shipwrecked on an island and rescues a native from the cannibals, who, in turn, becomes his man Friday. MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CAN'T POINT WITH PRIDE

The campaign sponsored by a Jersey City newspaper to secure for that community, day and date first-run showings with New York City again brings up the question of whether or not smaller situations within reaching distance of the big spots benefit by playing new releases ahead of or at the same time with the keys.

Based upon personal theatre experience in lesser places, it was found that grosses were higher in most instances when we played pictures a week or two behind. The reasons are not hard to find.

The key first-runs usually spread the word lavishly in their newspapers and these dailies circulate widely in the drawing areas. Extensive billing along the highways by the de luxers also does a lot to sell a coming attraction in the subsequents, and important too is the invaluable word-of-mouth advertising by the locals who see these dated pictures in the keys.

That newspapers and chambers of commerce in the lesser communities cannot point with pride to the fact that their theatres play day and date with neighboring big cities is hardly a reflection upon the size or industrial importance of any particular town.

PERSONAL INTEREST

It is not to wonder that ticket-buyers at Manager Joe Ryan's Grand Theatre, in St. Cloud, Minn., react so favorably to what this showman referred in last week's issue as his "personal interest" plan in checking the cooling system. For not only is the temperature of the house observed closely at all times but patrons also queried as regards their comfort.

Thus the annoyances of a bit of draught or a not overly cool seat are removed by a discreet suggestion that the patron move to a more favored location. These attentions pay extra dividends, according to Ryan, who says:

"We have employed this thought from the first day we put our system into operation and the thanks we have received from many patrons, not to speak of the inestimable amount of good will we have gained, has more than repaid us for this slight extra effort."

Unable to locate a pocketbook lost by a woman at the New York Roxy, an usher is carrying a discolored orb handed him by the irate female who attempted, we understand, to do further similar damage to others of the staff endeavoring to pacify her.

AN INVITATION

The two-page spread in this week's Round Table devoted to Standard Theatres of Oklahoma City, besides detailing the who's who and recent exploitation activities of that company, is also an invitation to other local and less than national circuits to participate in our current series of Guest Sections.

After all, the magnitude of any circuit operation does not necessarily indicate the degree, high or low, of showmanship that obtains among its manpower. There are among the smaller companies many theatremen doing a fine boxoffice job. Accounts of these activities and those responsible for them, we should be pleased to set before our readers.

PRACTICAL PROCEDURE

1935 may yet be known as the year of showbusiness that marked the greatest progress made by the producers' home office advertising departments in getting closer to theatre publicity problems. The Fox and Warner Brothers organizations have already made definite strides in this direction as has been pointed out on this page. And now with the appointment of the former RKO New England theatres ad chief, Jack Goldstein, to head United Artists' exploitation department, Monroe Greenthal swings his company into line.

It becomes evident by these manifestations that the producing companies are adopting a most practical if long delayed procedure in getting so closely and so wisely behind the boxoffice drive of the man in the field.

DOUBLING IN BRASS

Members who have put on most every kind of a "week" to aid the grosses will no doubt read with interest on the next page the account of Manager Harry Hadfield's recently completed and successful "Ushers' Week" at the Belpark Theatre, Chicago.

The increased business brought in by this idea plus the opportunity it allowed lesser members of the personnel to show their exploitation mettle, may be set down as a profitable revival of early day showmanship when "doubling in brass" was recognized as necessary equipment in holding down a job.

Radio Station Ties in With Marcus on "Public Hero"

Manny Marcus, Emboyd Theatre, Ft. Wayne, Ind., planted a contest with radio station for spot announcements to the effect that at a certain time each day a voice from the Emboyd would call various residents to inquire if they had heard about the coming picture "Public Hero." If at the time of calling the person answering would say "Is this Public Hero No. 1 calling?" they would be eligible for cash or ticket award. To further build up the gag, girl was placed in lobby of theatre at dummy board.

Twelve boys paraded streets carrying six-foot cutout letters spelling picture title and assembling them at street intersections.

Plants Teletype Machine In Lobby on "Let 'Em Have It"

Through the cooperation of local telegraph company Manager Stewart Tucker at the Byrd in Richmond, Va., on "Let 'Em Have It," arranged for a teletype machine with operator to be set up in lobby. Uniformed messenger handed telegrams with theatre copy to patrons that had come through from girl on the sending end at telegraph branch. Stewart says great interest was displayed in operation of machine and extra copies of wires were distributed to people on streets and planted in various windows.

For street bally, two twenty-fours were backed up and mounted on special trailer covering entire city. Baker carried banners on all trucks reading "health for all 'Let 'Em Have It' with our bread and see Richard Arlen at the Byrd."

PTA Cooperates With Perry and Whyte

Tying in with the PTA in St. Albans. Calvin Perry, owner and manager Bill Whyte at the St. Albans Theatre arranged for a Saturday morning matinee to which all members of the Tarzan Safety Club were invited to a specially arranged program including punch and judy show and kiddies from local dance school.

Bill is doing some fine good-will stuff at the house, recently holding special show for youngsters at which they were given lecture by police department on "safety." Whyte also has been appointed head of the junior league ball team held in connection with the theatre's activities.

Hadfield Conceives "Ushers' Week" Idea

Reported to have returned excellent results in pepping up mid-summer grosses was Manager Harry Hadfield's "Ushers' Week" at the B and K Belpark, Chicago, wherein each usher for one day was permitted to act as the manager of the house, and to introduce some innovation.

Thus during the seven days of the "week" a number of exploitations were effected, starting with free roses to women patrons given through florist tieup. Included also was a furniture giveaway and a bathing beauty contest on another night with promoted prizes.

Week wound up with a Saturday kid matinee offering free ice cream, candy, etc. Program was composed of selected shorts and cartoons and for a street stunt, Northwest Bugle Corps was invited to perform in the lobby.

Ushers' pictures were taken and with stories on the "week" planted in downtown and neighborhood papers. Advance started three weeks ahead and the stunt built up with trailers, lobby posters, talks by usher-captain before Chamber of Commerce meet, badges worn by ushers, bumper strips on employees cars, and other devices.

One of the keenest ideas was a card with copy:—"Ushers Week starts Sunday, July 21. On Blankday of that week, I will be acting manager of this theatre and will consider it a privilege and pleasure to entertain you on that day." Card was signed with name of usher, and distributed to patrons by each one. On his particular day, usher wore badge stamped "manager."

These were the highlights of the campaign and Hadfield writes that he will be glad to go into further detail with any member who may be interested in putting over this slant.

Danny's "Ike" Bally Crashes All-Star Game

The thousands that crowded the Municipal Stadium in Cleveland a few weeks back to witness the all-star game between the National and American League teams also got a load of the smart bally on "Alibi Ike" put over by Sid Dannenberg, Warner zone ad head, for the date at the Hippodrome.

Danny planted a flock of young ballplayers in uniform and carrying back banners out at the stadium (see photo) where they mingled with the crowds inside and out, gathering an audience that helped sell the picture.

Sig's "West" Proxy Is Guest of City

Sig Solomon mailed an invitation to Mae West to come to Newark, N. J., to spend the day as part of his "Goin' to Town" campaign at the Regent. But Mae wrote she could not make it, which did not at all deter the July Silver winner, who immediately hired a professional West impersonator to act as the star's proxy and put on his welcome as heartily and as thoroughly as though Mae was present.

In line with the gag, Sig ran a contest for West "doubles" and selecting the best lookers, had the gals act as an escort to Miss Proxy West. These were taken in promoted cars to the Newark airport, where Miss Proxy landed from a plane, was driven to the City Hall to meet the Mayor.

Then followed a buffet lunch with dance bands, two M. C.'s and carnations to all, these being promotions, of course, and after the reception a parade to the International League ball park, where Miss Proxy rode to the home plate in her official car, met the players and officials of both clubs and was introduced over the radio.

After which a visit to the "shut-ins" and dinner with the Wests and their boy friends as other guests. Then a parade to the theatre with motor cycle police escort, fife and drum corps, special motor cycle club turnout and a fleet of cars for the doubles.

Appears at Theatre

At the theatre Miss Proxy walked in across specially laid carpet and made stage appearance, doing a West number from the picture. After the "doubles" contests awards were made and dancing prolog put on there were other appearances at night clubs and then to leading hotel.

Sig also tied up merchants for four-page program that included a West wisecrack contest for ducats, getting over 500 answers. He dug up what he calls a "chatterbox" novelty with string, which when pulled sounded like West talking, and this he used as another contest for free pairs of shoes.

Local girls were appointed to act as critics and Solomon arranged for them to see the picture before the opening. Their opinions were mimeographed and used as heralds. A ballot box idea also clicked, with patrons given votes and asked to mark them with from one to four stars and deposit in specially marked container in lobby.

Additional tieups of various kinds, including prominent windows, New York newspaper reprints and other tasty money-getters were other stunts used.

SOLOMON, LAWLER WIN JULY PLAQUES

New Jersey Warnerite Second Time Silver Winner; Bronze Goes to Illinois Theatreman

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Gosh folks, those Quigley Award entrants are sure making it plenty tough for the judges these warm days, the July competition standing up more than well to the standards set in previous months. For after two extra days beyond the usual judging period, the decisions have just come through.

By majority vote, Sig Solomon, manager of Warners' Regent Theatre, of Newark, N. J., in Don Jacock's zone, is awarded the July Silver for his campaign on Paramount's "Goin' to Town." Solomon's house is a subsequent run, and his date on the picture was three days, starting June 30.

The July Bronze goes to Ralph Lawler, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, in Springfield, Ill., one of Jules Ruben's Great States houses. Ralph did a fine job on Radio's "Becky Sharp," his effort winning him one of the coveted plaques for the first time and, incidentally, also a "first" for that circuit.

And to give you a faint idea of how difficult it was this month to place the finishers, four First Mentions were voted, and never before in the history of the Quigley Awards has it been necessary to award that many. However, there was little to choose between the four campaigns. All were very good indeed, and the "firsts" go to the following:

Four First Mentions

Bill Barron, manager, Kenyon, Pittsburgh, Pa., on Warner's "Alibi Ike"; Wally Caldwell, manager, Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, on MGM's "Escapade"; Ed H. McBride, manager, State, Syracuse, N. Y., on Columbia's "Love Me Forever," and last, but not least, Burgess Waltmon, Orpheum, Fulton, Ky., who did a swell job on Warners' "In Caliente."

Barron is another of Harry Kalmine's Pittsburgh Warner boys in C. J. Latta's district; Caldwell is in the Wm. A. Finney Loew division; McBride in H. M. Addison's Loew division, and Waltmon in Howard Waugh's Warner zone.

Sig Solomon is the third manager to win a Quigley Award for the second time, having clicked previously in November, 1934. He now joins the select circle, comprised of Bill Hendricks, of Memphis, and Fuzzy Knight, of Fairmont, West Virginia, all three, incidentally, being Warner men.

Eleven "Honorable" Entries

Next in line and voted Honorable Mentions were the showmen credited with 11 campaigns, 13 of these theatremen being eligible. Their names, theatres and campaigns are listed in column to the right. Among the newcomers to the honors' list are Bob Campbell, manager of the Fox Palace, Muscatine, Iowa; Al Nowitsky, manager of the Wilmer and Vincent Colonial Theatre, in Richmond, Va., and Stanley Barr, manager of the Warner Capitol, in Winchester, Va.

Foreign showmen in the list include Dillon Damen, London Warner publicity director, another first-timer, and A. L. Caplan, of the Fox Hong Kong, China, forces, who has won previous mention.

Also a first-timer and deserving of recognition is O. H. Bradbury, recently promoted to the post of manager of the Lucas and Jenkins Georgia Theatre, in Atlanta. Bradbury was upped to his present job from the post of assistant under our good friend "Whit" Whitaker, and allowed little time before making a Quigley Awards bid.

As a whole, the entries for July were very worthy and in spite of the heat, of a high standard of excellence. Concurring unanimously in this opinion were the judges, Neil F. Agnew, of Paramount Pictures; Louis Frisch, of the Randforce Circuit, and Ed Finney, of Republic Pictures.

William A. Barron, Manager, Warner's Kenyon, Pittsburgh, Pa. "Alibi Ike"

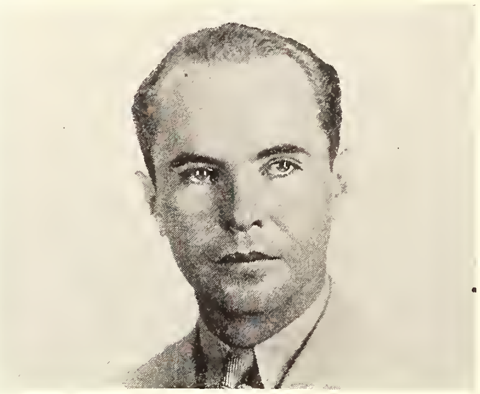
McGee Charity Show Builds Up "Sharp"

For the benefit of local milk fund sponsored by newspaper, Pat McGee, put on a charity show at the Criterion Theatre that not only added to the fund's finances but also succeeded in breaking thousands of lines of free space on "Becky Sharp" which was part of the show. Oklahoma City editors were reported to have gone completely overboard on the color angle of the picture, giving the date plenty of publicity and art breaks.

Novel and new was McGee's idea of a "Theatre Cabaret" party which was another inducement for the folks to shell out for the worthy charity. Pat advertised (see cut above) that two bands would be planted on the stage where patrons would be invited to come up and dance.

Show was run off in four units—public dancing, vaudeville, preview and shorts and of course a good, good time was had by all.

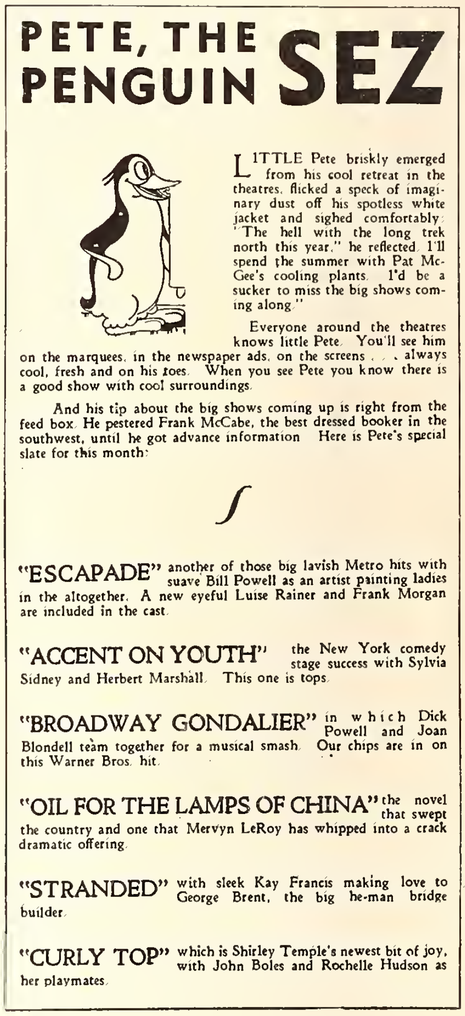
Chief Executives



PAT McGEE (above), is General Manager of Standard Theatres Corporation, Oklahoma City, the exploitation activities of which are regularly reported in these pages.

GEORGE Y. HENGER (above), City Manager, Standard Theatres, has 12 houses under his jurisdiction. Formerly served as Zone Manager for Warner Brothers in Oklahoma.

BERT STERN, advertising manager of Standard Theatres, has handled many theatres in executive capacities and has also been in production.



PETE, THE PENGUIN SEZ

LITTLE Pete briskly emerged from his cool retreat in the theatres, flicked a speck of imaginary dust off his spotless white jacket and sighed comfortably: "The hell with the long trek north this year," he reflected. I'll spend the summer with Pat McGee's cooling plants. I'd be a sucker to miss the big shows coming along."

Everyone around the theatres knows little Pete. You'll see him on the marquees, in the newspaper ads, on the screens . . . always cool, fresh and on his toes. When you see Pete you know there is a good show with cool surroundings.

And his tip about the big shows coming up is right from the feed box. He pestered Frank McCabe, the best dressed booker in the southwest, until he got advance information. Here is Pete's special slate for this month:

"ESCAPADE" another of those big lavish Metro hits with suave Bill Powell as an artist painting ladies in the altogether. A new eyeful Luise Rainer and Frank Morgan are included in the cast.

"ACCENT ON YOUTH" the New York comedy stage success with Sylvia Sidney and Herbert Marshall. This one is tops.

"BROADWAY GONDALIER" in which Dick Powell and Joan Blondell team together for a musical smash. Our chips are in on this Warner Bros. hit.

"OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA" the novel that swept the country and one that Mervyn LeRoy has whipped into a crack dramatic offering.

"STRANDED" with sleek Kay Francis making love to George Brent, the big he-man bridge builder.

"CURLY TOP" which is Shirley Temple's newest bit of joy, with John Boles and Rochelle Hudson as her playmates.

"Pete the Penguin" Is Cooling Emblem

"Pete the Penguin" is the official cooling emblem of the Standard Theatres Corp. and is used in all types of advertising to identify this trademark with cool atmosphere in the houses. All trailers, valances, newspaper ads, billboards, etc. are checkmarked with this penguin and above is reproduced ad from house organ showing how the bird is used to sell comfort and coming shows.

Cartoon Shows and Serials Click Big in Okla. City

George Henger reports that the cartoon show is very big in Oklahoma City in detailing super-cartoon revue put on by Manager Paul Ketchum, of the Victoria Theatre. Paul gave 'em six shorts in addition to a Joe E. Brown feature relying on heralds and tieups only, drew enough youngsters the opening morning to fill his house over again.

Manager Jimmy Adams of the Folly, in Oklahoma City is another specializer in kid shows, says Henger, this showman blocking traffic with the youngsters who overflowed his house on a recent campaign in advance of a new serial opening.

Corkery Plans Various Stunts for Kiddie Trade

In an effort to encourage children attendance during the summer, Maurice Corkery, Central Square Theatre, Cambridge, Mass., has put on a series of stunts, one of which is a kiddie amateur show in which donated prizes are awarded finalists.

Each Saturday ushers present to the best behaved boys and girls throughout entire performance cards which entitle them to a bottle of pop in lobby at end of picture. Maurice says this makes a hit with the adults, because the kids are all on their good behavior in hope of getting one of the cards.

As children leave theatre each Saturday they are presented with lucky number heralds which they are to retain and watch the following week for posted corresponding numbers at the boxoffice.

Lucky holders entitled to free admission.

Lands Kentucky Colonelcy For Essay Contest Winner

The promotion of a colonel's commission from the Governor of Kentucky as a prize for the girl winner of his "Little Colonel" essay contest on that date at the Skouras Forest Hills Theatre, in Forest Hills, Long Island, was the feature of the excellent campaign put on by Major Adolfo Caruso, manager.

Contest was limited to children up to 14, and the essays were written around the subject, "The Little Colonel and the Beauties of Kentucky." First prize for the boy winner was an honorary colonelcy in the local American Legion post, which also awarded loving cup to girl and to top the stunt a city-wide parade was held before the presentation of the prizes in which all contestants participated. The newsreels took shots of this street celebration.

Guest at the ceremonies was Judge Hylan, former mayor of New York, who made the presentation and taking part in the parade were the Legionnaires, Naval Militia, boy and girl Scouts, U. S. reserve officer corps and others in uniform.

Thousands of four-page pamphlets with the rules of the contest and theatre plugs were distributed in every local and nearby school, cost covered by merchant ads on back page. Caruso spoke from the stage at every show for a week ahead, drummed up interest among woman's lunch and other civic clubs. Stunt was played up big in the local press and also landed in the New York papers.

Another smart idea was Caruso's "pink party" to celebrate Shirley's birthday, for which was promoted huge birthday cake (see photo), candy, colored photos of Temple, buttons, etc., and copies of the book for the ten best dressed children at the party.

These tieins, together with a special "Kentucky Night" for locally resident natives of that state and holders of Kentucky Colonelcies, were the highlights at Caruso's third-run spot, the entire campaign, he reports, not going over his very modest advertising budget.

Through tieup, Roscoe received spot announcements on air and mention in radio program ads.

Bookmarks were placed in public library branches and scene stills together with picture copy planted on swinging easel (see photo). Imprinted bags containing confection were distributed in Y. M. and Y. W. cafeterias as well as cigar stores. Superintendent of schools cooperated by posting notices on bulletin boards calling attention to date.

Parker Plants Tank In Militia Parade

Promoting himself into the parade staged by local units of the Canadian Militia, Harold Parker, Majestic Theatre, Yarmouth, N. S., planted a bannered tank in the procession as his street bally on "Lest We Forget." Band marched to theatre, where they were guested.

Front was dressed to represent trench scene with dummy in uniform sprawled over machine gun on top of parapet. Units of militia supplied soldiers for ushers and sentries with fixed bayonets to do guard duty under marquee.

Store adjacent to theatre contained display of machine guns, tear gas bombs, etc.

Capone's Car Helps Sell "G Men" for Nichols

Centering his campaign around the Al Capone car, Don Nichols, Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., for his "G Men" date in all his ads plugged the fact that the car was on display in front of his house. Accompanying photo shows crowd taking a "looksee." Car carried man who lectured on gangsters, mentioning the picture.

Tying in with the local May Day college celebration, Don prepared a five-minute short of the exercises which was shown at the theatre, thereby gaining extra business from students who attended en masse. Entire new front was constructed with large Cagney cutouts at either side of box office.

Governor and Mayor Help "Sharp" Drive

Official proclamation by the Mayor of Springfield, Ill., designating the week during which the picture played as "Becky Sharp Week" was one of the top stunts put across by Manager Ralph Lawler for the date on that attraction at the Orpheum Theatre. The thought that color in pictures would increase theatre attendance and thus stimulate business locally as well as nationally was Lawler's angle that sold His Honor, the story making the papers of course and used in lobby and other advertising.

Out of the ordinary also was a sweet editorial on the coming of color, picture, theatre and date being mentioned and another smart newspaper flash was an extra edition of one of the papers with front page eight-column banner in red announcing the picture plus two columns full of publicity and cut of Hopkins. These hit the streets the day ahead with newsies shouting "extra."

Special ads were run away from the amusement page and a wire angle was used by Lawler in which he published as ads, copies of wires from Radio district chief Walter Branson and Lawler's answers that had to do with an "argument" on raising prices. Ad read "Read the facts but bear in mind there will be no advance in prices."

Other praise opinions were secured from the Governor and state officials, these used on a radio program. Special screenings were held two weeks before and ahead of the trailer announcements were made over the house p. a., with lights out and traveler closed, to the effect that patrons were about to see scenes from most important picture since "Jazz Singer."

Street stuff included giant float, special electric signs, tabloids, "while you were out" giveaways, smash front and shields (see photo) on both sides of city lamp-posts within three blocks of theatre. Opening was "hollywood" with radio broadcast from lobby and a raft of other good ideas made this campaign that won the July Bronze.

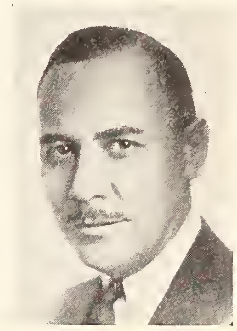
AN EXPRESSION FROM TEXAS

The laddies in the field are still having their say on the subject of why tieups flop, touched off some time ago in these pages by Floyd Bell. Recently Johnny McManus, of Kansas City, blamed some of it on the operations of the field exploiteers, and in reply Ed Beck speaks up. As an old time field exploiteer, editor and doctor of sick theatres, before settling in Texas, Ed bases his opinions on his experience in the field.—A-MIKE.

Dear Mike:

As you know I am not a very hefty correspondent, but I do want to take time out to express myself over the storm of pros and cons occasioned by Floyd Bell's excellent article on exploitation. Most of the boys have their own ideas in the matter and with many of the thoughts expressed I am heartily in accord. But I am roused to grab my portable Noiseless for a few words after reading John McManus' article in the issue of July 20.



N. EDWARD BECK

Mr. McManus puts the field publicity men on the griddle and perhaps, from his own experiences with tyros, rightfully so. But as a graduate from road jobs to that of a manager I take exception to the statement that a field man getting into a town infrequently and covering a large territory, does a shabby job. If that is true what about the circus press agents, (one of my earlier jobs) who get into town in the morning and leave the same day and yet who usually manage to make the dailies with much better results than most local managers and who on top of that make commercial tie-ups of various degrees. And those boys come back year after year and are always welcome.

Exploiteers Lack Vision?

I have promoted and given away in a single month as much as $20,000.00 worth of merchandise (at the Alabama in Birmingham week before Christmas 1931) and conducted tie-ups galore with merchants and manufacturers all over the country and have yet to get a kick-back. The reason I presume, has been because I have always tried to give the other fellow a decent break. Certainly I have always done as much (or more) as I promised I would.

One of the troubles with merchants' tie-ups has always been a lack of vision on the exploiteer's part, whether manager or publicity man, field or local, as to how to fit their contacts into a campaign. As an illustration I recall while District Publicity Director for Publix in Atlanta, receiving instructions from my Division Manager to make a candy tie-up for a bar of candy to be put out as exploitation for "Vagabond King." In Atlanta this was a difficult thing to do as there were no national manufacturers there. However, after a tough battle a local manufacturer was sold on the idea but only after I promised my aid in selling his bar to the key cities in which the picture opened; not only in my own territory but throughout the country. I didn't lie to the man. I did everything I said I would. And through the efforts of the various managers opening the picture, we sold more than 50,000 bars of the candy. The Vagabond King bar is still on the market, selling well, and the manufacturer was so hot over the picture tie-up, he made a special trip to New York to try to make a deal to put out about six bars a year with Paramount pictures.

In line with Bell's article I'll agree with him that many an exploiteer would have gotten the candy man in the hole, had him put out his bar (the wrapper would look swell in any campaign book sent to the H. O.) and let it go at that. And also agreeing with Bell, that type of tie-up won't get it, for the simple reason that you'll soon run out of suckers and then your promises to advertisers and others won't mean a thing.

Stresses Enthusiasm

The greatest value of tie-up exploitation, in my opinion, outside of saving the cost of something you want to give away, lies in the degree of enthusiasm you leave your merchant. If he's really sold, if he thinks he's getting a fair break, he'll go out of his way to boost your picture, your theatre and you simply because you've made him and his business part of what you're doing.

After all this show business is nothing but merchandising under another name. It takes good thoughtful newspaper advertising plus proper fronts and coming displays plus sensible exploitation which has for it's backbone a hot idea truthfully and honestly sold to your local merchant.

Get all you can from the other fellow, yes! But remember a deal which doesn't pay dividends both ways, to exhibitor and merchant will kick back just as sure as fate. Yours for bigger grosses.—N. Edward Beck, Manager, Hollywood Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas.

Lund's First Aid Station Sells "Frankenstein"

Gag emergency first aid booth was erected in the lobby of the Washington Theatre, Chester, Pa., by Jesse C. Lund for his "Bride of Frankenstein" date. Booth was divided into compartments in each of which was, for instance, a candle for those afraid to go home in the dark after seeing picture; hair dye for those whose locks turned white; set of false teeth for those who swallowed their own and nice bottle of "stickum" for the timid whose hair stood on end.

For his advance, Jesse promoted from Navy shipyard a crude looking post attached to which were heavy chains; this was planted in front of box office with "the monster is loose" copy.

Nat Silver's Temple Setpiece

Circus Works with Silver On "Our Little Girl"

The arrival in town of a circus while Nat Silver at the Strand in Lowell, Mass., was playing "Our Little Girl" was sufficient reason for a tiein particularly since the circus featured Poodles Hannaford who appears in the picture with Shirley Temple. Opening day of circus Poodles appeared at hospital to entertain kiddies, photos were taken and run in papers together with stories tying in the clown with picture at the Strand. At main entrance to circus, Nat planted a large scene still of Hanneford and the starlet.

Accompanying photo shows attractive lobby setpiece used three weeks in advance tieup with five and ten brought attractive window display with photos of Shirley.

Selette's Imprinted Bags

YOU ARE INVITED TO JOIN UP

is the manager and owner of the Movie-Tone Circuit Company in Great Falls, Mont., and since he joins the Club he doubtless has considerable interest in its activities, hence we feel that it is only fair for him to respond by sending along exploitation and publicity stunts put over at his theatres. Can we count on you, Evans?

down in Bethlehem, Pa., managing the College Theatre, comes from a town well represented with Club members. It's been some time since we've heard from you, Hal, and that's not doing right by Nell. Bethlehem is a very busy town and there must be plenty of stunts being put over that are well worth recording in this section.

manages the Hamlin Theatre in Chicago, Ill. If you've been following our pages closely, Emil, you are aware of the great number of contributors we have from Chicago, so we're glad to add your name to the list with the hope that another active Round Tabler has been started on the way.

out in Eldorado, Okla., manages the Rex Theatre and tells us that he has spent 12 years as a projectionist and six as a display man. Larry has been at the Rex for the past year and a half and is a Mason. He said he joined show business because he thought it a lazy man's life, but he found out differently.

is down in Roanoke, Va., managing the Grandin Theatre. We are quite familiar with your town, Jordan, and since it's been some time since we've heard anything from there, we're going to depend on you for reports on publicity and exploitation activities. That ought to be no hardship, so get busy and let's hear from you.

manages the Variety in Cleveland, Ohio, having started as usher at the RKO Palace there under Frank Hines. Transferred to the Hippodrome as doorman under Al Beckerich, who was sent to the RKO house in Akron and took Frank along as backstage doorman. In 1931 went with Warners as chief at the Lake, then assistant of the Variety and now we find him at his present post.

after many years as an exhibitor, Garvin has become manager of the Portland office of Principal Pictures. He was also city manager at Hastings, Neb., until last fall when he went to the coast. We agree thoroughly with Garvin when he says it is difficult to estimate the value of this interchange of ideas, but he knows it is one of the greatest exhibitor helps available and we're sure we are all in accord with his sentiments.

KARLOFF
BRIDE of FRANKENSTEIN
CLIVE · VALERIE HOBSON · ELSA LANCHESTER

Above poster display on "Bride of Frankenstein" comes from Anna Bell Ward, Assistant General Manager Phoenix Amusement Co., Lexington, Ky., and her able assistant J. D. Ensminger.

HAROLD TURNER
is down in Marksville, La., managing the Bailey Theatre and broke into showbusiness at a tender age rewinding reels for his brother-in-law, who was an operator. The first house Turner worked in was the old Dixie Nickelodeon in Palestine, Tex., where they ran illustrated song reels and ladies were asked to remove their hats.

BREWSTER LE ROY NEWTON
manages the Colonial Theatre in Belfast, Maine, for the Graphic Theatres Circuit. Newton has only been in showbusiness a short while and was with the Boston University Bureau of Publicity for about a year. He is a Boston University grad and a Chi Sigma Chi man.

MARVIN E. SAMUELSON manages Warner's Columbia Theatre in Portsmouth, Ohio, having started as assistant manager of the Uptown and Hippodrome Theatres in Cleveland, before being promoted to his present assignment. The Warner Cleveland boys are with us about 100 per cent, Marvin, as you doubtless know, so get aboard the bandwagon and letta come.

is the manager of the Far-Tex Theatre in Garland, Texas. That's a far piece from Club headquarters, Al, but not too far, we hope, for you to keep Garland represented on the pages. Texas as a state is very show-minded and it will be up to you to bear the torch for Garland.

is managing the Strand Theatre in Altoona, Pa., having replaced R. H. Page, former member. Dave started as usher at Warner's Cathum Theatre while a student at Penn State and liked show business so well that he continued after graduation rather than go to law school as originally planned. Before coming to the Strand, Dave was at the Park in Johnstown, Pa.

can be found managing the Norris Theatre in Coal Creek, Tenn. You're the first Round Tabler to join up from your city, Leon, so you'd better get the old Underwood oiled up and start sending in accounts of how things are done down your way.

GEORGE N. PHILLIPS
acts as assistant manager of the Riviera Theatre, Chicago, Ill., and is recommended by his superior, Ralph A. Wettstein. George began as usher at the Avalon; usher, ticket taker, doorman at the Chicago. Chief of Service at the Uptown and then to the Riviera in his present position.

is the manager-owner of the Rialto Theatre in Freer, Texas, and looking at it from both sides of the fence as sort of employer-employee, you ought to be able to write an interesting article for us on your experiences around the theatre. Can we count on you, Van?

isn't the first member to "jine" up with us from Parsons, Kan., where he manages the Uptown Theatre. Our good friend, Lester Dollinson, hails from there, too. Do you know him, Smith? Why not drop in on him, say hello and convey our regards. A little competition from the two of you would be appreciated.

manages the Fox Lyric Theatre in Huntington Park, Cal. Do you know our good friend, Ben Wallerstein at the Huntington Park? He's quite active and frequently contributes to these pages. How come haven't we heard from you, John? Maybe we'll have to get after Ben to get you started sending stuff in to us.

—Now read the N. Y. American for the reason Broadway is roaring its head off at the Strand!

Songs, dances and witty sayings, all by Mrs. Brown's big-mouthed boy Joe, fill the Strand screen with first-rate fun that will add to Mr. Brown's prestige as a star comic, and likewise to the patronage of the theatres whose marquees and screens are decorated by 'Bright Lights'. It is, quite definitely, Joe E.'s most important vehicle, and provides the Warner clown with any number of opportunities to display both versatility and virtuosity as an entertainer. The settings, the songs are all that can be desired, and the constant center-staging of the star, clowning, singing, dancing and romancing gives the picture plenty of the Brown brand of entertainment, which is just what his customers order. He is the top and his romping antics stand out through every sequence. But credit, too, to Miss Dvorak and Miss Ellis. 'Bright Lights' is probably the best direction thus far contributed by Busby Berkeley. He has pointed his story for laughs, his dramatic scenes ring true, and the entire atmosphere of the piece is realistically established and maintained.

UNCLE SAM PRESENTS

SPLENDID exemplification of the processes and progress of the current American Revolution is being afforded by the New Deal invasion of the amusement industry through the drama unit of the Works Progress Administration.

Now operating most conspicuously in the New York metropolitan sector, on a basis of $1,000,000 a year, with its program of free shows, plans are being announced to treble expenditures and activities and spread the performances across the nation.

Colonel Earle Boothe, manager of the drama unit, is quoted as expecting that the Federal authorities will presently permit the addition of some two thousand persons to his present payroll of 1,000 which includes some 450 actors in a repertoire of forty-nine plays. The free shows are being given at 500 places in New York regularly and, in addition, 250 CCC camps are being served in seven states.

Meanwhile, according to the New York Times, Professor Hallie Flanagan of Vassar's experimental theatre, appointed to coordinate all relief theatre projects, is said to be considering inclusion of the New York unit in a nation-wide organization of ten regional units, "designed to revive interest in the drama on a national scale and bring back the road."

It seems that the plan anticipates that it would give employment to a total of 50,000 persons, of whom 17,000 would be actors, and "the government would get back at least a part of its investment in taxes on theatre tickets at such time as the work would be taken off relief and put on a paying basis."

The discussions of the spokesmen of the PWA project have not taken in yet any explanation of what might be deemed to be the rights of the existing amusement industry, what might be the consequences to employment in this existing amusement industry, or related considerations.

Meanwhile the motion picture exhibitor is expected to be a loyal, willing and eager supporter of government and the administration and to pay his taxes of all sorts promptly.

The same oracles of policy who plough under cotton and corn and slaughter the pigs, would now open a road show in competition with every theatre.

DIET AND DECIBELS

AFTER exhaustive research the psychological laboratory of Colgate University, reporting through Dr. Donald A. Laird, director, discovers that a heavy meal dulls the hearing by something like seven decibels. One decibel, as every sound technician knows, is just enough sound to be perceptible. Seven decibels is amply audible and seventy is a positive din. The Colgate findings may be taken to suggest that the gain control should be turned up after the matinee, farther up after Thursday's corn beef and cabbage than after Friday's fish, and way up after mid-day Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Years.

"TAXATION without representation is tyranny," cried a patriot of the long ago. Currently it would appear that we are threatened with a situation created by too much representation without taxation. The property laws of the nation appear to be in the process of being made to please those who have not taken advantage of opportunity to accumulate any.

Once upon a time the franchise in this land was limited to those who had a certain minimum of property. It was not at all difficult for the common man to win the right to vote, but he was not born with it. He had to be something more than a statistical incident in the census before he was a voice in government. He had to be interested in something besides himself, the commonwealth, before he was declared a part of the management.

We are reminded by today's trends of an interview with a very old Cree Indian, with whom we sat on the end of a log over a trout pool up above Lake Nipissing one summer's afternoon some years ago. He was talking about the hard and hungry winter that had gone before the lush season we were enjoying.

"Why," we asked, "don't you dry a lot of berries, smoke a lot of fish and pack away some pemmican, now that things are easy?"

"If I did," replied the weathered old Cree, "all these damn Indian relatives would come in an eat it up—and I'd be hungry anyway—so I'd better not work."

CENSORSHIP?

"CENSORSHIP is the chief bane of Hollywood's existence," is the opening sentence of an interview with Mr. Henry Wilcoxon, English actor, on from Hollywood to attend the premiere of "The Crusades" in which he conspicuously appears.

It had been our impression, before Mr. Wilcoxon spoke, that censorship had become very much less a problem since the industry began to observe the Production Code, under the attentions of its own Production Code Administration.

Of course it just could not be possible that Mr. Wilcoxon could be confusing the industry's self-regulation with censorship. British precision of utterance would forbid that.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Red Dictation

"Class warfare," the Communists' fight against all who disagree with them—whom they term Fascists—and the anti-war crusades of pacifists are being carried to the motion picture theatre.

The "war" has already started in several centers in a militant "united front" mobilization on the part of the American League Against War and Fascism, claiming 2,500,000 members, including Communists and other leftists.

Clarence A. Hathaway, a leader of the Communist Party, frankly admitted this week "the war is on," against all films anti-labor, pro-war or Fascist in tendency.

There are many ramifications to the hostilities, and all are related in the account starting on page 13.

Buying Concentration

Solidification of independents into a national buying power to combat the circuits is one of six planks in a platform explained by Abram F. Myers, of Allied, at the annual convention of the New Jersey unit in Atlantic City this week. The meeting was the signal for a gathering of national Allied bellwethers.

Another aim of Allied's platform is "the securing of judicial information and vindication of exhibitors' rights in the matter of chain expansion." The independents would also foster the growth of new sources of product to "reestablish competition" in selling. Other details of the meeting will be found on page 15.

Big Reel Costs

An immediate expense estimated at $1,350,000 is cited by some distributors, principally Universal, as sufficient reason why the Academy's proposed changeover on January 1, 1936 from the present 1,000-foot reel standard to a 2,000-foot reel should not be adopted. There are wide differences between both sides over the benefits advanced for the changeover. The claims and counter claims of both are set forth on page 33.

"Too Free Press"

Not so long ago there was an article in MOTION PICTURE HERALD about how a Detroit publisher decided that he would eliminate some Hollywood correspondence that did not seem so very constructively in sympathy with some local enterprises, motion picture theatres. Whereupon Editor & Publisher, a journal of the newspaper trade, ordered and printed an article calculated to indicate that the motion picture industry was trying to throttle the press.

Now we have a discussion of the matter, with some ventilation of motivations and considerable exposition of facts from Martin Quigley, publisher of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Also there is considerable quotation from the piece which Malcolm Bingay, of the Detroit Free Press wrote to the Editor & Publisher, declaring for his rights as a publisher and those of the motion picture as merchandise. See page 16.

Very Sirovich!

Many a Congressional legislator has made many a unique proposal to investigate one or another division of the motion picture business, but never in the history of silent or sound screen entertainment has anyone in Congress, or elsewhere, outlined such an all-embracing probe as that demanded at Washington late last week by Congressman Sirovich, New York.

The Congressman would have his own committee look into every conceivable phase of production, distribution and exhibition, financing, speculation, bankruptcy and reorganization, trade practices, stocks, financial structures, stockholders' rights, debts, creditors, banking affiliations, product quality and morality, advertisements, "glorification of crime" in pictures and the relation of films to the public, sales of both theatres and films, commercial operations, realty, apparatus and methods of sound, industry ownership and royalty arrangements, salaries, capital structures, taxation, film "propaganda," the influence of films on public opinion and whatnot. Nine pages were required to ennumerate the investigating ambitions of the Congressman. They are highlighted on page 50.

Fox Merger Waits

The Twentieth Century-Fox Film merger was still delayed this week as stockholders and officers daily awaited word from Justice Alonzo G. McLaughlin in the New York Supreme Court on the petition of Mrs. Eva Fox and her All-Continent Corporation for a permanent injunction.

Justice McLaughlin granted a temporary restrainer last Thursday as stockholders were approving the terms of the merger and the recapitalization.

"We earn it," replied Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, to stockholders who questioned the compensation of the chief executives in the fusion. See page 40.

The Ascaping

The headaches of ASCAP in its fight with public performers of the music of its members are becoming more intensified, the Society's officials viewing court and legislative attacks of the past few days as the work of a combination of the "unholy three" of radio, motion picture and hotel interests. And they expect further attacks to follow those fought unsuccessfully in the states of Washington, Wisconsin, Louisiana and Georgia, as described on page 51.

Equity Pleads

Evidently having in mind the threatened future of its working members, Actors' Equity Association is pleading with the motion picture and radio to "have mercy" on the stage in the competitive encounter to bring entertainment to the public.

Striking a new note, Equity asks both films and radio to "cooperate—not compete" with the stage, pointing out that the legitimate drama is the basic source of talent material, and as the drama suffers so shall that source. It would be well, therefore, Equity believes, for Hollywood producers to encourage the progress of the stage and not to stifle it. Too, they should send their screen players to the stage on occasion for training.

Equity belittles the ability of Hollywood to develop talent, charging that the industry "is not equipped, probably never will be" to bring out acting, writing and directing capabilities. Equity's position is further explained on page 59.

Arrests Bring Tests

Wholesale arrests of exhibitors in New York for operating "Bank Nights" and other chance games as box office stimulants this week brought the issue in the east near its first court test. By agreement with License Commissioner Paul Moss, of New York, and those interested in chance games, including exhibitors and franchisers, the legality of the stunts will be tested in municipal courts next week in all five boroughs, following 25 arrests.

Chance games continued during the week to occupy nationwide attention in exhibition. In Cleveland the court of appeals set August 26th as the date for the hearing of the prolonged Bank Night fight in that territory. Judge Frederick Walther had denied a petition for an injunction against the game.

On Monday a new version of Bank Night, called "Payoff," appeared in Cleveland. It employs a signed coupon system instead of a book registration.

Chicago police were in the midst of a citywide "war" against chance games, now used in 200 local theatres. Cincinnati and the county both barred "Screeno," on lottery grounds, while North Dakota was prosecuting a test Bank Night case.

"Boy—Copy!"

Twenty-and-odd years ago a bright young office boy in the Chicago Hearst offices began to hang around the late Nathan Meissler's darkrooms and wonder at the adventure stories of the news-photographers. Before long he laid hands on a camera. In the years between he has been living on Romance Road, a playmate of kings and peasants, a decorated hero of the World War and some wars not so amply recorded, a figure in the strange, bizarre politics of Asia, and still a newsreel photographer—Captain Ariel Varges, sometimes just Varges, a daring, delivering swashbuckler of the camera. This week he landed at Djibouti and entrained for Addis Ababa. Five years ago he was there on a lion hunting expedition with the Emperor. He'll be shooting for Hearst Metrotone News.

British Child Stars

British producers, seeing a danger that Hollywood will take its better child players, seek revision of the Young Persons Act of 1933, which prohibits the employment of children under 12, and includes the motion picture, although the radio and the stage are not affected. An amending act is being drafted for introduction into the House of Commons in the fall.

Directors of Baird Television, Ltd., have instituted control of the sale of shares in the company outside Great Britain. It is aimed at the control of transfers executed in the United States, particularly, writes Bruce Allan, the Herald's London correspondent. The story is on page 60.

Bill Rogers

The tragic ending of the unique career of Bill Rogers brings a shock that will be sorely felt by a legion of his friends throughout the industry. Rogers was a distinctive and memorable personality, utterly unaffected, making no pretense at any time or place to being other than just Bill Rogers. From the plains of Oklahoma to the principal capitals of the world he left a trail of homespun humor and good natured raillery that brightened the way for those who followed him.

A vast public who knew him through the screen will feel a personal loss. But short as has been his career it has been notable in many ways, including the fact that at its end it justifies the tribute that, while he attained a high degree of eminence in his profession and great rewards, yet, in return, he gave to the world a far greater measure in wholesome fun and entertainment.

—MARTIN QUIGLEY

The story of Will Rogers is on page 45.

Independents Glad

Independents this week were cheered by two developments—Warners set a precedent by selling away from RKO to an independent circuit in New York, and United Artists announced it would not engage in franchise deals when current ones expire.

Warners' threat to sell to independents, made in unsuccessful attempts to negotiate a deal with RKO, materialized when A. W. Smith, Jr., distribution executive, sold the entire line-up of product to the Century Circuit. This places Century in the same first run level as Loew's and RKO in Long Island and Brooklyn, and culminates a fight A. H. Schwartz, head of the circuit, has been conducting for years to obtain major product in opposition to the large circuits.

Century plans to change policies throughout the circuit—admissions will be increased, some double feature houses will go to single bills, and five of its 30 houses will adopt a policy of week runs, and at others less frequent changes will be made.

Century has been fighting RKO theatres over clearance matters, since a mutual booking and buying arrangement was abandoned, and lately pooled with Skouras on Long Island.

RKO recently also lost Paramount product when it canceled its franchise for half of the output, and Paramount sold to Loew's.

Free Will Zones

Efforts being expended in the field to effect voluntary clearance and zoning schedules along lines intended by the industry's NRA code this week brought the problem to the discussion stage in Cincinnati, and in Kansas City a committee of independents finally presented to distributors a clearance schedule petition.

Kansas City exchange managers are expected to forward the schedule immediately to home offices in New York.

Cincinnati independents created the nucleus of a permanent organization at a meeting out of which came tentative plans for getting together with large first runs and distributors on a clearance schedule that would be more equitable to subsequent runs.

All but two independent suburban owners in Kansas City signed the petition for a schedule in that city. Both were out of town. They are Jay Means, of the Oak Park and Bagdad, president of the ITO, and J. F. Rigney, of the Westport.

Some Kansas City exchange managers, it is understood, have expressed the opinion that independents were wise in working out a schedule before buying for the new season's product had started, especially in view of its 100 per cent backing by independent suburbans. Distributors have, heretofore, had occasion to point out to independents the ineffectiveness of presenting a plan.

The proposed clearance schedule is very similar to one in use for two or three years before NRA, except that giveaways are penalized—with singles, 28 days behind regular spot; with doubles, 56 days behind.

Taxes Pay

Indication of the extent of box office betterment is seen in the Internal Revenue Department's report of $1,276,914 in collections from admission taxes for July, when receipts were $230,752 more than the $1,046,162 collected in the same month last year.

Six months collections from February through July were $437,734 above the same 1934 period, running $7,479,178, against $7,041,444.

COMMUNISTS, PACIFISTS DECLARE WAR ON FILMS

Militant and Well-Organized Movement Effected to Incite 2,500,000 Persons to Attack on American Pictures Thought Contrary to Their Ideas; Start Picketing Theatres; Government Investigating

BILLS WOULD CURB RED ACTIVITY

Reds' agitation in connection with motion pictures and radical activity generally would be curbed by the Russell-Kramer "sedition" bill pending in the Senate. It would impose a $500 fine or five years' imprisonment or both for advocating overthrow of the government. Representative Charles Kramer of Los Angeles is the House co-author of the bill.

Congressional proponents are driving to secure action on the measure before adjournment, and in any event early next session.

Another blow to Reds would be dealt in the Tydings-McCormack bill, which has passed the Senate and awaits House action. Inciting disloyalty in the Army and Navy would be a felony punishable by two years' imprisonment or a fine of $2,000 or both.

Widely supported by patriotic, veteran and government groups, both bills are being fought by radicals.

Communists and pacifists have declared war on the motion picture industry! The Communist Party, U. S. A., which is directly responsible to Moscow, is inciting 2,500,000 persons to an attack on American films. The "war" has taken the form of riots and disturbances, intimidation and widespread agitation. It became intensified this week with calls in the Red press to increased militant boycott and demonstrations at theatres.

Having its inception in a boycott of Hearst publications because of William Randolph Hearst's campaign against subversive elements, the Reds' attack has spread to Hearst Metrotone News and Hearst-owned Cosmopolitan Pictures, and more recently has been extended to all films which the Communists and their allies consider contrary to their political and economic ideas.

A nationwide boycott has been declared against a list of current and forthcoming pictures described by the Communists as "anti-labor."

As in Soviet Russia and other dictator countries in Europe, the Reds regard the screen as an instrument of political propaganda. They attack all films in which they detect or suspect anything even remotely inconsistent with their own political doctrines. They regard the American film industry as their collective "enemy."

Under Communist instigation, the American League Against War and Fascism and some 200 national organizations and thousands of local groups have formed a "united front."

The movement includes in its ranks labor unions, churches, peace societies, student leagues, college professors, ministers and others.

Attack Chiefly Communist

While directed by and centered in the American League Against War and Fascism and its local units, the attack on the industry is predominantly of a Communist character, an investigation discloses. In New York, where the League is particularly strong, many of its members are avowed Reds.

The movement is militant and organized with machine-like efficiency. Concentrated for the present in the large industrial centers, it is being extended into a network of "groups for action," with trained agitators at their head.

In recent weeks the chief targets have been the theatres showing Hearst Metrotone News—in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, New Haven and other cities, and in college towns in the East. The American League Against War and Fascism claims the movement is strong also on the West Coast, particularly around Hollywood.

Fighting back, the Loew circuit in Greater New York and the Hearst interests are cooperating with the authorities to stamp out the menace.

Approximately 25 anti-Hearst pickets at theatres have been sentenced in the New York courts in the last three months, according to the City Committee of the American League Against War and Fascism.

Convicted of making a demonstration on July 21 against Hearst Metrotone News at Loew's Oriental in Brooklyn, three were sentenced to jail and, after serving two days, were released on payment of fines.

The defendants and their sentences, as reported by the New York Times, were: Miss Edith Ohl, a member of the Young Peoples' Socialist League, $50 fine or 30 days in jail; Miss Helen Shaw, a member of the anti-Fascist League, $25 fine or 15 days in jail, and Nat Kahn, $25 fine or 15 days in jail.

A jail sentence was imposed on a picket in another disturbance within the last week. His name was not available. A considerable number of demonstrators have been freed or have received suspended sentences. Attorneys for the International Labor Defense usually appear for the agitators. A number of cases are pending in the courts.

Government Reported "Interested"

The United States government is reported as "extremely interested" in the Red agitation and is directing a quiet investigation of the entire movement. In New York City, the police Radical Squad, under the direction of Captain Thomas F. Dugan, has the situation in hand. Private investigators also are active.

Stiff jail sentences for those responsible for disorderly picketing and demonstrations in front of the theatres may end the campaign.

Attacks on theatres presenting films which the radicals describe as "anti-labor" or "militaristic" in content have been sporadic in various cities over a period of a year or more. Only recently has the campaign assumed a "united front" of Red and pacifist groups.

That the campaign embraces the entire American motion picture industry is evident in the columns of the Daily Worker, described in its masthead as "central organ, Communist Party, U. S. A. (Section of Communist International.)"

Under the caption "Anti-Labor Movie List," the Daily Worker on August 9 published the following:

"In view of the increasing number of anti-labor films coming out of Hollywood, the Daily Worker will publish from time to time a list of anti-labor and pro-war films and their scheduled dates of release. Organizations are urged to take prompt measures to prevent the appearance in neighborhood movie houses of the current anti-working class films mentioned in the list, as well as to send protests to the producers in Hollywood to help defer or stop production of some of the forthcoming ones."

The films to be boycotted are listed as follows:

Hearst Metrotone Newsreel		(Current)
Black Fury	Warner Bros.	(Current)
Stranded	Warner (Hearst)	(Current)
Oil for the Lamps of China	Warner (Hearst)	(Current)
Classmates Forever	Warner (Hearst)	(Current)
San Quentin	Warner Bros.	(Coming)
Special Agent	Warner (Hearst)	(Coming)

Red Salute	United Artists	(Sept. 13)
Annapolis Farewell	Paramount	(Aug. 23)
From Little Acorns	Paramount	(Coming)
Professional Soldier	MGM	(Coming)

The pictures credited to Hearst are, of course, Cosmopolitan productions, with the exception of "Stranded," which is not a Cosmopolitan film.

Party Is Prime Mover

The Communist Party, U. S. A., which is under the direction of the Soviet-controlled Third Internationale, this week said through an official spokesman that it is the prime mover in the attack on the motion picture industry. At the same time it was related, somewhat boastfully, the extent to which the Communists have been able to instigate certain groups into an unwitting alliance.

A request to Communist Party headquarters for a statement was referred to Clarence A. Hathaway, editor-in-chief of the Daily Worker and a member of the Central Committee of the party, of which William Z. Foster, now attending the Communist International Congress in Moscow, is the president. Mr. Hathaway also is a member of the National Executive Committee of the American League Against War and Fascism. His affiliations would appear to qualify him as spokesman for both organizations.

COMMUNISTS DECLARE WAR ON FILMS

Interviewed in his office on the eighth floor of a loft-like nine-story building which is headquarters for American Communism, at 35 East 12th Street, New York City, Mr. Hathaway said:

"What Hollywood is not conscious of is that groups that in the past have been passive with respect to anti-labor and Fascist tendencies in motion pictures, today are coming together in organizations that are much more able to stop these things.

Includes 200 Organizations

"The movement numbers 2,500,000 persons affiliated with 200 national organizations. That is the direct and supporting membership of the American League Against War and Fascism. The local and regional groups run into the thousands.

"Included are the 30,000 members of the Communist Party and 150,000 persons who have accepted Communist beliefs, but who are not members of the party.

"We have also with us pacifist groups, trade unions, student leagues at a number of colleges, and many others.

"In no sense can these be characterized as Communists. They are coming to realize that Fascism is the enemy of democracy everywhere. They have seen what has taken place in Italy and Germany and their aim is to block Fascism. We fight William Randolph Hearst as the arch-Fascist in America and as Hitler's ally. We also fight Huey Long, and Father Coughlin, who, with Hearst, compose the triumvirate of Fascist leadership in the United States.

"We hope that in our work with these groups they will accept the correctness of our ideas and will choose Communism in preference to Hearst."

"What logical basis have the Communists for believing that the motion picture industry is anti-labor and pro-war?" Mr. Hathaway was asked. He replied:

Calls Industry Capitalist

"The motion picture industry is primarily capitalist. Invariably the movie magnates are hooked up with the biggest banks and the biggest corporations and they must necessarily have a viewpoint opposed to ours. Their only aim is profits."

And then came this threat: "We will fight all films that are anti-labor, pro-war or Fascist.

"Means will be devised by those protesting to register their disapproval. This will consist of picketing of theatres, demonstrations inside and outside the theatres, and boycott."

It was explained to Mr. Hathaway that the screen for business reasons cannot afford to be political, and that the exhibitor is not a political progagandist, yet he was being penalized.

"We bring pressure to bear on the exhibitors to eliminate films which we oppose," he said. "The exhibitors should bring pressure to bear on the distributors, and the distributors on the producers.

"If the exhibitors are innocent sufferers and are sympathetic to our aims, they should run a leader ahead of the film or a trailer in which the management sets forth its own views with respect to the film."

CBS REJECTS TORGSIN PROGRAM

Guarding against Soviet propaganda in the United States, the Columbia Broadcasting System has rejected the advertising of Torgsin, the Soviet's trading and chain store organization, over stations controlled by the network. Contracts had been prepared for WABC, New York; WBBM, Chicago; WCCO, Minneapolis; and KMOX, St. Louis, when Columbia broke off negotiations, announcing its policy on foreign propaganda.

Torgsin's program has, however, been presented on WMCA, New York, for 11 weeks, and is scheduled to start September 15 in a dozen cities on a local "spot" basis. Fifteen-minute programs will be broadcast once weekly, using transcriptions of Russian music.

National Broadcasting Company reports no negotiations with the Soviet's Torgsin.

He pointed out that the Acme theatre, fronting on Union Square, the soapbox forum of radicals, employs such a method when showing pictures to which its Red patrons might object. This showhouse and the Cameo, both operated by Matty Radin, are conspicuous outlets in America for Soviet-manufactured propaganda films, but occasionally show other product.

Differentiate Among Exhibitors

"Such a screen announcement," explained Mr. Hathaway, "should express the exhibitor's opinion of the picture generally and the objective of the picture and the anti-labor or Fascist views it is intended to propagate. In that way the crowd feels itself as one with the management, not as people who are to be influenced, but as casual spectators."

Mr. Hathaway shed a tear for the "little exhibitor":

"We differentiate between the exhibitors and makers of pictures," he continued. "And we differentiate among the exhibitors as well. We realize there are affiliated circuits and little independents who are squeezed by the large producers, and we adopt a policy of helping the little man. In such instances, our boycott would be tempered with a knowledge of the small exhibitor's position.

"Our campaign is not confined to Hearst. It runs through everything that is anti-labor or pro-war. It is directed even at the 'Little Orphan Annie' comic strip in the New York Daily News and other newspapers, because it has recently taken a decided anti-labor attitude.

Against Fascist Films

"It is against all films designed to whip up anti-labor or Fascist sentiment. It is a movement not only by us, but by tremendous masses of people opposed to such manifestations."

It is a coincidence that the Reds are intensifying their drive against Hearst Metrotone News at a time when they are seeking to elect Communist Party nominees in the city and state elections in New York state. Mr. Hathaway, incidentally, is the Communist candidate for assemblyman in the Eighth Assembly District of New York.

At the national headquarters of the American League Against War and Fascism, 112 East 19th Street, New York City, it was said the League was "a movement to unite in common resistance to war and Fascism all organizations and individuals who are opposed to these allied destroyers of mankind."

Paul M. Reid, executive secretary of the League, confirmed everything Mr. Hathaway had said about the fight against films, but explained that the League's campaign was "on a broader base" than that of the Communists. The League's membership of more than 2,000,000 embraced, he said, Communists on the left to church people on the right. He asserted it included fraternal and cultural groups, political groups, student and youth organizations, Socialists, and, on the West Coast, Upton Sinclair's Epics and the Utopians.

League Plans National Drive

Mr. Reid said 275 groups, with a membership of 300,000, were represented in the New York City Committee of the League, and there were 50 neighborhood branches within the city committee. Each branch is organized to conduct mass picketing at theatres in its neighborhood. There are 115 city committees in the United States.

In New Orleans, related Mr. Reid, two members of the local chapter, one a student, the other a seaman, were arrested for distributing leaflets without a permit near the Orpheum theatre urging a boycott on the theatre for showing "Stranded." He contended "Stranded" gave a "distorted view of labor," but admitted he had not seen the picture.

The American League is an outgrowth of the International Congress Against War held in Amsterdam, Holland, in 1932, said Mr. Reid, adding it attempts to accomplish its aims by an "educational" campaign. Its official organ, "Fight," chronicles the campaign against Hearst.

In an open letter to United Artists, published in the Daily Worker, Communist newspaper, the Film and Photo League of Philadelphia, without seeing "Red Salute," which is not yet released, threatened the company:

"If, despite the protests we are sure news of 'Red Salute' will call forth all over the country, this film does get a release date, you may be sure the Film and Photo League of Philadelphia will do all it possibly can to get workers and workers' organizations to boycott 'Red Salute'—or any other title it may be released under. If the only reason the film is being made is to make money, we are sure that you, as producers, are destined to be disappointed."

The League calls the picture "dangerous" and describes it as "obviously biased against free thought and civil liberties in our schools and colleges."

Goldwyn and Small Expand Production

Samuel Goldwyn and Edward Small, United Artists producers, have announced increased expenditures for the coming season. Mr. Goldwyn plans to add to the personnel of the company and will spend more than $300,000 to increase production facilities, in his initial step to spend $18,000,000 on United Artists films this year.

Mr. Small, head of Reliance will produce ten features costing in excess of $7,500,000 over a 12-month period.

CONCENTRATION OF INDEPENDENT BUYING POWER URGED AT ALLIED MEET

National Officers and Regional Directors Convene at Atlantic City with Jersey Unit and Hear New Six-Plank Platform

Turning the 16th annual convention of the New Jersey Allied Theatre Owners into a meeting of national Allied proportions, six of the ten officers and seven regional directors of the parent Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors gathered this week at Atlantic City with their Jersey colleagues for the purpose of solidifying all state affiliates in order to insure the culmination of a six-plank platform advanced by Abram F. Myers, national board chairman, as follows:

1. The expansion of Allied to every state in the Union.

2. Establishment of facilities for a quicker and more effective interchange of information and closer cooperation between the national and regional associations.

3. The securing of judicial definition and vindication of exhibitors' rights in the matter of chain expansion.

4. Creation of a method for marshaling independent buying power so as to compete with the chains and force the abandonment of monopolistic selling policies.

5. To encourage in every way possible the bringing in of new sources of product in order to reestablish competition in the selling of motion pictures.

6. Securing the enactment of the Pettengill-Neely anti-compulsory block booking bill and the Duffy Copyright bill. (The Duffy bill was passed by the U. S. Senate on August 7th.)

Congressman Samuel B. Pettengill, author of the anti-compulsory block booking bill in Congress, which Allied has supported from its inception, was scheduled as the principal speaker of the three-day meeting.

Held at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, Atlantic City, from Wednesday morning through Friday, some 200 theatre delegates and others were to hear, besides Pettengill's discourse on block booking, an analysis of 1935-36 product, by John Benas, of the Rosenblatt-Welt circuit.

Samuelson Ends Reign

They were to hear, also, with surprise, that Sidney E. Samuelson, Newton, N. J., would not run for the presidency at the elections on Friday, Mr. Samuelson announcing that with the end of this, his fifth term as New Jersey head, he will withdraw in order to concentrate on the duties of national Allied president, devoting virtually all of his time strengthening the organization.

Indications were that Julius Charnow, incumbent vice-president, would be elected Jersey president in Mr. Samuelson's place.

Sounding the keynote of national Allied's participation at the Jersey convention, Board Chairman Abram Myers declared: "We must have active organization men in every Congressional district to aid the legislative program. And we must be able to overcome in a most decisive way the claim, always encountered in national problems, that the independent exhibitors do not know what they want because, forsooth, their very ranks are divided. A loose organization of distant associations, ruled over by satraps who respond to the pleas of the national association only when it is to their immediate advantage to do so, can accomplish nothing."

Mr. Myers warned all Allied members that they must fight "not merely to match but to overcome the organized efforts of the Big Eight and their affiliated chains."

The convention took on a national tone when Mr. Samuelson introduced Mr. Myers and the following national officers: Walter B. Littlefield, vice president, Massachusetts; W. A. (A) Steffes, vice president, Minnesota; Herman Blum, secretary and treasurer, Maryland, and H. M. Richey, recording secretary, Michigan, and the following national directors: Ray Branch, Michigan; M. B. Horwitz, Ohio; W. Davis, Pittsburgh; Henry Lazarus, Louisiana; Charles Metzger, Indiana; Harold Stoneman, Boston; Abe Stone, New York.

Eastern directors named were: William Hix, Arthur Price, A. E. Lichtman, E. Harold Stoneman, William Smalley, Henry Friedes, Jack Unger, Louis Gold, Ralph Pitman, Frank Henry and C. E. Shanberger.

Mr. Littlefield on Wednesday called the national heads into conference and they continued their discussions through the afternoon.

On Thursday the proceedings were halted briefly out of respect to the passing of Will Rogers. Mr. Samuelson was to deliver the eulogy.

"The neutralizing of the advantages inherent in chain buying power by the marshalling of independent buying power is at once the most important and the most difficult task facing the independent exhibitors," Allied's board chairman told the members. "Independent exhibitors," he said, "will have to cooperate in pooling their buying power to the extent necessary to enable them to bargain on an equal footing with the chains for the available product.

"There will have to be an intense campaign of education and much experimentation before a national movement is launched," Mr. Myers continued. "Not only must exhibitors be made to appreciate the necessity and advantages of cooperative buying, but public sympathy and support must be enlisted by publicizing the justification for the movement on principles of self-defense.

"Closely related to the necessity for unified buying is the urgent need of developing new sources of product," he stated, "and, unless the exhibitors themselves pledge organized support to new ventures in picture making they will be in direst straits within a few years."

Samuelson Urges Public Contacts

"The future of the independent exhibitor will be more definitely secured when he builds closer and finer contacts with his patrons through the medium of civic groups," declared Sidney Samuelson as the delegates were converging on the convention hall.

"No matter how secluded, no matter how well established your theatre may be, as long as it is this business buying film from distributors and selling tickets to the public, you are affected by every slightest cross-current in this industry," Mr. Samuelson said.

Fred Herrington, Charles Metzger and Pete Woodhull were introduced. Louis Senn of Theatre Underwriters explainted how exhibitors could save 40 per cent on insurance. Ed Hartley, of RCA Photophone, and Charles Casanave, of American Display, talked about their respective products, and Sidney Samuelson asserted the convention will act to stamp out traveling carnivals.

Will Set Out to Establish An Allied Branch in Every State and Create a Closer Working Arrangement with Parent Unit

He appointed Jack Unger and Louis Gold a committee to analyze product. The national directors held a secret discussion on sales policies of all companies.

Mr. Samuelson warned that distributors are in the market for theatre buys, only this time instead of buying are taking, adding that after "washing up" the bare leases and commitments they are starting anew on making theatre acquisitions. "This is one of the really serious problems facing Allied members," he said.

Relief on the music tax is in sight, he continued, citing the Duffy Copyright Bill, which he predicted will be passed when Congress reconvenes in January.

Starting September 15, national Allied will conduct a campaign for attracting children and students to theatres through Saturday matinees at which special historical pictures on American history will be shown. Class study will follow each showing and prizes will be awarded. H. M. Richey explained that each state leader already has been supplied with data.

Franklin Asks Judgments Against Fox Film, Newsreel

Counsel for Sidney Franklin, professional bull fighter, filed a motion in New York supreme court this week, asking that two judgments be entered against Fox Film Corporation and Fox Movietone News, Inc. The first asks $1,239, claimed due as expense money for the arrangement of certain exhibitions of bull fighting, and the second asks as assessment of damages on the grounds that the defendants violated rights of privacy in using photographs of Mr. Franklin for trade purposes without his written permission. He originally asked for $100,000 damages.

RKO Reorganization Fees Cut In Half by Bondy

In a decision handed down by Federal Judge William Bondy in New York, allowances asked for services in connection with the RKO reorganization were cut by more than one half. Applicants had asked for more than $281,525. The allowances made aggregate $135,000.

Irving Trust Co., trustee for RKO, received $30,000. Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Lombard, counsel to the trustees, were allowed $60,000. Cravath de Gersdorff. Swaine & Wood, special counsel received $13,500.

The Too Free Press

A discussion of some newspapers and their attitude toward the screen

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

IN an obvious effort to launch an attack against the motion picture industry, with or without reason, "Editor and Publisher," a newspaper publishers' trade journal under the editorial direction of Mr. Marlen Pew, has allowed itself to wander considerably beyond the limits of truth and fair play.

In the absence of certain background information the current tabloid pranks of this old and respected journal would be difficult to understand. The situation, however, becomes crystal-clear when it is known that Mr. James Wright Brown, president and publisher of the trade journal, is unreasonably sympathetic to the plight of the magazine, "The Churchman," which has been assessed damages on account of a libel committed against Mr. Gabriel L. Hess, an attorney associated with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

Mr. Brown is either ignorant of or deliberately blind to the facts. Mr. Brown and his associates hold that the Hess suit amounts to an attack of the industry against the religious press on account of criticism of pictures and the industry. The Hess suit was a private matter which received no industry support or encouragement and in fact elicited practically no interest anywhere in the industry. In view, however, of the persistent misrepresentation and villification indulged in by this publication which, of all things, calls itself "The Churchman" it is quite understandable that anyone associated with the industry who had good grounds for a libel action would give the courts an opportunity, under the law, to discipline the offending party.

IN an effort that looks exceedingly like an attempt to overrule the court Mr. Brown and his associates embarked upon a plan to deceive the religious press generally into believing that the Hess suit amounted to something that it was not—that it represented an effort of the industry to muzzle the religious press, meanwhile organizing a tin-cup campaign to defray the monetary damages allowed by the court. With this effort under way then "Editor and Publisher" turned its hand, tabloid-fashion, to dredging some dirt out of the Hollywood situation.

In an obviously directed story a Hollywood corespondent of "Editor and Publisher" was given free rein to whip up a sensation. The result is a fantastic article, published as the leading article in the issue of August 10 which alleges that the studios in an effort to gag the newspapers and impose a rigid censorship are threatening to withdraw advertising and are introducing various regulations aimed to circumvent the freedom of the press. As far as all responsible opinion and purposes of the industry are concerned this is pure rot and will be so understood by all persons who are not animated by an ulterior reason in their judgment of the situation.

IT is hardly necessary at this late day to tell any informed persons that motion picture people and the industry have been repeatedly victimized by a conscienceless and vile journalism, that chatter writers and column conductors who are paid, aided and abetted by various of the newspapers and magazines for whom "Editor and Publisher" undertakes to speak have indulged in a vileness abhorrent to every decent-minded person—all for the rotten purposes of circulation figures for some of "Editor and Publishers'" clients.

Not only the industry generally, but all decent Americans can congratulate themselves that Hollywood is making an effort to clean up some of the mess created by irresponsible newspapers and magazines.

If Mr. James Wright Brown and Mr. Marlen Pew are of the opinion that Hollywood's effort to keep suggestive photographs and obscene and scurrilous stories about picture people out of newspapers and magazines going into American homes constitutes a policy of censorship then by all means let them make the most of it.

If Mr. Brown and Mr. Pew regard this procedure as an attack upon the freedom of the press they represent a section of the press which no one had dreamed previously of associating them with—that section which through many devious means seeks to ferret out of Hollywood, not infrequently by offer of bribes, scurrilous photographic and other material to be used, pander-fashion, to sell newspapers.

THE situation in Hollywood is an entirely simple and understandable one.

Certain sound and legitimate newspapermen are now confronted with regulations which are obnoxious but unimportant and for which there is no need in so far as they are concerned.

These regulations were rendered imperative by the filth sent out from Hollywood by certain of their colleagues who misrepresent The Fourth Estate in Hollywood.

Hollywood correspondents of character failed to organize among themselves against those lawless members of their profession whose only objective was the scandalous reference, whether based on fact or fancy. This failure eventually resulted in the industry being compelled to resort to measures which it disliked adopting but which it was driven to for self-defense.

But no condition now exists, nor has at any time in the past existed, which in face of the harm done represents any unreasonable curb upon the activities of newspapermen. In the first place, there never have been any regulations intended to avoid or influence criticism. The whole effort has been directed against factual misrepresentation and deliberately misleading insinuation.

There is another phase of the situation and here again any suggestion that it involves a violation of the freedom of the press is nonsense.

Some correspondents in Hollywood feel, apparently, that the freedom of the press through some absurd interpretation on their part gives them a license to violate private property and private affairs. Naturally Hollywood does not subscribe to any such interpretation. There is there, for instance, a popular and competent newspaper writer named Sidney Skolsky who among other devices for attracting attention to a widely read column of Hollywood chatter likes to lift any veil of secrecy that may surround any phase of motion picture production and tell the world what goes on behind the scenes.

MR. SKOLSKY for his own purposes does not wish to recognize the essential character of the motion picture—that it is a form of entertainment which in an important degree involves the necessity of creating an illusion of reality; making the simulated and portrayed thing appear to the public as actuality. This writer wants to rob the motion picture of much of what makes it impressive and enjoyable to the public.

Now if Mr. Skolsky picks up at random the kind of information he seeks then of course he is free to print it and there is nothing for the producer to do about it. But is is nothing short of stupid on the part of the producer to allow Mr. Skolsky permission to rove over the private grounds and buildings of a studio when he is admittedly engaged upon the pursuit of picking up information the disclosure of which will injure the public's enjoyment of pictures.

There is also a point at which the theatre feels the sting of Mr. Skolsky's procedure. "Editor and Publisher" seems to think that when a theatre elects not to buy advertising space in a newspaper which prints this material—thereby retiring from the unequal contest of seeking to outweigh editorial influence by advertising expenditure—it is invoking the principle of censorship. Such a conclusion is obviously absurd. Any newspaper is entitled to print such material if it wishes to do so but if that is its policy any theatre involved is similarly entitled to drop from the newspaper's lists of customers.

And while Mr. Skolsky deals in disillusion, another very different school of the exploitation of the public's attention to motion pictures is exemplified by the technique, if one may call it that, of Walter Winchell. One specimen of Winchell treatment, sufficient for the current purpose is afforded by a passage from his "On Broadway" column of Sunday, August 11, in which he says:

" . . . seeing Myrna Loy at Leon & Eddie's the other 3:35 was among the pleasures. . . . In her low shoes she appears tinier than she does on the gelatin. . . . She doesn't seem like a movie star. . . . She looks respectable. . . ."

Of course intelligent persons everywhere have come to a point at which they are a little sick of the Fourth Estate pretensions of so many newspaper properties which in our day have come to be simon-pure commercial enterprises, merchandizers of white space and copies with precisely the same degree of altruism that animates any other class of merchants.

Mr. Pew, we assume, must be credited with responsibility for an exceedingly ill-tempered editorial which appears in the same issue with the alleged exposé of censorship in Hollywood. In it the assertion is made that "the motion picture industry is appreciably controlled by men recruited from the lowest levels of commerce."

Mr. Pew might have spared us this assertion if he stopped to recollect the considerable number of graduate thugs and gunmen who have risen to eminence in the newspaper profession in his own times. He should have remembered the statement, doubtlessly known to him, made by a police chief in Chicago that the whole recent crop of gun-men and public enemies had their first guns placed in their hands in newspaper alleys in Chicago as they started upon their august mission of building circulation for their employers.

Says Films Have Right to Protest Keyhole Reporting

Producers are "absolutely within their rights" in protesting to newspaper publishers against the so-called "inside" gossip writers, "a few Broadway smart alecs transplanted to Hollywood, who have an idea the motion picture business is conducted for the sole purpose of giving them something to wisecrack about." Thus did Malcolm W. Bingay, managing editor of the Detroit Free Press, writing in Editor and Publisher, answer Douglas C. Churchill, Hollywood news writer who, in the same trade journal, had alleged that the studios in an effort to gag the press are threatening to withdraw movie advertising.

"Keyhole reporting does not belong to any good newspaper," Mr. Bingay added.

The controversy in Editor and Publisher started after Mr. Bingay's newspaper canceled the syndicate publication rights for Sidney Skolsky's chatter column. Trendle Theatres in Detroit had complained to the Free Press that Mr. Skolsky's "exposes" of production technique was disillusioning theatre patrons, causing unfavorable box office reactions.

"I emphatically deny that the Skolsky column was dropped from the Free Press due to any withdrawal of advertising," Mr. Bingay declared, adding: "I became satisfied it was not the kind of copy that was in keeping with the traditions of the Free Press.

"Mr. Churchill seems to think it evil that an advertiser has a right to fight for his product and that no paper should ever be influenced in any way by advertising. This is, of course, pure cant," explained Mr. Bingay. "Every newspaper is . . . and more especially by motion picture, theatrical and other amusement advertising. If this is not so, why is there a special amusement rate?

"Both from a financial standpoint in the business welfare of the nation and from a cultural attitude, every right-thinking newspaper should give the industry the best constructive support—bitterly assailing it when it is bad; applauding and helping it when it is good.

"I never have had any exhibitor or producer protest against bitter criticism of films because they were indecent or tending to lower the moral tone of the community," continued Mr. Bingay. "They have protested against what they thought was unfair criticism.

"Now we come down to the real issue out at Hollywood, the war of the correspondents and producers, if one exists. I think Churchill is reporting a tempest in a teapot.

"Would the publisher of any newspaper permit his financial reporter, his industrial reporter, his market reporter or his real estate reporter the same license that is allowed the Hollywood and the theatrical reporters?" asked Mr. Bingay.

"Would he allow a reporter to go into the motor car factories, shoe factories, the banks and the merchandising houses and report the intimate details of the lives of their executives in the same ruthless manner that the theatrical and motion picture world is exposed? Would he allow keyhole reporters to tell about every human frailty and every idiosyncrasy? I doubt it.

"He would stop it on grounds of public policy and public decency even before the advertisers could register a protest and withdraw their advertising.

"By all means let us look into the motion picture industry to find its faults, but let us look into our own. Our only business, as I see it, is to pass judgment on the finished picture—that is the only thing that concerns the public. Let us be honest with ourselves first, then tackle Hollywood.

"The producers have protested against destroying the illusion. I see nothing wrong in that protest. I think they are entitled to fight it with every legitimate means at hand—even to cancelling advertising. What paper would long get cigarette or motor car advertising that persisted and wilfully did everything it could to injure that business and prevent it from making profits?

"I know of no meaner person," Mr. Bingay continued, "than the man who tells you how a magician does his tricks before the performance so that you do not have the fun of being mystified—the thing for which you have paid out your money.

"But there is a certain type of Hollywood correspondent who things that that is his job—to expose. Expose what? Certainly there are illusions created just as there are on the stage. That is the whole art of the theatre and of literature itself.

"One of the most beautiful and most competent and most highly respected women of the screen plays in such dignified and lovely parts that she dresses normally as a woman of good taste would. One of the wisecracking Hollywood reporters drops in a paragraph that the reason she never exposes her person is that she is bow-legged!

"This is supposed to be expert criticism and any protest made against it by the company that has spent millions of advertising money presenting this young woman is seeking to infringe the freedom of the press!

"The vulgarity and the indecency is not all among the producers and actors and actresses in Hollywood.

"There are decent people in Hollywood just as there are decent people in journalism.

"Business men spend anywhere from $100,000 to $1,000,000 and more to create something which will please the public and return to them an honest profit. Is it fair to have a handful of self-appointed ulemas pass judgment upon them out at Hollywood?" asks Mr. Bingay.

"The idea of the flip wise-cracking Broadway gossip columnist and theatre critic," he believes, "seems to be: 'Write your heart out creating something and spend a fortune presenting it to the people—so that I may have the privilege of showing how smart I am in sneering at it.'

"I resent that kind of criticism whether it is on Broadway or in Hollywood; whether it is in music or any of the arts."

As for Skolsky's column, which he dropped on his own "editorial judgment," Mr. Bingay said: "It is breezy, gossipy, well written, but overly smart for us and too eager to tell little and disagreeable things of no consequence. There is a constant effort to appear very wise and on the inside, often in matters of such delicacy that people of good taste would not care to discuss them in polite company. . . .

"Again I do not like to have a film spoiled for me by telling how the effects are achieved before I see it.

"That is the main objection of the producers to Skolsky and I am heartily in accord with them.

"Isn't it time the newspaper publishers began looking into their own back yards to find out what kind of correspondents they have at Hollywood who attend such (cocktail) parties?

"As advertisers and as contributors to the wealth of the nation and to its happiness," Mr. Bingay believes "the motion picture producers are entitled to just as much consideration, just as much helpful, sane and wholesome cooperation as the meat packers, the motor car manufacturers, the department store merchants, the tobacco manufacturers or any other group of people who have not only made American prosperity possible but who have raised our standards of living.

"I do not see why they should be picked out for abuse just to give a few Broadway smart alecs, transplanted to Hollywood, a chance for a Roman holiday and to show how smart they are," he concluded, "and I'll fight to the end of my typewriter ribbon and unto my last breath for the freedom of the press."

The heads of distributing corporations have been invited to attend the convention, and will be given the opportunity of speaking to the men personally.

Many of the producing and distributing companies' executives have already signified their intention of being present and of taking advantage of the opportunity to speak to the men about their product. Among those to have been invited to be present are: Jules Levy, RKO Radio; Oscar Hanson, Empire Films, Ltd.; J. R. Granger, Universal; George Schaefer, Paramount; Tom Connors, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; E. 2,000-FOOT REEL WOULD COST $1,350,000, MAJORS COMPLAIN

Universal Leads Opposition of Some Distributors to New Double-Size Reel Standard Proposed by Academy Council

Expense Cited in Opposition; Studios, Laboratories Not Affected; Only Minor Change, If Any, Required in Theatres

Hollywood's Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences faces opposition by some distributors to its proposal that beginning January 1, 1936, all feature motion pictures be released on a standard 2,000-foot reel. Leading the counter forces is Universal Pictures, which estimates the cost of the changeover to that company at between $125,000 and $150,000—roughly $1,125,000 to $1,350,000 for the nine large distributors.

Whatever benefits would be derived from such a change would not, Universal believes, even amount to the interest on the investment.

Distributors would be forced to stand nearly all of the costs of the changeover, which would not apply to raw stock manufacturing, studio or laboratory procedure, and would require only the changing of a magazine on the theatre's projector. Warner Brothers and Paramount are known to have voiced approval of the plan, which, although completed by the Academy, has not been formally accepted. Sponsoring the proposals are the Hollywood studio technicians of the Academy's Research Council, who in their final recommendations to the companies, claim that approximately half of the number of reel end changeovers will be necessary.

The film editor assembling a feature production is now faced with the necessity for finding a satisfactory changeover approximately every 1,000 feet. With the 2,000-foot reel in use, the Research Council plans that the end of the first 1,000 feet will be made as a direct cut, for although the reel will be processed in its present 1,000 feet length, it will be spliced to the second 1,000 feet of the picture and the two will be projected as a unit in the theatre. It will thus only be necessary to find a projection changeover at the end of what now corresponds (with the presently used 1,000-foot reel) to reels 2, 4 and 6.

No Camera Technique Change

Basically, the Research Council would have features edited in the studios so that they will reach the theatre in the least number of reels, "and in no event should the total length of any reel be less than 1,700 feet." Raw stock will continue to be supplied in 1,000-foot lengths, so there will be no change in camera technique due to the adoption of the 2,000-foot reel.

No change in laboratory release printing procedure will be required. Laboratories will continue to process release prints in 1,000-foot lengths, and prints will be shipped from the laboratory to the exchanges in these lengths, in cans but not mounted on reels. The exchange will splice the appropriate 1,000-foot length rolls together, and mount the spliced print on 2,000-foot reels. Each reel of the print will, from this point on, in its inspection by the exchange, shipment to the theatre, projection in the theatre, remain in the 2,000-foot length mounted on a 2,000-foot reel.

It is privately admitted in technical circles that the proposal would have been defeated at the start had any attempt been made to apply it to camera and laboratory procedure, requiring as it would a tremendous outlay by the raw stock manufacturers and laboratories for the reconstruction of equipment to meet the new standard.

Expense Is Objection

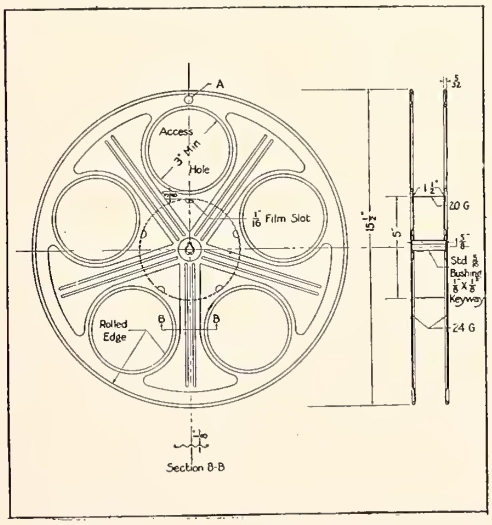
Typical of the distributor opposition, as expressed by Universal, centers on the expense which they claim will be incurred. All vaults throughout the country in the 500 and odd exchanges both of large and state right distributors will have to be altered to accommodate the larger reels. These distributors disagree with the Academy's estimate of $10 as the cost for altering each vault, claiming that the expense in this connection will be several hundred dollars per vault.

They also cite the cost of the extra operation of mounting the film on 2,000-foot reels, made necessary because the laboratories would no longer mount the film but would ship it to the branches rolled in cans.

Vault cans of stronger material than the present ones must be purchased because of the additional weight to a 2,000-foot reel, likewise stronger shipping cans would be required for the same reason. These are additional points of opposition noted by the distributors. The larger reels would require all new equipment anyway, but the distributors claim that the heavier material would make the containers considerably more expensive than those now in use for 1,000-foot reels.

The Academy denies that such would be the case, claiming that a primary limitation was set up that the 2,000-foot reel, if it were to be finally adopted, must be so designed that the weight and cost of the larger reel should not be more than double the cost of the 1,000-foot reel.

Tentative prices submitted by the manufacturers are said to indicate that the new reels may be purchased for somewhat less, in most cases, than double the price of the 1,000-foot reels, although a definite price, of course, depends mainly upon the quantity of reels purchased.



Sketch of the standard 2,000-foot release reel for 35 mm. moton picture film submitted to distributors for adoption beginning January 1, 1936, by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. It would become the standard size for all features, taking the place of the present 1,000-foot reel.

Prints will receive rougher handling in shipment because of this added weight, and shipping costs will be increased, Universal, as opposition leader, explains.

See Greater Film Wear

Where film measures 6,500 or 8,500 feet, it will mean that an additional reel—or the equivalent in weight—will have to be used and that this further increases the weight and cost of transportation.

In Universal's opinion, mounting film on 2,000-foot reels will result in more wear and tear on the film because of the extra pull not only in the projection machine, but in the rewinds in the exchange inspection department as well.

The Research Council admits that this would be the case if the present type of four-to-one geared rewind was continued in use. Therefore, they recommend that a new rewind having a gear ratio of two-and-three-quarters-to-one be purchased. This, they hold, will turn as easily with a 2,000-foot reel as the present four-to-one geared rewind turns with the 1,000-foot reel.

However, if the present rewinds are continued in use, they may be made to hold the 2,000-foot reel by the placement of a wooden block under the frame of the rewind in order to place the shaft sufficiently high above the table surface to permit the larger diameter reel to be mounted thereon. But, from the standpoint of efficiency of personnel engaged in film inspection and film handling, the Academy insists that the new ratio gear replace the old type.

"From this point on, however," the Academy claims, "the print will pass through all of the normal operations of inspection, shipment, projection, in the 2,000-foot length."

To this, too, the opposing forces are in disagreement. They fear that projectionists will refuse to run films on 2,000-foot reels because it might lessen the work of projectionists and, therefore, require fewer operators. This, however, is an exhibitor problem.

Opposing distributors further claim that it would be very awkward to make cuts on film mounted on 2,000-foot reels to comply with censorship requirements, when prints are shipped between various territories that have different censorship eliminations. They also believe that the additional weight that the inspectors will have to handle will in time affect them physically, thereby slowing down the procedure of exchange treatment.

Cite Film Leader Saving

Another reason advanced in opposition is that sometimes they lose a reel of film due to fire, usually in the theatre's projection booth. With 2,000-foot reels being used, it would not be one reel but two reels destroyed. Because print costs for film destroyed by fire in theatres is rarely retrieved by exchanges, replacements in these cases would, with the 2,000-foot print, be doubled.

The Research Council claims that there will be a saving in film leader, which is now cut off by the operator in the booth to join together the two present-type 1,000-foot reels. The distributors admit that while there might be a saving, the low cost of leader would not result in enough of a saving in this connection to warrant the changeover.

OPPOSE 2,000-FOOT REEL

There are numerous occasions when prints are returned to the exchange just in time to have them inspected before making another shipment to the next theatre account, and the distributors point out that it is now possible to take a seven or eight-reel feature and assign one reel to each of seven or eight inspectors, whereas under the new plan a six-reeler could be inspected by only three persons at the one time. This additional time, Universal declares, would probably cause a miss-out which on any wholesale basis would be costly to the company either in the hiring of special messengers to transport the film to the exhibitor or in making an adjustment for such miss-outs.

Probably of more importance than most of the objections is the feeling in distributor quarters that the change would encourage the formation of an inspectors' union, which even now is being attempted in several exchange centers. The employes, they believe, could be sold the idea that they should request more wages because of their handling the heavier reels.

Universal point out that the 2,000-foot reel was given a trial by that company some years ago, and claimed that it increased reprints to 500,000 feet a month. Returning to the 1,000-foot reel, their reprints returned to the previous prevailing average of 50,000 feet monthly.

"There will be no actual change in operation in the theatre," claims the Research Council's report, which added: "A very complete survey shows that all theatres in the United States, with a few isolated exceptions, are equipped to project 2,000-foot reels without any change or alteration of equipment. Investigation made recently indicates that a great majority of the theatres, not only in the United States, but throughout the world, 'double' their prints."

The opposing distributors charge that this is untrue, claiming that a number of theatres are not equipped to take 2,000-foot reels. The controversial point revolves around whether theatres have 2,000-foot magazines attached to their projectors. It has been known generally that virtually all large theatres have for years been "doubling" 1,000-foot prints on the larger magazine.

Doubling may be described as the practice of cutting the tail-end leader from reel one and the head-end leader from reel two, splicing the two together and mounting them on 2,000-foot reels kept at the theatre for the purpose. In a similar manner, reels three and four, reels five and six, et al, are spliced together and projected "doubled." Upon the completion of the picture's run at the theatre, the reels are cut apart, remounted on the 1,000-foot reels and sent back.

The Academy Council charges that the evil of this practice arises from the fact that with each "doubling" operation, two frames of film are cut away from each reel, eventually resulting in a considerable jump in the picture on the screens of subsequent run theatres and necessitating replacement of the reel end by the exchange.

"The elimination of the practice of doubling will not only result in an economy, but will greatly improve the technical excellence of the show in the theatre," said the Council.

The Research Council reported that its subcommittee has conducted an extensive survey of film distribution regulations, laws, rules, fire ordinances and the like, and has found that there are no regulations in the United States which will interfere with the shipment or exhibition of film on 2,000-foot reels.

In connection with the distribution of film in foreign countries, surveys made for the Research Council by the foreign office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Electrical Research Products and the International Projector Corporation indicate that the 2,000-foot reel will be acceptable for use in all of the foreign countries in which the large companies release pictures, with the exception of Spain, Argentine and Puerto Rico.

The 2,000-foot reel may be used without modification of equipment or change in legislation in all other countries.

In connection with sound-on-film prints, there will be no change in recording, dubbing or duping, or sound track printing procedures.

For Features Only

In connection with sound-on-disc prints (some of which are made by some of the distributors for foreign release, a few domestic accounts, and for miscellaneous releases), the matter has been considered individually and collectively by the head of each of the studio sound departments. "Opinion is unanimous," the Council reported, "that the problems arising from the adoption of a 2,000-foot reel from the standpoint of sound-on-disc releases are negligible, and that whatever small changes may be necessary in operating technique can be taken care of within each sound department as they arise."

It is the Academy's plan to make the 2,000-foot system applicable only to features. Short subjects and newsreels will continue to be released on the 1,000-foot reels until the supply of these reels and shipping cases is exhausted and all equipment is converted to the new standard.

The Research Council admits that an initial expenditure for sufficient new 2,000-foot reels and shipping cases will be necessary, but the expendable character of this item, they say, will permit the greater portion of the necessary expenditure to be charged over a period of time.

Distributor Committee Named

Furthermore, the Council reported to the distributors, the reel has been designed for maximum efficiency, at minimum expense.

"With the release of feature product on a 2,000-foot reel, the entire character of the reel problem as relating to the exchange is altered," continued the report. "There will be no necessity for the theatres to transfer the film from the shipping reel to a theatre reel unless such procedure is particularly desired by the projectionist or theatre management.

"During the consideration of the 2,000-foot reel, all reel manufacturers were consulted and specifications for the reel were submitted for comment and suggestion. In this manner, in addition to the knowledge and experience of those in the industry who cooperated in the project, the combined technical knowledge of the designers and engineers engaged in the manufacture of reels was utilized," the report said.

Large distributors, meeting last week at the offices in New York of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America to discuss the advisability of a change to the 2,000-foot reel, named a committee to investigate the matter from an equipment standpoint. Arthur Dickinson, of the MPPDA, presided at the session of managers of exchange operaitons. A second session was held at the Hays office Tuesday, and another is set for September.

The committee includes: Charles Ryan, Warner; John Ojerholm, Paramount; J. S. McLeod, MGM; J. K. Burger, United Artists; J. P. Skelly, RKO. A general meeting on the changeover plan is scheduled for a later date.

Pathe Completes Reorganization; Stay Halts Action

With the formation of a new company, known as Pathe Film Corporation, Pathe Exchange late last week completed its plan of reorganization. The new company acquired the assets and assumed the obligations of the old company.

Upon completion of registration under the federal Securities and Exchange Act certificates for shares of stock of the new corporation and scrip will be delivered to stockholders of Pathe Exchange. The application for listing of the new common stock on the New York Stock Exchange already has been approved. Stockholders of the old company will be informed when and where to surrender their certificates in exchange for new ones, according to Pathe officials.

Pending an appeal before the New York appellate division, further procedure in the reorganization of Pathe was stayed Wednesday. The appeal was brought by Ben Hilbert, a stockholder, to prevent consummation of the reorganization on the grounds that the law authorizing the holdings of extraordinary meetings of stockholders, such as the one at which the Pathe reorganization plan was approved is unconstitutional.

The stay was granted to Mr. Hilbert by Judge Martin, presiding justice of the appellate division. Pathe attorneys have filed a counter motion to have it vacated.

The reorganization plan provides for the issuance of 30,000 shares of new $7 convertible preferred stock of no par value and 2,000,000 shares of new common stock of $1 par, of which 8,043 shares of preferred and 573,700 shares of common are now outstanding. Holders of old Pathe eight per cent preferred stock receive for each share one share of new preferred and five shares of new common stock. Holders of the old Class A preference stock receive for each share two shares of new common, and holders of each share of old common receive one-twentieth share of new common for each share of the old.

The new company is also authorized to issue collateral secured notes limited to the aggregate principal amount of $4,000,000 at any time outstanding.

Frank F. Kolbe is president of the new company, Robert W. Atkins is executive vice-president, Arthur B. Poole is vice-president and treasurer, and Thomas B. Loach is secretary and assistant treasurer

No Decision on Cleveland Single Feature Agreement

Nothing definite with reference to adoption of a general subsequent run policy for the city was accomplished at the last meeting of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association. A final meeting is scheduled for an early date, at which the agreement providing for single feature playing of all films playing a downtown seven-day first run either will be adopted or finally abandoned. Ernest Schwartz, president of the association, is of the opinion the agreement will be adopted.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

Paul Gerard Smith in Hollywood reports on the trial of a suit for damages filed by an actor whose anatomy had been picked on by a studio lion. One of the studio's executives testified that such an accident was absolutely impossible—the lion couldn't bite, because he was a tame lion, and, anyway, had no teeth. The lion was brought into the courtroom.

"Would you put your finger into his mouth?" the plaintiff's attorney asked the studio executive.

"Sure," responded the executive, confidently.

"Well do it," bellowed the attorney.

The executive did.

And the lion bit off his finger.

Film folk like others in New Orleans are being entertained by the expose being conducted by the States newspaper in that city of the latest form of chisel to be brought under the glare of the spotlight of public attention.

The procedure of serving a midnight luncheon at funeral parlors is a city-wide custom. Hungry yaps scan the death notices in the newspapers each day and select the wake which has the greatest gastronomical possibilities. Just about the hour of the midnight lunch they manage to drop in to express their sympathy and go through the weeping routine with members of the bereaved family who never knew all the friends of the deceased and accept the phoneys as genuine grievers. Of course the fakes never depart until they have paid a lingering visit to the dining room. The free meals on the house are obtained at different mortuary on the following nights.

Because "Dante's Inferno," a Twentieth Century-Fox Film, allegedly shows the amusement park industry in a bad light, depicting crooked gambling wheels and dangerous rides, amusement park owners are said to be going to seek an injunction to stop further showings of the film. What makes this a paragraph, however, is the fact that Palisades Amusement Park atop Fort Lee in New Jersey is leading the fight; that the Schenck brothers control Palisades Park, and Joseph M. Time Magazine engages in a bit of skeleton rattling with the reminder to Jean Harlow that when "the foremost U. Instead of an apartment for a bungalow, they lived in a house which had two floors. In it they gave parties to which they invited the people Jean met on the sets. Unlike other extras, Jean drove to work with her mother in their own car. This was a limousine, old but well-polished. Extras without carfare gaped as Jean and her mother entered the lot in their fine conveyance. FOX-20th CENTURY DEAL APPROVED, BUT STILL AWAITS COURT ORDER

Depends on Court Decision on Suit Brought by Mrs. Fox to Prevent Merger; Meeting of the Stockholders Adjourned

The consummation of the merger of Fox Film Corporation with Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., and the capital reorganization, both overwhelmingly approved by the Fox stockholders last Thursday, were still suspended in mid-air this week, with action hinging on the decision of the New York supreme court in the suit brought by Mrs. Eva Fox, wife of William Fox, and her All-Continent Corporation, to prevent the fusion.

The third postponement of the adjourned meeting of Fox Film stockholders occurred Tuesday when Justice Alonzo G. McLaughlin failed to make a ruling on Mrs. Fox's petition. She seeks a permanent injunction against the merger, as a stockholder, claiming Fox Film assets would be "wasted" and the coalition would not benefit the stockholders.

Dismissal of Mrs. Fox's petition would permit the Fox board to meet immediately and put the merger and reorganization into effect.

The court already has announced it does not feel it has a right to interfere with the merger unless the plaintiffs can show fraud.

Meanwhile it was learned that the suit of William Fox for $20,958,333 against Fox Film, Fox Theatres, General Theatres Equipment, Chase National Bank and Chase Securities Corporation, might not come to trial for several years, due to the overcrowded condition of the state supreme court's docket. Mr. Fox timed this action a few days before the stockholders were to meet to approve the merger and new plan. He alleges broken agreements.

Opponents of the plans to bring together Fox Film and Twentieth Century and to recapitalize, made a weak showing at the stockholders' meeting. It was confined to less than 2,000 shares of the more than 2,000,000 shares represented at the meeting.

Provisions of the merger agreement and reorganization, including increase in stock from 2,816,650 shares to 4,600,000, and the change in name of the company, were approved by a vote of 2,030,646 2-6 shares over an opposition of 1,945 4-6 shares. By a vote of 2,032,610 shares against 390, the stockholders granted to Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, an option on 60,000 shares of common stock in blocks of 10,000 over a period of six years at a minimum of $10 a share.

Of the new Fox stock, 1,500,000 shares are to be classified as preferred and 3,100,000 as common. Twentieth Century receives in exchange for its assets 132,513 shares of preferred and 613,264¾ shares of common.

Seven-year contracts were voted to Mr. Kent, as president of the merged company, to Joseph M. Schenck as chairman of the board, and to Darryl Zanuck as vice-president in charge of production.

Edward B. Sobel, an attorney representing a stockholder, attacked the salaries provided for the officers—$2,500 a week and other considerations for Mr. Kent, $2,500 a week for Mr. Schenck and $5,000 weekly for Mr. Zanuck. Mr. Sobel described these compensations as "unfair" to the stockholders and argued that large salaries should not be paid until the new company and management produce "results."

Howard S. Guttmann, attorney for Alexander Gilbert, a small stockholder, claimed Twentieth Century had no assets to offer "except the services of Mr. Schenck and Mr. Zanuck."

What was described as one of the most outspoken replies yet delivered to critics of large salaries of corporation officials was made by Mr. Kent in answering all the objections and questions that had been raised.

"We earn it," said Mr. Kent to the stockholders who had questioned his compensation as well as the price paid to obtain the services of Mr. Schenck and Mr. Zanuck.

"This is a business of creation and imagination," he asserted. "The best company in the industry is Loew's, Inc.—because some years ago they bought Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation and the services of Louis B. Mayer, Irving Thalberg and J. Robert Rubin. Without those three men I wouldn't give ten cents for the stock. We pay stars $8,000 or $9,000 weekly and make money on them. Mr. Zanuck, who directs these stars and who creates stars, is worth $5,000 a week.

"The first step necessary when I took hold of this company three years ago was to save it," Mr. Kent said. "The second step is to make a good company out of it. When I took this company in April, 1932, it had $37,000,000 in past due debts. I could have written my own ticket."

Kent Cut Own Salary in Half

Mr. Kent said he voluntarily cut in half the compensation that was offered to him then. He finally accepted a salary of $133,000 for his first year, and drew only $66,000 of that, returning the rest to the company. His second year he drew $77,000, Mr. Kent continued, and he has not yet drawn what his contract entitled him to.

"I have no apology to make for the job I have done," he declared.

"We considered a lot of deals to build up the company, but most of the others involved taking over debts. We took Twentieth Century, first, because it had no dead studios we did not need, and because it had no distribution facilities. It had five or six stars and directing personnel that we needed.

"Joseph Schenck is the man who brought out the Talmadges—and Buster Keaton—and made money out of them, and then went to United Artists when it was in the red and put it in the black. Mr. Zanuck was for three years production manager for Warners and they paid him what we are paying him. In two years he has established the finest production record in the industry."

Taking up Twentieth Century's unamortized film negative assets being acquired by Fox—which has been under fire by small stockholders—Mr. Kent said that only one would show a loss as high as $75,000, and only one or two others would show a loss, and this would be less than $75,000.

He said the average return on Twentieth's films in the two years of its existence had been two and a half times their negative costs and he described this as "the best record in the industry." He said two times is an excellent average.

Suit of William Fox Alleging Broken Agreements May Not Come to Trial for Several Years in New York Court

"Their pictures had been especially good abroad and ours have not," continued Mr. Kent. "Janet Gaynor is weak outside this country. Twentieth's record in England is the best I have ever looked at."

Answering another objection, Mr. Kent went on: "Whoever says we have to put up $500,000 to pay Twentieth's obligations doesn't know what he is talking about. They can borrow all the money they want at rates just as cheap as we can get.

"This is the finest deal ever put together in the industry and I talk as a stockholder as well as president of the company, because I have many times more stock than all that has been spoken against the plan at this meeting and it was bought with my own money."

The compensation of Mr. Kent, Mr. Schenck and Mr. Zanuck totals about $550,000 annually, equal to nearly 50 cents a share on the new common stock.

New Company Name Called An Asset

Mr. Kent told the stockholders "it would be an asset to the company to send new product out under a new label." He revealed a change in the name had been contemplated for some time.

Joseph M. Schenck, defending Mr. Kent's stock purchase option, told the meeting that "Kent is the best distributor in the business," and that "my brother, Nicholas Schenck, Loew's-MGM wants him." Mr. Kent also intimated that a berth at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had been offered him.

"United Artists receives 33 per cent of the gross of every picture it distributes," Mr. Schenck informed an inquiring stockholder. He said his salary had been paid by United Artists and that he received no salary as president of Twentieth Century.

The new board of directors will be elected in April, when the annual stockholders' meeting takes place.

A development of the week was resumption of examination before suit of William Fox, defendant in actions of Fox Film and Fox Theatres to determine what became of the proceeds of a $500,000 stock issue floated by the concerns while Fox was at their head. Examination was conducted by Elvin N. Edwards, referee, at the Hotel Claridge, Atlantic City, N. J., with reporters barred.

Joseph M. Schenck will head the reorganized Fox Metropolitan Playhouses in New York, it is provided in the reorganization plans, according to reports. RKO will have a 10 per cent interest in the new company, and Skouras Theatres and Randforce are due to receive 10-year leases as operators of the properties. Approval of various matters in connection with the final stages of reorganization and new leases and agreements, as well as authorization of new stock and debentures, is scheduled for hearing Thursday in federal court. Transfer of assets, probably late this month, to a new company will complete the reorganization.

Twentieth Century-Fox production abroad will be confined to England, said Mr. Schenck this week. Robert T. Kane, who will have charge of British production activities, sails shortly.

INDUSTRY MOURNS A GREAT STAR IN THE PASSING OF WILL ROGERS

Thousands of Theatres Darken Screens, Studios Stop Work, Exchanges Close as Public Gathers for Coast Services

The death of Will Rogers in the crack-up of Wiley Post's plane in the Alaska wastes near Point Barrow last Thursday ends the career of one of the best loved figures in the world of the motion picture.

One of the most consistently great box-office attractions, Rogers held a high place in the rating of stars.

The industry paid its tribute during the funeral services Thursday afternoon when over 12,000 theatres darkened their screens for two minutes. Production ceased in Hollywood, and each studio held its own services. The home offices of Fox Film Corporation and Fox, Universal and other exchanges closed at noon.

Private services were held at 2 P.M. in the Wee Kirk o' the Heather. Public services were held concurrently with the private services, or immediately thereafter, in a number of places, among them the Hollywood Bowl, where Rupert Hughes and Conrad Nagel were scheduled to pronounce eulogies.

Governor Frank F. Merriam of California, in a proclamation, asked that one minute of silence be observed throughout the State during this period.

At the Hollywood Bowl services plans were begun for the erection of a memorial to be financed by public subscription.

Interment later will be at Chelsea, Okla., in the Rogers family plot.

Government officials launched an inquiry into the crash. Studios are considering revising contracts of talent and executives to prohibit flying, as accidents are costly. Twentieth Century-Fox estimates the Rogers death is a potential loss of $5,000,000.

One of the ironies was that consummation of a new 10-picture contract with Rogers was announced by the company a few hours before the tragedy. "Steamboat Round the Bend," one of Rogers' last two films, will be released nationally September 6, and "In Old Kentucky" will be released December 6. Exhibitors this week were playing or re-playing all the Rogers pictures they could lay their hands on. Fox will not, however, re-release his old films for the time being.

Will Rogers' wide appeal won him the rating of No. 1 money making star of the 1933-34 season, in Motion Picture Herald's annual poll of independent exhibitors in the United States. In 1932-33 he placed second to the late Marie Dressler. He forged to top rank in two seasons, in 1931-32 having placed sixth. Rogers' film, "Judge Priest," was a box-office champion of 1934.

From cowboy days on an Oklahoma ranch to the status of one of the best known men in public life—such is the saga of William Penn Adair Rogers. Born in Oolagah, U. S. Indian Territory, now Oklahoma, on November 4, 1879, Rogers went to Willie Hassell School, Neosho, Mo., and Kemper Military Academy, Booneville, Mo. He early made a name for himself in traveling "wild west" shows, and came to New York in 1905 as one of the attractions at the Madison Square Garden horse show. Subsequently he appeared in vaudeville, and later in "Ziegfeld Follies." In 1919 he entered films, but in 1922 returned to the "Follies," remaining on Broadway until 1929 when the advent of talking pictures brought him back to Hollywood. His first hit picture was "They Had to See Paris," produced by Winfield Sheehan at Fox. He had been with the company since.

Rogers was part Cherokee Indian, and this was one of his proudest boasts. One of his most famous wisecracks was that his ancestors didn't come over on the Mayflower—"they were here to meet the boat!"

Of his opening night in the "Follies," he recollected: "I felt like a plugged nickel. I had no more chance among all those beautiful girls than a coon at a Klux corn roast. I was the fifth wheel on the buggy. But I hung around, hopin'."

His early ambition, he said, was "to grow up and be a man." He often wondered if he realized it.

When Rogers was appearing in a roping act on Hammerstein's Roof in New York, Jack Francis, friend of the cowboy-humorist, suggested to Florenz Ziegfeld that he take him for the "Follies." "What! That smelly fellow!" was the great glorifier's retort. But he caught the act, and the result was stardom.

Rogers' appearances on the Ziegfeld roof were informal. Once, when he felt he was not getting proper attention from Johnny Hoagland, young son of the baking powder king, he said, "Listen, Johnny, you're not listening to me, and I'm sure more important than that steak." With that, he flung his rope, neatly lassoed the fork which was lifting a juicy bit of dinner toward the open Hoagland mouth, and proceeded with the show.

In spite of the fact that kings and presidents awed him no more than did cloak-room boys, Rogers suffered mightily during his courtship. Finally, in an agony of speechlessness, he took to riding his bicycle up and down in front of his beloved's home. On the day when he managed to stand on his head on the handle bars, he felt that triumph was near. At least, he had done all he could do to make himself irresistible before the fascinating school teacher.

Her remark is on record: "I guess I'll have to marry that darn fool to keep him from breaking his neck."

War-torn Europe had a chance to chuckle in 1914 when Rogers, then in the "Midnight Follies," commented on Henry Ford's peace ship. "If he'll take these girls we got right here in this show and let 'em wear the same costumes and march 'em down between the trenches, believe me, the boys will be out of the trenches by Christmas."

Irvin S. Cobb recalled the time he made a bet with Rogers that he couldn't make President Coolidge smile. Rogers and the President were introduced. Rogers said: "I'm sorry, I didn't catch your name." Coolidge said: "I'm Calvin Coolidge," and laughed out loud.

The British were especially delighted by Rogers' jubilee broadcast to England last May in which he wisecracked: "We'd like to have the King and Queen come over here. If they can't come over, let us know if there is any chance of joining you-all on about the same terms as Canada."

Rogers had a favorite story to encourage other actors, back in the days when he was in vaudeville. It went like this: "When I first got a vaudeville job, I had four horses. I dropped one horse and got more money. Then I dropped another horse and got a raise. Finally, I dropped all the horses, and now I get more money with my rope than I did with four horses."

He spun jokes as he spun his rope. Once in the midst of wild applause during his act, he turned to the audience and said: "Yep. Spinnin' a rope's a lot o' fun—providin' your neck ain't in it."

Rogers' parents wanted him to be a clergyman, but he preferred horses. He was a reluctant student. "I studied McGuffey's fourth reader for ten years," he often remarked. To a theatre audience, he once observed: "I could have gone to West Point but I was too proud to speak to a Congressman."

He was an international figure, and was received by the great. When he strode into Mussolini's vast audience chamber, the Italian dictator rose to meet him. Mr. Rogers grinned. Mussolini grinned back. "Interview?" asked Il Duce. "No interview," Rogers assured him. "Hurray! Bravo! No interview!" cried Mussolini, and thereafter they had a fine time.

Shortly before he left on the ill-fated journey, he heard there was a shortage of office space on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot. He called up Darryl Zanuck and offered to rent him the pretentious bungalow dressing room Fox had built for him, but which he never occupied. He unlocked the door once, when President and Mrs. Coolidge were visiting. "They had to sit somewhere," Rogers explained.

According to legend, Rogers was launched on his career by two maiden aunts who sent him to a girls' seminary when he failed to show interest in "book larnin'" at a boys' academy.

Winfield Sheehan this week recalled that when he attempted to induce Rogers to make his first talking picture, "They Had to See Paris," the comedian was modestly reluctant. "Aw, Winnie, I'll prob'ly louse your picture all up," he protested.

SIROVICH ASKS STUDY OF FILMS' MORALS, QUALITY AND PRACTICES

"Broadest Investigation Ever Conducted" Is Demanded by Congressman in a Renewal of His Attack on the Industry

Creation of a special federal committee of seven members of the House of Representatives to make "the broadest investigation of the motion picture industry ever undertaken" was urged last week by Congressman Sirovich of New York. Representative Sirovich has been heard from before in attacks on the industry.

Introducing an empowering resolution which would permit the committee to work during the recess of Congress and submit a report, with recommendations for legislation, at the opening of the next session in January, Representative Sirovich, who for several years has been seeking authority to investigate the industry, revealed that the committee would go into every phase of motion pictures—production, distribution, exhibition, financing, speculation, bankruptcy, reorganization.

The practices of the industry, he said, "present a complete situation whereby illegal control and restraint of trade in the motion and sonant-picture industry are allegedly practiced." Outlining charges which he said have been made against the industry, and which he would investigate, the Congressman, in the preamble of his resolution, declared: "It is asserted that alleged diversion of assets, alleged fraudulent issuance of securities, alleged illegal and harmful speculation in motion picture and sonant-picture-corporation securities by various persons, groups and organizations, has resulted in the impairment of the rights of stockholders, security holders, and creditors and to the value of the stocks, securities, and debts held by them.

"It is alleged that the litigation so inaugurated was conducted in such manner, and so planned, as to secure and to continue to secure the operation and control of many companies and corporations engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion and sonant pictures in certain banking groups, banking houses, and their affiliates and associates, and such alleged actions and conduct are alleged to have caused grave and substantial impairment to the assets of companies and corporations engaged in the motion and sonant-picture industry and have worked great hardships to their respective stockholders, security holders and creditors and grave impairment to the securities issued by such corporations."

Further, he continued, "many church and religious organizations are making serious charges of immorality and lewdness in moving pictures, together with advertisement and glorification of crime, immorality and criminals, to the detriment of public morals."

Outlining the matters to be covered by the investigation, the resolution enumerated "all matters relating to the production, licensing, sale, distribution, financing, incorporation, commercial operations, banking, theatre leasing or ownership, realty, apparatus or methods appertaining to sound production, and all other related and interrelated combinations, affiliations and organizations of production, distribution, license, lease or sale, and presentation or exhibition of the product of and by organizations of all character engaged in or associated or affiliated or financially or commercially interested in the motion and sonant-pictures industry and of all matters and acts relating to or concerned with the issuance or sale or hypothecation of motion and sonant-picture-industry securities of all forms by such organizations directly or through agents or other means, or by banking or security-selling organizations or their associates or affiliates; to further investigate and study the effects of monopolistic control by any single group or combination of groups engaged in the production, distribution or exhibition of motion and sonant pictures or apparatus appertaining thereto; and the extent and character of all contracts, leases or licenses, and all transactions between the various companies and their subsidiaries, affiliates, associates and holding companies, and producers or distributors or exhibitors engaged in the sound-motion-picture industry."

Would Investigate Receiverships

Representative Sirovich would also have Congress investigate all receiverships, bankruptcies and reorganizations, together with "all leasing, building, buying and selling of motion-picture theatres, whether or not equipped with sound-producing and reproduction mechanism or means; all agreements and arrangements for sound recording and reproduction on motion-picture film and the exhibition of same; and all the sums of money paid by the various companies for services, methods, apparatus or systems through royalties or otherwise for use in connection with the production, distribution or exhibition of motion and sonant pictures; and all overt and covert agreements and arrangements with any persons, firms, groups or corporations for effecting and consummating loans or other financial transactions

This phase of the inquiry also would go into "the dissipation of the assets of the various companies in the payment of exorbitant and unmerited salaries and other forms of compensation, bonuses or other remuneration to executives, directors, stage managers and other officers and employes," and also "the corporate and financial history, and the capital structure and the relationship of such companies, and of their subsidiaries, affiliates, associates and holding companies, including the determination of whether or not such structure may enable them to evade taxation, or to conceal, pyramid or absorb profits, or to do any other act contrary to the public interest."

Nine Pages Required to List Phases of Motion Pictures Which His Committee Would Study as Congress Recesses

An important part of the investigation would be "to investigate the character of moving pictures as to their effect upon public morals; and to ascertain whether or not the companies have directly or indirectly, either through their subsidiaries, affiliates, officers, directors, attorneys or trade associations, sought through propaganda or the expenditure of money or the control of channels of publicity to influence or control public opinion, legislative or administrative action, or elections."

Representative Sirovich would also delve into "compensations paid to officials, players, writers, operators and others within and outside the motion, sonant-picture industry, with a view to the correction of any and all alleged abuses of credit, stockholders' rights and security holders' rights and to make a thorough and complete investigation of the receivership or bankruptcy or equity proceedings initiated in the courts of the United States of America by or against individuals, firms, companies, or corporations engaged in the motion and sonant-picture industry or any of its allied, associated or affiliated elements and of committees who have appeared in court proceedings or in any other manner have become connected therewith."

Four pages of "whereases" were required to outline conditions which the New York representative would probe as chairman of the group.

Members who waded through the nine-page resolution pointed out that Mr. Sirovich could call as witnesses every banker who ever made a loan to a producer, distributor or exhibitor, owners of the theatres rented to exhibitors, authors who have sold stories to producers, manufacturers and distributors of equipment, actors and union agents, as well as producers, distributors and exhibitors.

Because of its broad scope, the investigation is expected to be the subject of opposition if the House is asked to vote on it before the end of the session.

Investigations of motion picture receiverships and reorganizations have already been conducted, or are in progress.

Selznick Charges MGM With Loy Inaccuracies

Myron Selznick, Coast agent, this week charged MGM with "certain inaccuracies" of statement relative to the studio's difficulty with Myrna Loy. Published statements in connection with the case called for an explanation, Mr. Selznick said. Miss Loy's contract, he said, carries a 40-week per year work guarantee and that prior to her departure she was engaged daily in carrying out company instructions. However, her salary was suspended while she was en route to Europe.

Nicholas M. Schenck, president of MGM, issued the following statement with reference to the controversy. "Our Company has in no way violated the contract for the services of Miss Loy. On the contrary, each letter of it has been observed and all we ask is that Miss Loy fulfill her obligations. Miss Loy receives $1,500 weekly with gradual increases during the term of her employment. She has chosen to demand arbitrarily an immediate increase to $3,000 weekly. The company by all legal means will enforce and protect its rights under the contract."

Brandt to Head Buying Combine

Harry Brandt, independent circuit owner of New York, will probably be president of new Independent Theatre Circuit buying combine, at a reputed salary of $1,000 a week. Election is being delayed until the sponsors have actually received membership checks from 75 of the 80 owners who pledged themselves to participate. Checks have already been received from 60.

The proposed booking combine now in the process of development in Philadelphia was nearer formation following a meeting of independents on Tuesday at the Broadwood Hotel.

In Detroit, the long existent Cooperative Theatres buying combine reported its membership had increased to 64 independent theatres of a possible 155 now operating in that area.

Spectrum Increases Program of Westerns

Spectrum Pictures Corporation has announced an increase in its program of action westerns for 1935-1936. Under a new contract drawn up by H. William Fitelson, Spectrum's legal representative, Ray Kirkwood will produce the entire series.

Bill Cody has been re-signed for another series of six, in which his ten-year-old son, Bill, Jr., will co-star. They are "The Great Stampede," 'Fighting Blood," "The Death Trail," "Riders of Death Valley," "Lawless Frontier" and "Night Raiders." Bob Custer was also signed by Spectrum for six westerns.

Paramount Premieres On Two Productions

Paramount had two world premiere showings in New York this week, with Cecil B. DeMille's production of "The Crusades" started on its two-a-day extended run at the Astor on Wednesday evening and "Annapolis Farewell" on Thursday at the New York Paramount. The New York premiere of "Annapolis Farewell" was one of three on the film held on Thursday. The others were at the Earle Theatre in Washington and the Fox theatre in San Diego.

MGM Production Abroad Not Definite, Says Rubin

MGM has not yet definitely decided on its production plans abroad, according to J. Robert Rubin, vice-president and general counsel, who returned this week to New York after a six-weeks' vacation and business trip to Europe. Mr. Rubin said he had signed a number of contracts for literary works and musical compositions, but indicated he could not disclose any details. He did not sign any talent, he said.

Franklin to Make Own Film

Sidney Franklin, director, plans a picture to be filmed in the Canadian Rockies, for which he will be author, cameraman, director and producer, following the completion of "The Dark Angel," and the fulfillment of an assignment with another company, believed to be MGM.

FILMS, RADIO, HOTELS BEHIND ASCAP ATTACK

Combination of Music Users Is Charged with Harassing the Society in Order to Destroy It

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in New York is studying, with a view to retaliation, the possible effects on its future of what some believe to be a concerted attack in state courts and legislatures against its operations by combined motion picture, radio and hotel interests.

Victories already won by the users of copyrighted music of members of the ASCAP in Wisconsin, Washington, Louisiana and Georgia are already threatening the Society's very existence in those states, and ASCAP now faces the task of conducting a vigorous defense before the attack spreads to other parts.

Added to Louisiana's and Georgia's heavy tax enactments, directed against ASCAP, on organizations licensing public performers of copyrighted music, was last week's court injunction in the state of Washington preventing the society from continuing to do business there in its present form, and the new Wisconsin law providing for the licensing, taxation and control of such organizations.

The Washington court decision was one of the most severe blows, preventing the society from operating in its present form and forbidding it to interfere with exhibitors and others in the continued use of music of ASCAP members, while exhibitors are ordered not to pay any further royalties until the court decrees otherwise.

The immediate result this week was the appointment of Tracy Griffin, Seattle attorney, as temporary receiver for the Washington ASCAP branch, and a hearing was set for August 26.

ASCAP cannot enter into any further agreements for the licensing of its music in the state of Washington until it convinces the court that the required changes made in its structure and operations no longer violate the law against monopolizing the sale, use and publication of popular music, as was charged by the court in the decision handed down in favor of Attorney General G. W. Hamilton and motion picture, radio and hotel interests.

A test of the constitutionality of the Wisconsin law appears certain, likewise a test of the heavy tax levied against such organizations as ASCAP in Louisiana and Georgia. The Society, however, will take no immediate steps pending efforts of those states to collect the taxes or to enforce any provisions of the new laws.

Private opinion holds that the combined film-radio-hotel attack is responsible for Wisconsin's new regulatory law and the enjoinment in Washington, and that the combination threatens similar attacks on several other fronts.

ASCAP, aware of the active opposition, describes it as a campaign to "harass" the Society in order to exhaust it with the defending and contesting of court actions and stifling legislation, which statutes, the Society believes, are, as enacted to date, unconstitutional as a whole.

Burkan Blames "The Unholy Three"

Nathan Burkan, noted theatrical attorney and counsel at the head of ASCAP's defense forces, was quoted this week in the press as saying that the "unholy three" of films, radio and hotels, is seeking to destroy the Society and make music "piracy" a safe practice.

It was frankly declared at ASCAP headquarters in New York that, if the Wisconsin regulatory and tax law is enforced and left uncontested, similar legislation would undoubtedly be sought and obtained by anti-ASCAP forces in state legislatures.

Exhibitors in other states were reported to be engaged in a deep study of the Wisconsin law with a view to having similar legislation introduced in their commonwealths.

The new Wisconsin law, known as the Graas bill, and made effective with the affixing of Governor LaFollette's signature, provides that any music broker, except the original composer, who wishes to effect contracts for playing copyrighted music must obtain a state license, submit complete information about officials of the company, salaries, rates charged and fees paid, and must pay a five per cent tax on its national gross receipts for the preceding year.

The measure was said to have been sponsored directly by the Wisconsin Independent Theatre Owners Association. It passed both the House and Senate by large majorities.

The stringencies of the Washington state court decision, reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on August 17, page 21, are equaled only by the provisions set forth in Louisiana's law, which provides for payment of a $5,000 annual tax for each parish within the state in which a music licensing organization operates in selling copyrighted music rights. There are 60 parishes in Louisiana, and, therefore, ASCAP's annual tax bill would approximate $300,000. Against this is ASCAP's reputed gross income of $42,000 a year from the state.

Fifty Friends at Sheehan Luncheon

Admittedly free, for the first time in 25 years, of all business obligations, commitments and "starting dates," Winfield Sheehan sailed on the S.S. Normandie on Wednesday with his bride, Maria Jeritza, for a three or four months' holiday in Europe.

Reports of a Sheehan deal with Paramount were dismissed by the production executive with the reiteration of the announcement that he made when he retired from Fox:—"I have made no commitments to join any motion picture corporation," and he will not until his return from Europe.

Guest of honor at a luncheon attended by some 50 of his friends at the Lotos Club, 110 West 57th Street, on Tuesday, Mr. Sheehan said only that he would return to California and the motion picture industry after his vacation.

The affair was enlivened by Morton Downey's rendition of four songs to his own piano accompaniment. Charles Francis Coe, novelist, president of the Lotos Club, and former member of Mr. Sheehan's staff at the Fox studio, was the toastmaster. Among the other speakers and guests were Edward P. Mulrooney, former New York police commissioner and now chairman of the New York State Liquor Control Board; George M. Cohan; Nathan Burkan, lawyer; W. G. Van Schmus, managing director of the Music Hall; J. J. McCarthy, director of the MPPDA's Advertising Advisory Council; former Police Chief Inspector John O'Brien; Martin Green; John C. Flinn, of Variety; Morton Downey and Martin Quigley.

Others among Mr. Sheehan's friends who were on hand to wish him bon voyage included: Walter J. Moore, Ray Henderson, Maurice MacKenzie, Jack Connolly, E. M. Fay, Colvin Brown, Terry Ramsaye, Don Mersereau, Sid Silverman, P. S. Harrison, Eddie Dowling, Maurice Kann, Richard Bennett, James Hanley, O. O. McIntyre, George J. Atwell, A. Coast MPPDA Bans "Maedchen"

The Hollywood office of The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America has banned the picture "Maedchen in Uniform" in the United States, according to a letter received by John Krimsky, who handles the film in this country in association with Gifford Cochran. The picture played in the United States three years ago and has been dubbed with English subtitles.

Joseph I. Breen in a letter to Mr. Krimsky said "the picture was in violation of the Production Code and unacceptable for public exhibition in theatres before mixed audiences." Mr. Krimsky said he would appeal to the board of directors of the MPPDA in New York.

Fairbanks To Produce Pictures in Tokio, Report

Douglas Fairbanks plans to take a group of actors and actresses from Hollywood to Tokio for production of Japanese films for export trade, according to an International News Service dispatch from Tokio. The dispatch said the films would be distributed by United Artists, and that Mr. Fairbanks would form an American-Japanese studio.

Court Tests for Preferred Date Law in 2 States

At least two pieces of new legislation that are adverse to the motion picture must stand a court test. Large distributors are priming for federal court fights against the new laws in both Ohio and Wisconsin prohibiting preferred playing time.

RKO's test of the law in Ohio will come in federal court in Cincinnati in October. In Milwaukee, Federal Judge F. A. Geiger issued temporary restraining orders prohibiting Wisconsin officials from enforcing the law there.

The test of the Wisconsin measure, (both would forbid distributors from prescribing play dates in their contracts with exhibitors), was started by Fox and MGM, Edward S. Mack acting as counsel for both. He argued that the new law was unconstitutional because it interfered with the rights of the distributors under the United States Copyright Act. He said he was preparing similar cases for the other large distributors.

Judge Geiger issued the restraining orders pending a hearing set for September 30th on a permanent injunction.

Other Legislative Activities

Distributors in Florida were protesting the state documentary stamp tax, claiming that film contracts are executed beyond the limits of the state and, therefore, are not subject to the tax, a ten-cent levy on each $100.

Illinois enacted its six-day working law, but some Illinois theatre men were wondering how it applied to their business. The law states that every person must have 24 consecutive hours free from their job. There is no problem to owners of large theatres, but those who operate in smaller towns, only at night, and seven nights weekly, are wondering how the statute will effect them.

Kansas exhibitors breathed easier when they heard that a special state legislative session may be avoided. A 10 per cent admission tax had been talked of as one means of raising revenue.

Massachusetts' legislature adjourned after the industry had succeeded in blocking an unusual number of measures adverse to motion pictures. However, before adjournment, Governor James Curley signed a bill for a 10 per cent surtax on all individual and corporation incomes.

Missouri owners will fight the plan of state revenue officials to charge them, and other merchants, too, for the "punch cards" by which Missouri proposes to collect the new one per cent sales tax, which becomes effective August 27.

Cut in Operators' Salaries Expected

A new basic wage scale being negotiated between operators' Local 360 and Loew and RKO in New York will, it is reported, provide for a reduction but that the cut will not approximate the 41 per cent reduction sought by the circuits.

A sliding scale, taking into consideration the capacity of the house, the run and admission price, is expected to be agreed upon. It was reported the agreement may provide for a maximum of $1.90 an hour for operators at the "A" houses. The present scale is $2.12½ an hour. A two-year contract is expected to result.

The contract also may provide a five-day week, and a minimum wage at any house of $1.25 an hour.

With talks of a merger between Local 306 and the Allied Operators apparently proving groundless, attorneys are understood to have plans drawn up for a fusion of Allied with Empire State, in opposition to Local 306. The two unions claim a combined membership of 900.

The deal is being held up temporarily by a court order preventing Empire State's coalition with any other union, but efforts are being made to have it dissolved.

Any atempt to bring about the union of Allied and Empire was denied, however, by a spokesman for the latter body. Instead, he said, a merging of Empire with Local 306 was more likely.

Cross-picketing continues in New York's theatre district, and 250 pickets, all members of Local 306, have been arrested. Chief targets are the Brandt houses, using Allied operators. Allied is retaliating by picketing Loew and Skouras theatres. Magistrate Brodsky warned that if there was any additional picketing in the Times Square sector he would impose severe sentences. On Wednesday, however, Times Square theatres were the centers of disturbances more severe than before, many pickets being beaten and a number of arrests being made.

From Chicago came word that Allied of Illinois is worried about the situation there, and George E. Browne, IATSE president, is expected there to discuss a new scale. The six-day law passed by the legislatures will work a hardship on exhibitors since extra men will have to be employed. New contracts are due September 1.

In St. Louis there is dissention in union ranks, and Robert Thompson, a member of the local, has been placed in charge by the IATSE, following suspension of the officers. Mayor Dickmann's arbitrators have worked out a peaceful settlement of the dispute involving the employment of white operators at colored houses. It recommended the colored operators join the local.

Spring, C. F. Springer and Mr. Matthews. Active management will be in charge of E. J. Weinke, in charge of production; W. H. Hirschfield, in charge of sales, and J. A. Drama

This is another version of the topical gangster-federal man theme, carrying the usual melodramatic, romantic contrast and only a modicum of comedy. By nature it is exciting, capitalizes on the usual suspense thread, condemning society's enemies to the "crime does not pay" tune and heroizing the defenders of law and order.

While the mechanics of the drama follow the familiar path, a rather new motivating idea is adopted. This time, rather than having the killing of a G-Man as the spark that fires the Department of Justice into activity, the government coldly sets out to get its man. The checking of falsified income tax reports, counterparted in actuality and many fiction stories, is the idea that sets the action going.

With Carston, the boss racketeer, in a role that somewhat parallels Al Capone, newspaper reporter Bradford, enjoying free and easy access to the underworld, falls in love with the gangster's secretary, Julie. When the government goes to work on Carston via the income tax route, Bradford comes into his own as a G-Man. Appealing to Julie's patriotism and love for him, he prevails upon her to let him make photostatic pictures of incriminating pages. Carston, arrested, considers the case a formula push over until he discovers that his supposedly loyal secretary will testify against him. The gangster minions kidnap her, then follows the expected chase and gun battle in which most of the mobsters are wiped out and the way cleared for Carston to spend a few years in a federal penitentiary.

Whatever demand there remains for the combination character picture dictates its showmanship treatment. Names of players appearing in conjunction with the title and vivid descriptions of the show's theme look to be the most available commercial angles.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Drama

Direction by Herbert Brenon and the appearance of Greta Nissen in a leading role are assets of this adaptation of a Roland Pertwee story. W. H. Berry, famous British stage comedian, makes a very small part one of the features of the film. The dramatic values are artificial, so that "strong" episodes appear forced, but the acting and finish of individual scenes is superior to that of a lot of British work.

William Barton, a prosperous art dealer in London, is obsessed with the desire to avenge an injury received many years before from Sir Henry Markham, then his employer. Markham's son Harry is now employed by Barton. A typist steals £500 in notes from the office safe and Barton hides his knowledge of her guilt in order to plant the theft on the boy. The fact that he is the only individual but Barton to know the safe combination, and other circumstantial evidence, point to the boy. Barton, staying with Markham for the weekend, allows it to be known that he has discharged Harry and more or less openly admits to Markham his intention of disgracing the boy publicly.

The father tries to establish an alibi by discovering all the details of his son's movements on the evening of the theft. There is a gap of an hour; Harry has actually spent it at a road-house with Barton's wife, though only for the purpose of breaking off an intrigue with her out of loyalty to his fiancée, Ann. The fact that the boy has been summoned for speeding enables the father to discover, through the police, that he went to the road-house. The landlord, summoned to Markham's house, lets the cat out of the bag by his recognition of Mrs. Barton as the lady guest.

Greta Nissen, Ivan Samson, Patric Knowles and Berry are the best of the cast.—Allan, London.

Top Hat

(Radio)

Musical

Previous pictures teaming Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers from "Flying Down to Rio" to "The Gay Divorcee" having established a vogue for the pair, "Top Hat" consolidates that public interest and its relative entertainment-showmanship value to the maximum degree.

The picture is a sparkling concoction of dancing, singing and comedy romance set against pretentious backgrounds. It offers much to intrigue popular attention. Astaire's solo dancing is a treat; so are his numbers with Ginger Rogers. There are five songs for which Irving Berlin contributed the music and lyrics, including Astaire's solo, "Top Hat, White Tie and Tails;" his song-dance duet with Miss Rogers, "Cheek to Cheek," and the spectacular ensemble feature "Piccolino," perhaps destined to be the successor to "Carioca" and "The Continental."

Though the cast is small, it provides all that is necessary to carry the semi-farce comedy romance motivation which has the leads tossed into a mistaken identity love affair. There's no drama; that quality being present only to a minor degree in a little suspense that is given a continual comedy twist.

The picture moves with speed and charm. While it is evident from the identity of the stars that it is going to be a dance specialty musical comedy, the contrasting features are smartly woven into the story thread in a manner that convinces that they actually belong there and are not merely inserted as stopgaps. Travers comes to London to appear in Harwick's show. Practicing his dancing in his hotel room, he first annoys Dale Tremont, then meets her and they fall in love.

She gets the idea that Jerry is Harwick, husband of her pal, Madge. As Bates' comedy in situations with his master Hardwick add spice to the yarn, Dale runs away to Venice to avoid trouble with Madge, who is rather thrilled to think that her husband is having a fling. Jerry follows. He tries to continue his romance, but gets the cold shoulder until Dale, who is being trailed by Bates, thinks she marries the he-modiste Alberto whose motto is "a kiss for the ladies, a sword for the men." In the climax, following the "Piccolino," it is revealed that the marriage was not legitimate, having been performed by Bates; that Jerry and Hardwick are a couple of other fellows, much to Dale's delight.

Because of the prestige they have established, Astaire and Rogers, together with the production in its entirety, are the dominating interest creating and selling features. As the picture is continually clean, there being no semblance of any risque situations, it is one that can be offered to specialized and general audiences in the full confidence that it will amuse.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Way Down East

(20th-Fox)

Melodrama

"Way Down East" has long been considered the great American melodrama. Here, retaining all the intensity of its essential tender emotional appeal, it is endowed with all the advantages made possible by the scope of modern picture making art and understanding production technique. This condition almost automatically guaranteeing its entertainment worth is also indicative of its showmanship-exploitation availability.

A melodrama, but not melodramatic, the motivating story is heart-appealing in character.

It is sentimental and sympathy-stimulating, but not overdone. There isn't a trace of hokum in the entire production. The drama is honest and believable, gripping in its realism. The comedy is natural and human. The suspense and thrill marking its sensational anti-climax is terrifying yet fascinating. Many will remember "Way Down East" as a silent of more than a decade ago. It was a great success then. Spun out of 18 karat material in story value and personalities presented of proved worth, it is a solid gold entertainment-showmanship asset. There is every reason to anticipate, that sold energetically, it should create a more memorable impression today.

As fresh and new as 1935 production, direction, acting, writing and photographic talent can make it, the time of the story is a couple of generations ago; the locale a rural New England village and farm home. The atmosphere of the setting, occasion and character of its people captured with charm and vividness, it is the story of Anna Moore, her fear-tinged happiness in new found love, the heartbreak of her disillusionment as she is made the victim of cruel, vicious gossip, her near tragedy and final triumph.

The story is told by players living in its spirit. It presents Rochelle Hudson, flowering into stardom, as Anna, the girl whose happiness, sorrow and tragedy would win the affection of all who see her. Henry Fonda, the hero, working with the same subdued artistry, surpasses his performance in "Farmer Takes a Wife." Russell Simpson is the stern, religiously upright New Englander; Spring Byington is his motherly, understanding wife. Edward Trevor is Sanderson, the city slicker who took advantage of Anna's trusting, childlike love to betray her, who perishes in the spectacular ice crackup as David saves Anna. Margaret Hamilton is the gossiping menace. They accounting for the drama, comedy is provided by Slim Summerville, Andy Devine and Al Lydell.

To the worth of the story and showmanship value of names must be added the commercial importance of production assets as a means of intriguing public attention. They permit the exploitation of such incidents as the barn dance, quilting bee, skating and hayrick parties and the thrilling, sensational chase on the blizzard-swept breaking river ice.

A big picture, there are many ways in which the show may be sold. It seems, however, the best result may be obtained by advertising "Way Down East" as an event in modern motion picture presentation that everyone, old and young, owes it to himself to see.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Gay Deception

(20th-Fox)

Comedy Romance

There are lots of surprises in this picture. It is of the class in personalities, story idea and supporting production values that may well bring real activity at the box office. First it presents Francis Lederer and Frances Dee in two surprising and charming characterizations. Both, save Lederer's appearance in "Romance in Manhattan," have previously been presented in dramatic roles. This time they are comedians, furnishing a brand of entertainment that apparently is their forte. Here Lederer is the heart-throb that women from 16 to 66 may go wild over. Miss Dee is the charmer who should similarly intrigue the men.

The story is a light, sparkling comedy romance, woven of the stuff that is the day dream of every girl. The title completely explains it, a gay deception, peeping into the secret heart of a lass bound on a grand adventure. In theme it is not exactly new, but the manner in which it is handled here with a continual concentration on elements that have often demonstrated their box office-entertainment worth, it is highly refreshing.

A harassed stenographer, Mirabel wins $5,000 in a lottery. Disregarding sound advice, she goes to New York to live like a millionairess as long as the money lasts. She lands in a swank hotel. There Sandro, a real prince, working incognito as a bell boy, takes her in charge. Their experiences together in a series of exciting incidents always provocative of laughter, Mirabel is duped into buying tickets for a grand ball welcoming the prince on the pretext that she will be with a party of socialites who will have him under their wing. Heartbroken when she discovers that she's just the victim of a slick salesmanship, she confides her sorrow to Sandro.

He revealing his true identity, which in view of all he has done before doesn't make any too much of an impression on the girl, decides that he, the star of the event shall be her escort. He takes her, even though he has to steal a complete evening outfit, and when the situation is so contrived that Sandro is revealed as a fakir and slammed into jail, Mirabel's sorrow is tragic. But there's a happy ending. Sandro is finally recognized as a true prince and there's no doubt that the ex-stenographer will be his princess.

With plenty to sell in the way of story, personality and production values, the most necessary consideration is to realize that they are there. A campaign that assures patrons that "The Gay Deception" will be a happy event for them is directly in line. Advertising, publicity and exploitation, there being a whole host of ideas on which to base the last angle, calculated to arouse the maximum amount of interest for initial performances, may be found effective.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Here Comes Cookie

(Paramount)

Comedy

This is the kind of comedy that should bring the fun fans to the box office. It is ridiculous nonsense in dialogue, action and situation from start to finish. It is based on an insane idea and is played to accentuate the showmanship and entertainment value of laugh-a-minute amusement. If fun is what the patrons are looking for, this show is one that can be presented to them with full confidence that they will be entertained.

Hilarity is the keynote and sole objective. The idea of the story which serves as a peg on which to hang all the foolishness, is superfunny in its own right. Wealthy Harrison Allen, fearing that his daughter, Gracie, is going to marry a man he doesn't like, and who, thereby, stands a chance of inheriting his fortune, wills it to his eccentric offspring for a two-month period confident that she'll have no difficulty getting rid of a good part of it. Neither he nor anyone else can even vaguely anticipate how she'll do it. Reading in a paper that a lot of actors are destitute, she round up a group of at-liberty vaudeville acts and in a way that is serious to her but funny to everyone else conceives the idea of producing a show at a $20 top that will go a long way towards breaking her father because she thinks nobody will pay that price no matter how grand or horrible the show might be. Burns, supposed to be her father's manager, is put in the dog house, Allen is left destitute and the mad collection of acts careen their merry way making ready for the show. In the end, as monkey acts, trick bicycle riders, knife throwers, sharpshooters, tumblers, club swingers, jugglers, a one-man band and pirate singers do their stuff, the old man arrives home in a daze after having been left penniless, to be further amazed that Hollywood producers have gone wild over Gracie.

Something which should satisfy the appetite of the most avid comedy devotees, the film, with the names of Burns and Allen as first clue to what to expect, should be circused in such a manner that its content is understood fully by the prospective patrons.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Produced by William LeBaron. Directed by Norman McLeon. Original by Sam Mintz and Don Hartman. Screen play by Don Hartman. Music and lyrics by Richard Whiting and Leo Robin. Photographed by Gilbert Warrenton. Running time, when seen in Hollywood, 65 minutes. Release date, August 30, 1935. The March of Time

(RKO)

Excellent

This, the fifth issue of the "March of Time" and first under RKO distribution, is excellently done. The photography and the buildup material is of the highest order. In three episodes, all of current news interest, it shows first the United States Army in time of mobilization, engaged in war maneuvers this month at Pine Camp, N. Y., the largest operation since the World War. The second episode presents Father Coughlin in various stages of his career from the time when, as a young priest, he was starting a new parish at Royal Oak, Mich., through his rise to radio fame and millions of followers to the present point of his career, the forming of the National Union for Social Justice. In France, the third episode indicates the turbulent political situation that has culminated in the creation of a new force, the Croix de Feu (Crosses of Fire), which is pledged to combat communism and corrupt politics, and which is said to be 400,000 strong.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Mexican Company Plans Villa Film

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

The hard driven life and sanguinary exploits of the late General Francisco (Pancho) Villa, guerrila warfare chieftain who sat for only a few minutes in the presidential chair, have welded themselves into dearly beloved sagas in Mexico. There is now more interest than ever in Pancho and his doings, although twenty eventful years have passed since his violent death. Metro cashed in to a very considerable extent on this interest with its "Viva Villa," a picture which rewarded them handsomely in Mexico.

Mexican producers have been quick to sense the opportunities of increased interest in Villa. Several of them, including one production written, directed and produced by Felipe Mier, former Warner Mexico City manager, have done pretty well with Villa pictures. But the most pretentious of all these made-in-Mexico Pancho pictures is in the offing. The big picture is "Vamonos Con Pancho Villa" ("Let's Go With Pancho Villa"), based upon the novel of the same name written by a Mexican newspaper man who was a personal friend of the late guerrila chieftain. The picture will be put into production in September on the very ground that Villa reddened with blood and fire by the Compañia Cinematografica Latino Americana, S. A., moving spirit of which is Alberto Ricardo Pani, son of Engineer Alberto J. Pani, former minister of finance and one of Mexico's ranking capitalists. The direction will be by Fernando de Fuentes, former manager of Paramount's display cinema in Mexico City, who has several native productions to his credit.

The picture is to have an English version. Mr. de Fuentes has gone to Hollywood to select a cast and make other arrangements for the production in English in Mexico. It is proposed to exhibit this version widely throughout the English-speaking world. Depicting the authentic Villa, though soft-pedaling his most gory exploits, will be the spirit of both versions. Work on the English version is scheduled to start in October.

Five other Spanish-language features and twelve shorts are to be made by this enterprise during its 1935-36 season. Company headquarters are in Mexico City.

The strike of attaches for more pay and less work that closed six large Mexico City neighborhood cinemas, threatened to involve four other like houses and a first-run cinema, and cost the exhibitors around $30,000 in lost business during the shutdown of about a month, has been settled with the signing of agreements with the exhibitors that allow a slight wage raise and some minor concessions. This agreement, it is expected, will prevent strikes of cinema employees in the capital for at least two years.

The National Institute of the Cinematographic Industry, now in formation, will be granted 2,000,000 pesos by the Ministry of National Economy to aid in making native films. The Institute also will obtain national and international distribution of the product and act as censor.

EQUITY APPEALS FOR FILMS' COOPERATION

Association Bulletin Declares Screen Is "Not Equipped" to Develop Talent at Present

The assertion that the motion picture industry "is not equipped" to develop players and directors and writers, "and under the present setup it probably never will be," is made by Actors' Equity Association in its latest plea to the film and radio for "cooperation—not competition" with the stage of the drama.

Equity, in its position as a dues-collecting actors' union, has assumed the role of teacher to educate both screen and radio that the stage is their basic source of talent material and any competitive influence which they exert over the stage only limits that source.

"From their very first inception motion pictures and radio broadcasting interests, alike, appear to have regarded the legitimate theatre solely as a competitor which was to be eliminated where possible and vigorously opposed at every other point," Equity complains.

"There are, undoubtedly, a certain number of persons who prefer the legitimate theatre, with all its faults, to any other form of entertainment now available. Perhaps if there were no more theatre left they would unanimously turn to and be satisfied with motion pictures or radio broadcasting. It is more likely that they would create some sort of a theatre for themselves to fill the void thus made.

Calls Stage Training Best

"But," continues Equity, "the legitimate theatre is of much greater value to motion pictures and to radio than these patrons might be, even if they were much more numerous than they are and even if their allegiance could be captured merely by disposing of the legitimate theatre.

"For in spite of long continued and extraordinarily earnest efforts to develop their own sources both radio and the motion pictures still find their best actors, writers and directors are those whose original training was received in the legitimate theatre.

"It is quite probable," Equity believes, "that the leaders of those industries never really stopped to consider this problem. As they needed raw material both in men and stories they reached out and took them where they found them. It may have seemed only a coincidence, it may have been a matter entirely without remark that those men who were in the theatre, that the best material for their purposes was there, too.

"What would it profit them if they could entirely dispose of the theatre if they found that by so doing they had deprived themselves of their best training school and proving ground," asks Equity. "Purely from the standpoint of their own selfish interests they would have dealt themselves a terribly punishing blow and one from which they would be long recovering."

Sees Legitimate Permanent

Equity does not believe that either the motion picture or the radio, or anyone else, will ever dispose of the legitimate theatre. Equity, it was said, "has encountered, in its long career, sterner and more ruthless enemies than they and, though changed and changing still and even if considerably restricted in scope and influence, it has survived those enmities and will survive this competition. For neither these rivals nor any others have quite satisfied the hunger of people to participate in the action passing before their eyes as the legitimate theatre does, nor can their auditors ever succeed, as the theatre's do, in identifying themselves with the characters of the play."

"But it is not enough that the overlords of radio and motion pictures should realize that they should not actively oppose the legitimate theatre," Equity continues. "They should feel that they actually have a stake in the legitimate theatre and that, far from competing with it, they ought to cooperate with it.

"They ought to encourage their players to return occasionally to the legitimate theatre and find them better actors for that return. They ought to see that cities throughout the country from which the motion picture interests have vigorously and too often successfully excluded touring productions and stock companies in the past few years should be opened again to the legitimate theatre. In the long run their properties will be benefitted by the variety of entertainment offered.

"In short, they should search for points at which they might strengthen and assist the legitimate theatre instead of attempting to inflict further damage at those points.

"The motion pictures have no minor leagues for their talent to correspond to stock companies or touring companies. They have to depend on some other institution (the legitimate theatre), to do the sorting out and the preliminary instruction. When these players and directors and writers are developed, motion pictures with their greater wealth can step in and take them over. But the industry is not equipped to develop them itself and under the present setup it probably never will be.

"Nor has radio, in spite of its host of little stations and amateur tryouts, ever succeeded in building up a sufficient flow of acceptable material. For much of its outstanding talent it, too, has looked unconsciously to the theatre.

"The situation has developed largely, if not entirely, because the leaders of these industries have been too busy building them up and running them to consider where their basic interests lay. If they would stop now for that consideration they would find that their interests lie in the direction of cooperating with the theatre—not competition," concluded Equity.

Shine's Expansion Plan Confirmed by Lazara

Louis Lazara, Ohio zone manager for Shine Enterprises, has confirmed the report that the circuit is expanding generally in Ohio. He is looking for theatres in all parts of the state. Recent additions are the Forum. Norwalk, and houses in Bucyrus, Van Wert and Wooster. The Vine, at Mt. Vernon has been enlarged.

Arpad Szemere in New York

Arpad Szemere, representing several foreign distributors, is in New York to look over the independent field for product and to arrange for distribution of European films in this country. Roman Rebush of Kinematrade and Empire Film Distributors will represent him in America.

BRITISH PRODUCERS HIT CHILD AGE LAW

Officials of Baird Television Institute Control of Sale of Shares Outside Country

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Because the Young Persons Act, 1933, prohibits the commercial employment of children under 12 years of age, British producers see a danger of Hollywood carrying off any juveniles of Shirley Temple calibre who may be discovered in these islands.

Recently three British production companies have been fined for employing under-age children. In the latest case the City Film Corporation had to pay 10/– ($2) on each of four charges at Penge Police Court, arising out of the shooting of crowd scenes including young children for "Sharps and Flats". The smallness of the penalty (the maximum is £5 ($25) is evidence that the offense was a technical one; it was proved that the children had been well cared for by special guardians.

Urging a revision of the law, producers point out the injustice of allowing young children, under suitable safeguards, to appear on the stage or before the radio microphone and barring them from the film studio. The Act, they say, was intended to prevent the exploitation of child labor in factories and the Home Office is classing film studios as factories because no one remembered the necessity of exempting them. Before the Act was passed children were used under special conditions and there were no complaints.

Conferences Being Held

Production chiefs like Walter Mycroft of B.I.P. and Harold Boxall of Gaumont-British see a possible necessity of eliminating child interest from all scripts and a danger that Hollywood will monopolize an appealing type of film and the talent needed for it.

To remedy the matter, conferences are in progress between the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, leading film executives and representatives of Trades Unions including studio labor, and Mr. Neville Kearney of the F.B.I. is drafting an amending Bill for introduction in the House of Commons in the Fall.

Special precautions to control the sale of shares in Baird Television, Ltd., to parties outside the British Isles were announced in a circular from the directors published in London last week.

The official statement is that "no transfer of shares in this company purporting to be signed or executed out of Great Britain will be accepted for registration or certification unless the signature or execution of such transfer is attested either by a British Consul or Vice Consul or by a Notary Public."

In further comment the directors directly refer to the necessity of controlling transfers executed in the United States. It is asserted that there has been a considerable purchase of Baird shares in the United States and that some of these transfers have been in irregular or incomplete form.

Against this reading is the fact that a majority holding in Baird is, according to general belief, firmly held by Mr. Isidore Ostrer, personally or for Gaumont-British. The latter, by the amendment to its constitution accomplished by Col. A. C. Bromhead during his chairmanship, cannot legally pass out of British control.

Reunion Expands Plans

Reunion Films, Ltd., which made a reputation here by its discovery of outstanding Continental pictures, and which handled "Masquerade in Vienna," is to expand as a separate unit instead of merging itself with the Captain Dixey Company, Anglo-American Renters, Ltd., as was originally planned.

New capital has been raised and J. W. Gossage, C. B. Morgan, F. W. Shepherd and Peter Witt are now directors. British production as well as further purchases in the Continental market are planned by the enlarged Reunion, of which the leading figures have been Victor Creer and Peter Witt.

Dawes Back with Fox

R. Sutton Dawes, for many years general sales manager of Fox Film Co., Ltd., has returned to that position, which he vacated to develop exhibiting interests. Recently Dawes-Beard theatres in London were transferred to A.B.C. and Mr. Dawes has now no holding in that field. His return to Fox fills a gap created by the absence of Charles H. Phillipp on sick leave, on the conclusion of which he will return to the Fox organization.

Boot-Rank Studio Floated

Charles Boot of the big building firm of Henry Boot and Sons, and Joseph Rank of British National Films, Ltd., are named as first directors of Pinewood Studios, Ltd., registered as a private company with a capital of £150,000 in 50,000 each of "A," "B" and "C" shares of £1 value, for the purpose of erecting studios at Ivar Hall, Buckinghamshire. Details of the Pinewood studio scheme have already been published in the HERALD. Charles Boot, who recently revealed that Mr. Rank and he were also interested in the finance of Technicolor in England, is at present in America with the intention of investigating equipment at Hollywood.

P.D.C. Has Production Unit

P.D.C., Ltd., recently revived as a renting organization with Simon Rowson associated in its direction with Reginald Smith, has moved to Wardour street from the premises at Great Newport street which it has occupied practically continuously from the time of their vacation by the old Goldwyn Company, of which Mr. Smith was secretary. Concurrently P.D.C. announces the formation of an allied production organization, New Ideal Pictures, Ltd., which will start immediately on a five-picture program in the Hammersmith studios formed by Mr. Smith. This title revives a name famous in the history of British production; the original Ideal Company, with Simon and Harry Rowson as its leading spirits, maintained continuity of production from before the War until the formation of the Gaumont-British Corporation, with which it was merged, the name being retained until quite recently.

Famous Showman Dies

W. G. Greenfield, recognized for many years as one of the outstanding showmen in the British film field, died recently. Making his reputation at the Scala, Leeds, Mr. Greenfield opened the Paramount, Manchester, and controlled it until his death.

Wilcox Sets Plans

Herbert Wilcox has arranged his program for the first year of the independent unit permitted him under his new five-year deal with British and Dominions, to be called Herbert Wilcox Productions, Ltd. General Distributors, Ltd., C. M. Woolf's new company, will handle release. Each film is to cost £75,000. The first will be "Street Singer," with Arthur Tracy and Anna Neagle. The second will be "The Blue Lagoon," to be made in Honolulu in Technicolor. A third will be a musical, with Tullio Carminati probably playing opposite Miss Neagle. Mr. Wilcox plans to direct two each year himself, supervise all of his independent product and continue supervision of the B. & D. product.

Federal Stage Academy Plan Not Expected to Get Far

Construction on one of the Potomac River islands at Washington of a group of theatres to be known as the Federal Academy of Arts of the Stage, the cost of several million dollars to be borne by the Public Works Administration, has been proposed to sympathy-lacking PWA officials.

As a spur to acceptance of the plan, Administration officials were informed that Congress would pass legislation authorizing the use of the island, necessary because it lies in Federal territory.

While officials refused to comment on the desirability of the plan, saying it would go through the usual procedure of examination given all proposals for the use of PWA relief funds, there were indications that the scheme would not get far.

In the first place, Washington has had its full share of works funds, expended in the construction of necessary departmental buildings. But, more important, there is fear that the country would not look with approval upon the construction of theatres in Washington, while the states are clamoring for money for needed improvements and unemployment relief. Politically, it is said, it would be an ill-advised move. Furthermore, there appears to be no real need for such a project.

Helen Hayes Refuses Co-starring Screen Role

Helen Hayes recently turned down an offer of $85,000 from Paramount to co-star with Ann Harding in a film version of the Pulitzer Prize play, "The Old Maid," she disclosed at Suffern, N. Y., where she is rehearsing for the George Bernard Shaw play, "Ceasar and Cleopatra," to play at the County theatre, a remodeled dairy barn.

Her decision, said Miss Hayes, came after four days of discussion with Arthur Hornblow of Paramount, who had come to Suffern to negotiate the deal. Miss Hayes stressed the point that she is adhering to the vow she made some time ago not to return to the screen. She is under contract to MGM, but the agreement provides that she shall not do film work as long as it interferes with her stage playing. She will appear in a play on Broadway in the fall.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

QUESTION OF SCREEN CREDITS IS UP AGAIN
LABOR PROBLEMS CONFRONTING PRODUCERS
RCA INVESTIGATING ERPI STUDIO CONTRACTS
11 FEATURES COMPLETED, SEVEN STARTED

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

Hollywood Correspondent

SCREEN credits raised their hydra-heads in Hollywood last week. Alleged statements from exhibitors that the paying customers are not interested in reading a long line of screen credits inspired some studio chiefs to discuss unofficially the radical proposition of eliminating the names of assistant directors, film editors, sound men, photographers, set designers and dressmakers from all release prints.

One of the executives is said to have declared that showmen and the public would welcome the cutting of technical credits, as they as seller and buyer are interested in entertainment, and that alone. They agreed that the name of the picture, the author and director are elements the public still want to know. Another executive said the move, if consummated, would save the industry approximately $125,000 a year on a basis of 500 films released.

Financial Saving Detailed

The official who advanced the money-saving idea said that an average of 50 feet of film, at a cost of 2 cents per foot for raw stock, developing and printing, was needed to list craftsmen's credits. Two hundred prints per picture would save $200, plus a charge of about $50 for art work and labor in preparing titles, making a total of $250 per picture for art work, stock, developing and printing of screen credit footage. By simple arithmetic he revealed a saving of $125,000 for 500 pictures, adding, "if and when this procedure becomes operative."

Gordon Mitchell, executive secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, when asked about the contemplated move, flatly denied that such a meeting or such a discussion had taken place at the Academy or at any of its gatherings.

Lupton Wilkinson was just as emphatic in his denial for the Hays organization, stating that no meeting has been held—informal or otherwise—under the auspices of the Producers' Association, where such a matter has been discussed.

Technicians, when informed of what was in the wind, took exception to the idea that the public is not interested in their work. A leading spokesman said: "The entire dress industry follows the screen career of every dressmaker in Hollywood. Amateur photographers throughout the world keep abreast of the latest photographic developments through films and know all about cameramen and their work. Interior decorators, home builders, have an intimate knowledge of the workings of the set builders in Hollywood. They know them by name. They know their work."

Labor Problems Appear

Labor problems have again entered the Hollywood production scheme and this time to all outward aspects they point to a definite split between producers and organized labor that is fast assuming threatening proportions.

Although no demands had been made by the N.A.A.E. and had not yet been discussed by the organization, due to the swift action of the studios, the group has now decided even more swiftly to carry the fight to Washington and obtain a permanent enjoinder against future studio action of this calibre. The Wagner bill naturally concerns both factions vitally.

According to a wellknown coast legal head, however, in the first place, all Washington appeals must wait until the labor boards are appointed. There is a possibility that an appeal at this time may speed up the machinery for an emergency appointment of a board. Secondly, if the dismissed employees are upheld, film companies must pay all back salaries dating from the time of dismissal. Thirdly, any company forbidding employees from joining such an organization would immediately be enjoined from continuance of such an order and would be ordered to rescind, that is pre-supposing the employees are upheld.

The legal authority added that this would all be predicated on the fact that the Wagner Bill didn't become unconstitutional prior to the appointment of a board and rendering of a decision. Otherwise any order would become null and void as in the case of the late NRA.

It is understood that in the case of the N.A.A.E. the organization immediately will make a direct appeal to Washington through the local federal machinery, which points to a possible early settlement of studio labor problems. Local observers, however, are speculating as to whether it will be necessary for N.A.A.E. to affiliate with a national labor organization before becoming a potent factor.

Fanfare is Gone

Pictures are presented to the public in Hollywood these days without fanfare or ceremony. Gone are the days when Hollywood donned its best ermines in honor of new films. Some time ago it was quietly decided by film heads that the display of wealth coincidental with a formal film premiere was inadvisable when relief enrollment was growing daily, and when the once sedate and awe-stricken crowds began to display a temptation to heave other things besides wise-cracks.

Today, the legitimate theatre, gradually feeling its somewhat enfeebled way back to the limelight, is the only place where formal openings are to be found. Dinner coats are to be seen in numbers when Henry Duffy opens a new show at his El Capitan theatre. Even the little Spotlight theatre, seating some 250, was filled with brightly bedecked film celebrities for the initial bow of a new play, "Common Flesh."

News Flashes

Myron Selznick, representing his client, Myrna Loy, issued a statement clarifying her action in signing a contract with Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur and charging MGM with certain inaccurate statements in regard to her contractual obligations to that studio. . . . The Technicians' Branch nominating committee of the Academy have made their selections of prospective officers of the coming year, which will be voted upon by the Academy at an early date. . . . RCA heads are investigating contracts between Erpi and the major studios on the assumption that Erpi sound recording contracts have certain restrictions which shut out possible RCA negotiations. . . . News of the tragic death of Will Rogers shocked Hollywood to its foundations. . . . Pat Casey planed out for the east mainly to stop over in Washing to study the Wagner Bill, it is learned.

Seven Films Start, 11 Finished

A relaxing of the new production speed under which Hollywood has labored for the past two months is noted this week. As the shooting of 11 pictures was completed, only seven were started. Both the finished and new work is generally distributed over several studios.

With three pictures transferred to cutting rooms, Paramount tops the list of those completing pictures. Included in the trio is "Peter Ibbetson." Gary Cooper, Ann Harding and John Halliday will be seen in the leading roles, supported by Ida Lupino, Douglas Dumbrille, Virginia Weidler and Dickie Moore. Henry Hathaway directed. Also off the stages is "So Red the Rose." Directed by King Vidor, the cast numbers Margaret Sullavan, Walter Connolly, Randolph Scott, Elizabeth Patterson. Janet Beecher, Harry Ellerbe. Third picture, "The Last Outpost," features Cary Grant, Claude Rains and Gertrude Michael with Kathleen Burke, Colin Tapley and Billy Bevan in support. Charles Barton directed.

MGM completed two pictures. The first, "The Bishop Misbehaves," will present Edmund Gwenn, Maureen O'Sullivan, Dudley Digges, Reginald Owen, Lucille Watson, Norman Foster. E. A. Dupont directed. With Mala, the star of "Eskimo" and Lotus Long the only listed personalities, "Mala," a South Sea Island picture, was also finished as far as actual shooting is concerned. Richard Thorpe directed.

Two were finished at 20-Fox. In "Ball of Fire" Alice Faye, Ray Walker, Bebe Daniels, Rosina Lawrence, Michell and Durant will be seen. George Marshall directed. "Beauty's Daughter" also was finished. Cast for this is Claire Trevor, Ben Lyon, Ralph Bellamy, Jane Darwell, Warren Hymer and George Irving. Allan Dwan directed.

Republic finished work on "Two Black Sheep." Otto Kruger and Martha Sleeper head the cast which includes Minna Gombell, Cora Sue Collines, Ferdinand Munier. Arthur Lubin directed.

At Universal "Alone Together" was checked off the active program. Directed by Kurt Neumann, the cast includes Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell, Walter Catlett, Inez Courtney.

Radio's contribution to completed work is "Rainmakers" (tentative title). Wheeler and Woolsey are starred, supported by Dorothy Lee, Berton Churchill. Fred Guilol directed.

New production includes several interesting pictures, with both Warner starters undoubtedly in that class. "Enemy of Man" will star Paul Muni as Anita Louise and Henry O'Neill head the supporting cast. William Dieterle is directing. Also underway is "Stars over Broadway," a musical featuring Pat O'Brien, James Melton, Jane Froman, Jean Muir, and Frank McHugh. William Keighley is directing.

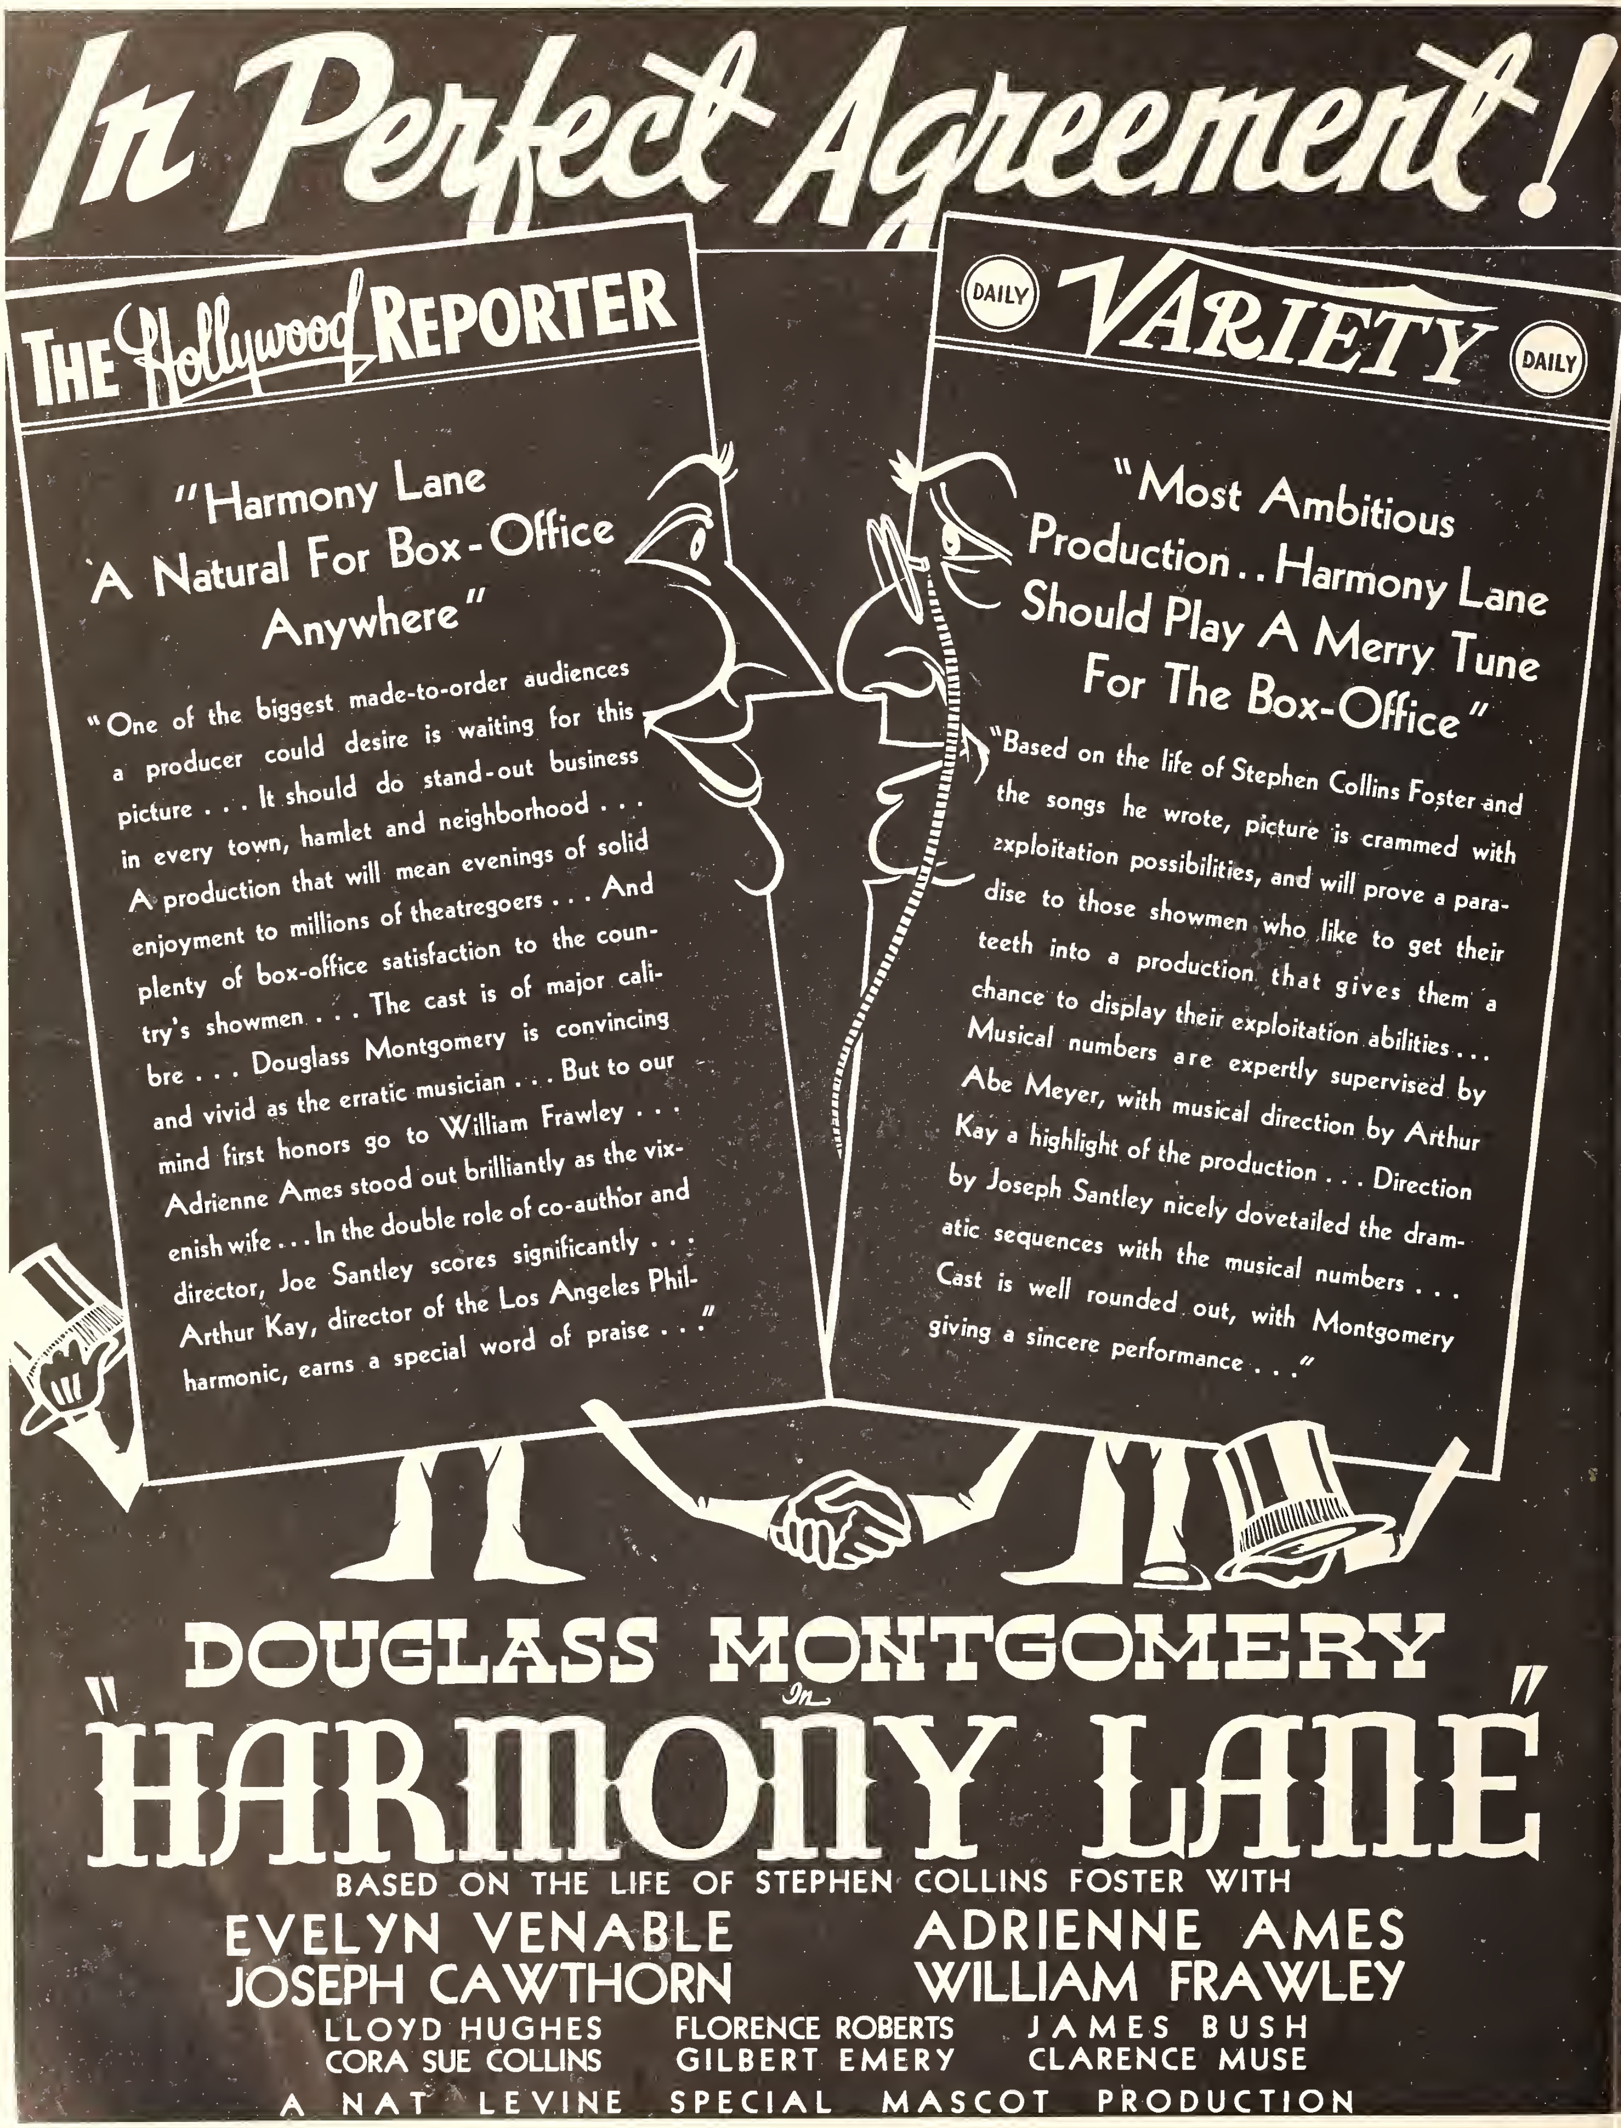
In location at Grafton, Mass., MGM started work on "Ah, Wilderness." Cast includes Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Cecelia Parker, Eric Linden, Aline MacMahon and Helen Flint. Clarence Brown is directing.

Paramount started "Collegiate." Under Ralph Murphy's direction, cast will include Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lynne Overman, Betty Grable, Peggy Joyce, Ned Sparks, Larry Crabbe and the song writing team, Gordon and Revel.

"Waterfront Lady" started at Mascot. Cast lists Ann Rutherford, Frank Albertson, Barbar Pepper, Charles Wilson. Joseph Santley is directing.

Twentieth Century-Fox started "Thanks A Million," in which Dick Powell is starred, supported by Fred Allen, Patsy Kelly, Ann Dvorak, Rubinoff, Paul Whiteman, Phil Baker and the Radio Rogues. Roy Del Ruth is directing.

Last of the new pictures is Radio's "Sylvia Scarlet." Katherine Hepburn is featured with Cary Grant, Edmund Gwenn, Natalie Paley and Mrs. Pat Campbell in the cast.



In Perfect Agreement!

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

First National

BABBITT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Nothing to rave about. No business for us. Nobody had much to say. Just a night's entertainment, if there isn't anything else doing. We must have real draws to keep people theatre minded.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni, Karen Morley—Stark tense drama of the coal fields and from the business that the picture did not draw I think it was too brutal for the public to like it. There is a limit to which realism should go and this I think overreached it. It had no comedy relief whatsoever. Too bad, for Muni was great in "Bordertown."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Not the best nor the worst from this team. But they have ceased to be box-office for us and consequently this picture did not pull nor did it please generally. Aline MacMahon deserves better roles than this. Running time, 71 minutes. Played August 4-6.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

BLACK SHEEP: Edmund Lowe, Claire Trevor—Fine programmer. Plenty of humor. Fair at the box-office.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Country patronage.

DOUBTING THOMAS: Will Rogers—Rogers seems to be suffering from overproduction. His pictures are good but four a year seems to be too many for the general public. He hits certain people other stars can't touch but the general theatregoer finds too much similarity to keep coming. Played August 4-6.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Country patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—This is best Will Rogers' picture we have played which drew well at box-office. Running time, 79 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Receipts way off on Temple in respect to her other performances, but still a winner. It is my guess that Shirley is going the way of all child stars.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Country patronage.

SPRING TONIC: Lew Ayres, Claire Trevor—This one sure surprised us. We went in looking for a good comedy only to find a good cast wasted on this silly incoherent picture called a comedy by its producers. It's really a shame to waste such characters as Lew Ayres and Claire Trevor on pictures like these. However, they did very well considering what they had to work with. Mitchell and Durant furnish the only laughs. Played July 21-22.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton—Entertaining light comedy. Nothing big but a good comedy that will please most of them. Went over good here. Played July 28-29.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti Gallian—Went over fine here. Well liked by most of the patrons. This is the kind of a role Baxter should play. The story is good. Some beautiful scenery, some comedy, a horse race and romance. Don't think you can go wrong on this one. A swell dance number by Veloz and Yolanda. Played July 19-20.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter, Ketti-Gallian—Fox just does not seem able to cast Baxter in a picture that will click. This had all the chances to put him back into the roles that made him, but they pick up the thinnest material and expect him to put the picture over. Lack of punch in the story was what was wrong with "Pampas Moon."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, Ind. General patronage.

Majestic

CHARMING DECEIVER, THE: Constance Cummings—We bought this film about six months ago and soon after we heard that it was terrible. Consequently we kept delaying the date until recently when we played it on a double bill with the reissue "The Front Page." While the picture is produced more in the American manner than many previous imports it is still below our average and can best be left unplayed. The photography is poor and the sound is very bad. The acting is fine and the film has several clever touches but not enough to atone for that terrible British humor. The principal comedy line which is overworked by a very droll looking fellow is "Hot dog, always having fun." Fair audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

NIGHT ALARM: Bruce Cabot, Judith Allen—Just an unoriginal run-of-the-mill program picture that got by on a double bill with a revival of "Daddy Long Legs." J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

UNKNOWN BLONDE: Edward Arnold, Dorothy Revier—I cannot recommend this for a general patronage as the story is a little too bold. This picture appears to have been produced with an eye toward the houses playing films of a sensational nature as there are several suggestive scenes rather crudely presented. The acting of Edward Arnold is splendid but it cannot offset the picture's impossibly trite ending. Audience response only fair. Sound and photography excellent.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Mayfair

OIL RAIDER, THE: Buster Crabbe, Gloria Shea—Months ago we saw a Mayfair picture which was so bad that we vowed we would never again sit through another of that company's productions. Good audience comments regarding this film prompted us to abandon our prejudices and see it, and we are glad we did for it is surprisingly good, considering its production source. It has some interesting shots of a drilling oil well, several hand-to-hand battles, and a runaway car. It is a good Saturday picture for situations where the patronage is not too discriminating. We played it on a double bill with a western and had a nice business.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MGM

DAVID COPPERFIELD: Madge Evans, W. C. Fields, Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew, Lionel Barrymore, Edna May Oliver—I have yet to play a special picture and get returns. This picture was certainly a disappointment. We did extra poor business. Maybe it was the heat. Our town doesn't seem to be very enthusiastic when we show big pictures. "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" was our only box-office friend up to date. This picture was good and well produced, but will never pay off the mortgage with these pictures.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer—Entertaining romance with music. Powell in a role unsuited to his talents and the center of interest is on Luise Rainer, a newcomer. She has a distinctive personality, which is most effective in the lighter scenes. Properly cast, she should be a welcome addition to pictures. Clever bit of sound work in presenting the voice of the immortal Caruso in operatic sequences. Pulled only fairly well. Audience reaction split. Running time, 89 minutes. Played August 7-8.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

NO MORE LADIES: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Franchot Tone—Sophisticated comedy of the idle rich. Nothing new in the story, but makes the most of every situation and the dialogue is clever. Pleased generally but did not pull as per expectations. Running time, 82 minutes. Played July 28-30.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

VAGABOND LADY: Robert Young, Evelyn Venable—Just a fair program picture with another of Metro's fair haired collar ad men in the lead. Much talk and some little action at the end that saved it from mediocrity. "Vagabond Lady" does not refer to a woman. It is a boat that the story is built around.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

VAGABOND LADY: Robert Young, Evelyn Venable—Gave more satisfaction to our patrons than a lot of so-called specials. A program offering, but well done and with laughable results. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 27.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Norman Foster, Charlotte Henry—A good picture of Civil War days, with a capable cast. Went over good here and did pretty good business. Played July 14-15.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

GLASS KEY, THE: George Raft—Fine programmer that pleased generally. Box office average.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Country patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Walter C. Kelly, Andy Clyde, Richard Cromwell, Jane Darwell, Betty Furness—Program offering that pleased fairly well and drew to the same degree. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 2-3.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Regal

LOST CITY, THE: William Boyd, Claudia Dell—If you knew what I know now you would never buy a chapter-play like this one. We showed the first four chapters and discovered this was the worst piece of hokum ever to be presented on the screen, so we bought the feature and cancelled the remaining eight chapters and put an end to our misery.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

RKO Radio

HOORAY FOR LOVE: Ann Sothern, Gene Raymond—This is the kind of booey that keeps them away. Opened to good business first night due to large billboard display and dies hard for a four days run. Some very good spots in it but is another of those kind where you sit through a lot back stage stuff believing all the time you will finally see the show but when they get ready to put it on everyone connected with it is so tired out that they just kid you by ending the thing with a lot of flashes.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

INFORMER, THE: Victor McLaglen—Opinion varied on this one. Not the 100% pleaser that Liberty states. Business rotten considering McLaglen's fine performance.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Country patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—Hepburn's best picture. Gives your show prestige and seems to be one special that builds up the second night.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WOMAN IN THE DARK: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—Very good program picture that drew good business on Friday-Saturday. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND: Gene Raymond, Nancy Carroll, Jack Benny—Very good picture that did fair at box-office. Running time, 74 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CALL OF THE WILD: Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie—I have just seen this at a midnight preview where it played before a large audience which was pleased with the picture. It is well produced and has strong mass appeal for there is certainly nothing highbrow about it. Just how well this follows the book I can't say as I neglected to read it. There is much beautiful scenery and sufficient comedy and action to put the picture over, but (for business reasons) I wish Loretta Young had stayed with Clark Gable whom she loved instead of returning to her husband. Personally, I feel that several of the scenes were overdrawn and the picture could be improved by judicious cutting.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WEDDING NIGHT, THE: Gary Cooper, Anna Sten—A very good program picture but did poor business at box-office. Running time, 90 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

ALIAS MARY DOW: Sally Eilers, Ray Milland—We showed this as a surprise preview with good results. Program picture lacking in star names, which would make it difficult to advertise on a regular run. Running time, 66 minutes. Played August 3.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

WEREWOLF OF LONDON: Henry Hull, Warner Oland—Very interesting to patrons who go in for "spine-tinglers." Had it been the first of this type picture it might have frightened the children, and timid women might have walked out, but it seemed very tame and many were heard to remark that "it is not so bad as I expected." Played July 22-23.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

WEREWOLF OF LONDON: Henry Hull, Warner Oland—Well produced offering of the horror type, which pleased and pulled very satisfactorily. Unique, if improbable story, which holds the interest and while the spine-tingling situations are present, they are not so enervating as to scare patrons out of the theatre. Good advertising angles to work on. Running time, 76 minutes. Played July 26-27.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Bros.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—Fine picture for Joe E. Brown fans that will surprise at the box-office.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Country patronage.

ALIBI IKE: Joe E. Brown—The best of this star's pictures in a long time. Our patrons turned out for this and went away satisfied and you can't ask more of any picture. Lots of laughs in the typical Brown style. Should satisfy in most any situation, where this star is liked. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY GONDOLIER: Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—A hit. If you thought "Twenty Million Sweethearts" was a honey you should see this and be really enthused. It has marvelous comedy, humable songs, and a swell story. It has a fast pace that is maintained throughout the entire film and a grand cast. And don't neglect to put Louise Fazenda back in the Mazdas for she makes a real comeback. Perfect audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty & Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

STRANDED: Kay Francis, George Brent—Francis' weakest to date. Just program with less than average draw.—Ike Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Country patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

SUMMERTIME: Comicolor Cartoon—Pretty good. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MGM

GOOFY MOVIES: No. 8—A waste of film and a waste of time running it.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK: Musical Revues—Not so good. A hodgc-podge of parodies on old familiar song tunes, mystery, chorus girls and what have you, with the result, the patrons don't know what it is all about and don't care. Running time, 17 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

REDUCING CREME: Willie Whopper—Just about as poor as they make them. Seems Mickey Mouse and Popeye spoils them.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tillbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

WASH-EE IRON-EE: Our Gang—Spanky is almost as much of a favorite with our patrons as Shirley Temple. This one is better than the average of these comedies. Running time, 18 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

MERRY KITTENS, THE: Rainbow Parade Cartoon—Good color cartoon comedy. Enjoyed very much by little folks. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ROARING WEST: Buck Jones—We have played four chapters so far and it is just a very ordinary serial. It seems as if patrons don't care much for this type of serial.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Rosenau to Represent Shirley Temple in Suit

Sidney Rosenau, appointed by Supreme Court Justice Edgar J. Lauer, will represent Shirley Temple in her $100,000 suit against Lenora Doll Company of New York, charging that the concern manufactured and sold dolls advertised as resembling her, without authority from her or her parents.

Another plaintiff is Ideal Novelty and Toy Company, also of New York, which manufactures similar dolls with the authorization of the Temples. Shirley's parents had sought to be named guardians for the suit.

Republic Arranges Tie-Up With National Advertisers

A pre-selling campaign on Charles Farrell and Charlotte Henry in "Forbidden Heaven," first feature from Republic, has been arranged by Edward Finney, director of advertising and publicity, in a series of tie-ups with national advertisers through magazine advertising, window and counter displays and chain store exploitation.

Bost Toothpaste will place in drug stores 160,000 window cards and streamers. Virginia Dare Dresses have turned out a window card for their clients. Geraldine Hat Company presents Charlotte Henry in three berets and an autographed photograph of the star will go on every box delivered to their customers. She is also shown on window cards.

Lever Brothers, manufacturers of Lux, have issued a streamer for stores and windows. Oppenheim and Baruch have created a set of Charlotte Henry lace collars and cuffs and issued a window card. Lettie Lee, dress designer of Hollywood, has a tie-up with dresses she created.

Through Postal Telegraph, Mr. Finney has arranged for distribution of "Forbidden Heaven" heralds by messenger boys during local playdates, and also for the display of a jumbo telegram in Postal Telegraph office windows.

George W. Luft, manufacturer of Tangee Products, will use a one- and two-column advertisement in magazines with a total circulation of 6,050,132. Screen Book Magazine is conducting a Charlotte Henry contest. There are also local tie-ups arranged for banks, radio broadcasts, contests, and other exploitation.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Le Mars, Iowa

Dear Herald:

This town is in the northwestern part of Iowa and the northwestern part of Iowa is, without a doubt, the richest farming country in the United States or Texas. It would be worthwhile for the "Brain Trust" and other folks who were interested in plowing up corn, killing five million pigs and paying farmers to let a part of their land lie idle, to come out here and have a look at this country.

Settled by "Remittance Men"

The country around Le Mars was originally settled by "Remittance Men," who came over here from England with the intention of farming the country, and we are told that they brought a lot of Englishmen with them who had never farmed and they came here to do the farming while the remittance men played golf, operated a "derby," and had their club where they could go and have their drinks and otherwise act like real English gentlemen should act. We are told that the trouble with the colony was that they didn't know the difference between plow handles and golf handles, and, as a result, the venture was a huge failure.

This country since has been taken over very largely by American farmers who know how to farm, and as a result this country is about the garden spot of the world. However, here is where the "Farmer's Holiday" folks got their dander up that time and came very near hanging a judge, and otherwise conducted themselves just like good, law-abiding citizens ought not to have conducted themselves.

We met Gordon Davidson, who is the manager of the Royal and one other theatre, and he extended the courtesy of the house to us, for which we feel deeply grateful. If you are looking for a nice country, come to northwest Iowa. If you want to grow grape fruit, go down to the Rio Grande valley, and when you get down there, if you want to meet some real fellows, call on Bob Smith, who runs the theatre at Mission, and "Shine" Mason, at McAllen, and any of the boys down there, and they will show you a royal time. But we were talking about northwest Iowa.

We had a delightful visit with Mr. and Mrs. Watt, who operate the theatre at Sac City, and Sac City is located right in the heart of the country "where the tall corn grows," and Mr. Watt has a very lovely theatre, and when he don't do business there will be no use for the others to try.

Manager and Woodworker

If you should visit northwestern Iowa and not meet Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Johannesen, who operate the Wonderland theatre, at Paulena, you might as well consider your visit a failure, unless you simply want to see a nice country. We never expect to meet any better folks; in fact we don't want to. Mr. Johannesen is quite a woodworker, besides being a theatre manager, and he puts in his spare time making nice things for his wife. When we were in the Rio Grande valley last winter we went down on the bank of the river and dug out a root of an ebony tree, and we also got some muskit (spell that anyway you want to), and we are going to send some of it to Mr. Johannesen to work into somthing nice for his wife. Iowa has a whole lot of nice folks, just like Missouri and part of Indiana.

Sibley is only just a little ways from the Minnesota line and not very far from the South Dakota line, and Mr. O. G. Lehman operates the Royal theatre, so now you know what makes Minnesota and South Dakota such great states. When they want to see a good show they hitch up Fan and Jerry and drive down to Sibley.

Good Entertainment

At Rock Rapids we met W. H. Falkins, who, with his Lyon theatre, is largely responsible for Rock Rapids being what it is to northwest Iowa. Our guess is the citizenry of Rock Rapids don't have to go away to see a good show, and our guess is also that northwest Iowa don't have to look any farther than Rock Rapids to find good entertainment. It's a pleasure to meet such folks as Mr. Falkins.

Say folks, don't ever come over to this country without you stop at Rock Valley and meet William Bogart, who operates the Orpheum theatre. There is a boy you ought to know. He reminds us a whole lot of a fellow we used to know down in Indiana who never saw the inside of a penitentiary and never stole a watermelon in his life, except that he don't look like him nor talk like him but he wears the same size shoes. He took us to his home and we met Mrs. Bogart, who, by the way, was a college classmate of our friend Mrs. Cecil Stratton of Grand Island, Nebraska. We had a lovely visit with them (and something else with ice in it, too). Doggone that Bill Bogart, he skinned us several times playing golf down at Omaha but he knows how to operate a theatre and pick the nice ones, too. He's also a great HERALD fan.

Honest Advertising

A. L. Banks thinks that Akron is about the right place to operate a theatre because it is a good town and is not much more than good walking distance from South Dakota, although he says he would feel more at home in a larger place. He has made his Empress theatre one of the bright spots of the town and his customers have stopped inquiring what he is playing, they know that it will be a good show anyhow. That's where honest advertising counts. Get the respect and goodwill of your patrons and you are going to get their money at the box office every time. That's the Banks policy.

In a cafe last night we imagined that we could eat something, and before gum-chewing Gertie came over to take our order she turned on the radio and the jazz orchestra members were taking turns squawking and a crooner started singing "Please say you love me or I'll die," and we were going to eat a piece of huckleberry pie but we changed our mind and ordered limburger cheese and onions.

We had dinner over at Dr. Sanders' house at Sanborn the last time we were there and we hadn't forgotten. So we drove over this time, but not at dinner-time, and Doc had gone down to Sheldon to play golf and we didn't get to see him, but Mrs. Sanders said they didn't want to be without the HERALD so she told us to send it to them for two more years. You may not know it, but they operate one of the most popular playhouses in the northwest and you may not know this, also, that Mrs. Sanders knows how to put up a dinner, too. Just ask Carl Nedley, who sells films out of Omaha.

Railroads and Theatres

E. Recknagel at Fonda, Iowa, doesn't only run the theatre there, but he tells the engineers on the Illinois Central when to go and when to stop, and they better mind him, too. He runs the railroad in Fonda when he isn't running the theatre, and between them he is kept pretty busy.

Marcus has reasons to be proud of her theatre and reasons also to be proud of the manager, for he is doing everything he can to give the community the best there is in entertainment, for that's the kind of a guy E. V. Delaney, the manager, is. E. V. is strong for the HERALD, and that makes us pretty strong for E. V.

Over at Rolfe we met W. M. Obrecht of the Ritz theatre. We were over there one time and played golf with him and Mr. Boma, who operates the Rialto at Pocahontas, and those two guys didn't have a bit of mercy on us, they both took delight in seeing just how hard they could beat us.

This time we went up to the home and met Mrs. Obrecht, and had a delightful visit with her and her husband. They are mighty swell people, have a swell theatre in a swell town and live in as swell a home as anybody (who has good sense) wants to live in. Gee whiz, we wonder if we will ever see them again.

COLONEL J. C. JENKINS
The HERALD's Vagabond Colyumnist

Says General Color Use Would Cost 25 Millions

The motion picture industry "will have to expend $25,000,000 before color is universally used on the screen," said Edward Small, vice-president of Reliance Pictures in Hollywood, in denying that Reliance would film "The Last of the Mohicans" in the three-tone Technicolor process.

Mr. Small then went on to explain that while a point near perfection has been reached, every producer would have to swing to color on all pictures, every theatre would have to show color and nothing else, before the public will realize an appreciation. He said such an educational program would cost the sum quoted.

Martin Quigley Twentieth Anniversary Edition of Motion Picture Herald in September.

In New York, London and Hollywood, in places large and small, all over the world, interest is converging on the parade of personalities and pictures that will pass in review in the Martin Quigley 20th Anniversary Edition of Motion Picture Herald in September. The talent and pictures that will be then exhibited not only to the industry in America but to the whole world of films will mark the flower of showmanship in picture making and picture advertising, designating simultaneously the end of a remarkable period in industry history and the beginning of another that already has the tempo and rhythm of greatness.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 279.—(A) What precaution should be observed in handling and storing photo cells? (B) Do you feel it to be a part of the projectionist's duty to maintain proper volume level in the theatre auditorium? (C) What do you regard as the best arrangement to insure correct volume level at all times? It is a heavy task to handle the mass of answers. It will be facilitated if you will place the question number and your name at the very top center of the first page.

Answer to Question No. 273

Bluebook School Question No. 273 was: (A) If an exciter lamp fails to light, is it necessarily an indication that the lamp is burned out? (B) What precautions should be observed in clamping an exciter lamp into the type of socket using a knurled screw? (C) Why is it advisable to operate an exciter lamp slightly below its rated current value? What effect will operation at higher than rated value have on the lamp? .(D) Describe, briefly, the principle of operation of a photo cell.

The engineers say: "(A) Should the lamp fail to light and examination shows the filament to be intact, the trouble can usually be traced to poor contact between the lamp base and the socket. Be certain both are clean and the electrical contact between them firmly made. (B) The knurled screw should be tightened with the fingers only. Never use a plyer, as by so doing there is danger of cracking the lamp base. (C) By operating the lamp slightly under its rating its useful life is very much increased. Operation at a very small increase over rated current value will reduce the lamp life considerably. (C) A photo cell is a device which varies in electrical resistance in proportion to the amount of light falling upon its active element. The cell consists of two elements, namely a cathode (usually in the form of a curved plate) on which is a coating of caesium, and an anode. Both the cathode and anode are enclosed in a glass envelope or 'bulb' from which all air is exhausted. The cathode connects to the negative and the anode to the positive side of the same d.c. voltage supply."

Again there is not room for publication of names, but I may say the list is approximately the same as usual. I assure you the list of those answering correctly will very soon be resumed. There were 78 creditable answers to this question.

(A) W. W. Gilreath says: "There are several reasons why an exciter lamp might fail to light. (1) Lamp terminals not making proper electrical contact with socket or base. (2) E.m.f. supplying potential to lamp circuit dead. (3) Most sound heads have a rheostat in series with filament of exciter lamp, which might be burned out or open circuited at one of its terminals. (4) An 'open' in exciter lamp circuit either in the sound head or between sound head and e.m.f. source. (5) It is entirely possible that a short might develop across the lamp terminals, the same having such low resistance that the current would be shunted around the lamp to such an extent that it would not light up, though under such a condition there would be some current through its filament."

This was the answer of hundreds, though some named other possibilities, for example, a faulty rectifier, blown fuse.

(B) A. E. Sprafke answers: "In some types of equipment all exciter lamp adjustments are locked by means of knurled screws. It is best to test these each day to make sure they are tight and the lamp held securely in correct position. However, it also is very important that too much pressure not be exerted in tightening these screws, lest damage be done."

(C) John J. Wyman says: "It is good practice to operate exciter lamps slightly below rated current level for the reason that the life of the filament is thus lengthened considerably. However, it is not advisable to overdo this, since it means running the amplifier with the gain or volume control at too high a level, causing possible distortion. This would be necessary because of the weak light from the lamp. Conversely if exciters be run above their rated current level their useful life is shortened, and burned-out filaments may result, possibly in the middle of a show. Also the amplifier gain possibly would be decreased so much that in some types of equipment reproduction would suffer. By this I mean, of course, that if you run the exciters below or above normal, compensation must be had through the amplifier gain control."

(D) I am puzzled. There are so many surprisingly excellent answers to this one. Several high-up sound engineers have expressed pleasurable surprise at the excellence of many of the answers published! I have decided to use the reply of W. W. Gilreath, Austin, Texas, as perhaps the best suited to publication. He says: "The photo cell is a two-element vacuum tube, these elements being a cathode and an anode, the former termed the 'plate.' The cathode supplies a source of electrons. The anode is held at a positive potential with respect to the cathode in order that it may attract the electrons, and thus make the tube conductive.

"The cathode is a coating of material or substances that are sensitive to light. That is to say, light falling upon the cathode coating will cause it to emit electrons, and the positively charged anode attracts these negatively charged electrons, thus setting up what constitutes a flow of current from cathode to plate.

"Now the velocity of the emitted electrons, is directly proportional to the frequency of the incident light, and the number of electrons emitted is proportional to the amplitude of the light, therefore the character and magnitude of the current formed is dependent upon both the number of electrons and their velocity.

"From all this it follows that if light waves of varying frequency and/or of varying amplitude (amount) are caused to impinge upon the cathode of a photo cell, the current formed by its action will be an exact duplicate or reproduction of the varying light frequency and amplitude. This is the situation as it exists in the photo cell circuit of the sound head of a motion picture projector. The light falling upon the photo cell cathode varying continuously in exact accordance with what is recorded upon the film sound track."

Feeling not altogether certain as to the technical correctness of part of Brother Gailbreath's answer I submitted it to one of our very best sound experts who said:

"With reference to the next to last paragraph of Mr. W. W. Gilreath's answer, though literally it is correct, he has, unnecessarily, I think, complicated his explanation by introducing the quantum theory of photo-electricity. The matter might be made more simple by avoiding the question of electronic velocity. Let us look at it this way: The more light of any given color mixture, the more electrons will be emitted. As explained, practically all the emission is drawn or attracted to the anode. Therefore when the sound track is of such nature that lots of light passes through it, a comparatively large plate current results. When the variable density sound track is dense or the variable area track narrow, the light reaching the photo cell is reduced and the plate current of course drops. In this manner the current is made to follow exactly the photographic impressions recorded on the sound track."

BLUEBOOK DELAY

Some explanation is due those who have ordered the new bluebook. There has been a regrettable delay in release. However I can assure you positively that things now are moving at top speed and that September 15 should see books in the mail. The error was making the publication announcement so early. However, cheer up. You will, I am very certain, find the new book well worth the long wait.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

WHAT'S SHOWMANSHIP?

If according to Webster, a showman is one who aids in exhibiting a show then showmanship should mean the modus operandi used by the showman in "aiding" such exhibition. And if this definition is to be translated into terms of motion picture exhibition then showmanship should apply only to those "aids" that definitely bring in extra grosses.

And if this be true then there is no such phrase as bad showmanship. If a manager puts over a stunt or campaign that does not click or if he uses poor box office judgment in executing his ideas, the failure may ofttimes be laid to lack of showmanship. Exceptions of course prove the rule. We know, and so do you, of swell campaigns fairly bristling with showmanship that died miserably through circumstances entirely outside control of the creator. But in the main, most every successful or more than successful campaign has become so because of the degree of effectiveness or excellence of the showmanship put behind it.

The reasons for the slight dissertation indulged in above are two letters received within the week—one from an anonymous contributor and the other from a Pennsylvanian manager.

Although our practice is to ignore anonymous communications, we refer to this unsigned letter because coincidentally it has to do, in part, with the subject of the Pennsylvanian writer. Both express a desire for more magical formulae in the Round Table pages that will enable them to put over their shows.

Mr. Anonymous, referring to our frequent allusions on this page to showmanship, and to the fact that he is ashamed of the grosses on pictures he has really tried hard to put over, writes: "Would ask you to let me and no doubt many more like me know just what real showmanship is and how to use same. We read a lot in your paper about showmanship . . . but just what and how to do it is what puzzles me."

The Pennsylvanian also seeks something surer in the line of showmanship to put over his attractions, and calls for aid, saying in part: "Your articles are good reading . . . I appreciate your thoughts and ideas on how to put a show over, but not once did you take time to express just what to exactly do . . . used the ordinary methods . . . tried sensational exploitation but to no avail . . . what else is there to do. Can you help us out?"

Well, friends, we sympathize with your problems and really wish there were some sort of a something that comes in packages which rubbed vigorously over the box office would bring the folks running in droves. But unfortunately there isn't. The nearest thing to it is this same muchly publicized talent of showmanship which in the hands and minds of a showman can be applied so that the customers will feel that buying urge.

True, most every capable manager has the same access to hundreds of ideas that have been used by successful theatremen elsewhere, but the showman has the additional advantage of being able to spot a certain excellent selling angle that perhaps the other fellow has missed.

As to the Pennsylvanian's wish that we state just how to put a show over, whatever recent success this department has enjoyed is based on the assumption that the Round Table acts as a clearing house for effective ideas from the field. In short, a member puts over a certain campaign, finds it has helped him, sits down and tells us what he did and how. The highlights are then published for the information and benefit of the membership at large.

Before a picture is released, the home offices send out their pressbooks containing exploitation suggestions. A great many of these suggestions are worthwhile and certainly as a whole they have improved steadily in the past month.

Again, experienced showmen heading home office and division advertising departments of the scores of theatre circuits also forward to their individual managers many helpful aids in putting over coming pictures. And yet again, many managers keep a careful file for future use of every possible box office stunt that comes their way.

However, there is evidence that these sources of information are not entirely sufficient to all managers and therefore we shall be glad to advise further with the puzzled theatremen regarding ways and means of translating "showmanship" for them into more easily understood box office language.

Recommended for close study is Jack Knight's budget article appearing in the current Better Theatres, issued as part two of this week's Motion Picture Herald. For undoubtedly, Mr. Knight spotlights a "must" ignored in too many theatres.

Managers operating without one will find the adoption of a workable budget will disclose in many instances that one of the main reasons for unsatisfactory net returns is due to an insufficient per cent of the grosses now set aside for publicizing their attractions.

THE JUNE SILVER AWARD PRESENTATION IN LONDON

ARMSTRONG HONORED IN PLAQUE CEREMONY

London Advertising Director Receives the June Silver Plaque; Prominents Attend

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Evidencing the general appreciation, in the British industry, of the importance of Mr. John Armstrong's achievement in taking a Quigley Silver Plaque out of America for the first time, the formal presentation of the plaque to Mr. Armstrong, who is director of advertising to Paramount London Theatres, brought together an exceptionally representative gathering on August 8 in the private office of Mr. Gordon Selfridge, the American-born founder of the famous London stores of that name.

Supporting Mr. Selfridge, who made the presentation, were Mr. Theo H. Fligelstone, vice-president of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, the representative body of the 4,000 exhibitors in the British territory, Mr. M. Neville Kearney, secretary of the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, a body which equally reflects the production interests of the U. K., Mr. J. M. Beck, the London representative of the Hays organization, and Mr. J. C. Graham, managing director of the Paramount Film Service, Ltd.

AUGUST DEADLINE SEPTEMBER SIXTH

Although deadline for the Quigley August Awards is still two weeks away, entries from determined managers are arriving in full force. Closing time is midnight of Friday, September 6.

Judges for August are as follows: Ned E. Depinet of Radio Pictures, Monroe Greenthal of United Artists and Edward L. Alperson, Fox West Coast Theatres.

Tribute to the success of the college in showmanship was also paid by the presence of Mr. H. F. Kessler-Howes, director of publicity to Columbia Pictures, Ltd., and of Mr. "Jimmie" Hutchinson, director of the press department of Associated British Pictures, Ltd. There was a considerable representation of the national press, and all the British trade papers sent representatives as did the professional papers of the advertising and publicity fields. Altogether the company numbered some 30 persons.

Mr. Selfridge, himself a pioneer in the introduction and adaptation of American salesmanship methods in the U. K., in making the presentation emphasized the fact that Mr. Armstrong had, by his London campaign for "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," shown himself able to rival the achievements of American showmen in their own field, and in expressing thanks to Mr. Selfridge for presiding, Mr. J. C. Graham pointed out that the success of Mr. Armstrong was a vindication of a principle which Mr. Selfridge followed, the encouragement and recognition of young men.

Barron's Costless Heralds

Bill Barron Kenyon, Pittsburgh, is quite the promotin' lad on costless heralds, according to the samples he forwards, one of which is a bright red handy mixing chart for drinks served at local restaurant. Another is drug store herald and still a third is from a sweets shop which offers guest tickets to those holding lucky numbered heralds. Needless to say, the reverse side of all of these contains theatre and picture plugs.

Adopt-A-Child Idea Tied In to "Ginger"

Over 100 children in the county home and the local folk who adopted them for a day, the merchants who cooperated, the mayor and other helpful folks had the time of their lives recently on the occasion of Manager Les Bowser's "Adopt a Child Day" party put on in conjunction with his showing of "Ginger," at the Harris-Warren, in Warren, Ohio.

Bowser writes that the theatre received more publicity on this than ever before as well he might for the tear sheets this member forwards indicates that the local papers certainly went to town for sure to give the stunt its deserved success.

Well in advance of his date, Les conceived the idea of having all the children at the home adopted for one day by Warren families, couples or otherwise, the temporary "parents" to give the youngsters a big time, the party to include a free showing of the picture at the Harris.

Newspapers Cooperate

Papers went for it strongly, breaking the story on page one and for an entire week, giving it two-column heads and plenty of space. Mayor Bjorson was enlisted to help and he wrote an open letter printed in the papers urging cooperation, the copy incidentally tying in the title of the picture and the theatre.

Party was held on a Saturday and the following Monday's papers ran a page one five-column layout of photos with captions telling all about it.

Besides the theatre party, the youngsters were supplied with all the ice cream and candy they could eat, were dined at the homes of their one-day sponsors, taken swimming and were given other infrequently enjoyed treats.

Fortune Teller Promoted By Dannenberg for "Oil"

Warner Theatres Cleveland ad head, Sid Dannenberg, tied in with local chow mein manufacturer for the "Oil for the Lamps of China" date at the Hippodrome. Restaurateur supplied tea leaf reader for a two-week engagement in lobby of theatre (see photo). Announcement cards were also included in all outgoing orders leaving restaurant.

Entire staff was dressed in mandarin coats and coolie hats, each usher wearing a silk ribbon badge with Chinese figures on explaining they meant "don't miss," etc.

Promoted Weekly Vacation Journeys

Operating in a town of 4,200, with not much more than double that number in the entire county, Manager John Taylor, Strand, Rawlins, Wyo., one of the northern district houses, promoted himself for giveaway purposes, seven extensive vacation trips, given away one a week during the warmest weeks of the year. Trips were given away on Friday which Taylor labelled "Vacation Night."

Ascertaining the cost of seven round-trips including first-class fare, Pullman and meals en route, John worked out a deal with his local paper at a special rate for a weekly double spread. Paper furnished free banner across the top, information on the trips, publicity stories and free window cards.

Then 12 merchants were sold contracts at $10 each week which covered ads in the spread, cards and theatre mention. Railroad furnished travel pictures and pamphlets, newspaper cuts and model train for lobby display and street bally.

Theatre Supplied Coupons

Theatre printed coupon tickets for merchants, these to be given with each purchase. Coupons were then placed in wheel on stage each Friday night, winning ticket securing that week's trip and each week's coupons being added to previous accumulation with tickets good every week. Money secured from merchants covered transportation and newspaper advertising space, theatre paying for coupon tickets and trailer.

Taylor says the best trips were given away during the last week, and the results increased his grosses over 200 per cent on Friday nights with an expenditure not exceeding $15 per week. Among the free journeys were Hollywood, Alaska, Boulder Dam, Denver and Salt Lake City.

The Strand is supervised by Chet Miller, northern district manager of Rick Ricketson's Fox Rocky Mountain theatres.

With a gaucho on horseback properly bedecked accompanying his sound truck (see photo) for "Under the Pampas Moon," Russ Hardwick at the Lyceum in Clovis, N. M., had man cover all downtown streets, later in the week using truck as part of street parade.

For his revival of "Cimarron," Russ used a bannered covered wagon drawn by oxen.

Famous Players-Canadians Detail Their Activities

With the inclusion of Famous Players - Canadian circuit activities on the following pages of this week's Round Table, our Guest Section series travels across the border to spotlight the operations of the Dominion showmen.

And a most pleasant journey it is, too, for among the most enthusiastic of Round Tablers are to be counted the Canadian members. Hard-hitters they are, and these pages have been brightened with accounts of box-office exploitations put over by them. And appropriately enough does this Guest Section appear on the occasion of the yearly Famous Players convention in Toronto where next week will foregather theatremen of the Eastern Division, among those quite a few who have contributed to this issue.

On behalf of the membership we forward their good wishes and ours also to the boys assembled in Toronto. To J. J. Fitzgibbons, general manager, and to James R. Nairn, advertising and publicity director, a bow for the swell cooperation that made possible this Guest Section. —A-MIKE.

National Advertisers Tiein On "Forbidden Heaven"

Among the highlights of the campaign on "Forbidden Heaven" planned by Edward Finney, director of advertising and publicity for Republic Pictures, are tieup with Lettie Lee, famous dress designer of Hollywood, who has created a frock for Charlotte Henry, worn in the picture; special promotional stunts include every store selling her frocks. Lux manufacturers have issued streamer for stores and windows carrying large photo of Miss Henry and these will be used in all drug and five and ten cent stores.

Finney has also arranged for the distribution of "Forbidden Heaven" heralds by postal telegraph boys and for the display of jumbo telegrams in branch office windows.

Rivoli Uses Projector For "Call of the Wild"

For the "Call of the Wild" opening at the New York Rivoli a huge 40' square sky sign was projected from dusk until midnight. Cast, credits and opening were announced starting three days ahead and continuing through first week of run.

Chain of sporting goods stores devoted windows and inside displays to camp equipment in conjunction with colored and cutout photos of stars, tiein copy reading "when you feel the call of the wild, we can supply your sports necessities." Other window displays were secured, one of Gable shown with camera and hosiery shop featured stills of Loretta Young and four foot cutouts.

Silver Stages His Own "Goin' to Town" Parade

When Nat Silver, Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., recently was unsuccessful in "borrowing" cars from local dealers for a "Goin' to Town" parade, he remained undaunted, called on his staff and friends, bannered their cars and staged his own parade.

However, the piece de resistance of his stunt was the tuning in of all radios in the cars to a station that happened to be playing some march music and with all sets going full blast, parade toured the town.

Chalman Calls All Cars in Lobby for "Let 'em Have It"

In addition to his lobby display of riot bombs, tear gas, etc., on "Let 'Em Have It," Jack Chalman of the Texas Theatre, San Antonio, secured a new radio police motorcycle hooked up to local police dispatcher and the radio kept sparking out police calls during entire run. Another attraction getter was fire siren placed atop marquee and five minutes before picture was flashed on screen it was sounded.

Loudspeaker equipment at local fight, wrestling and dog race arenas brought the picture further mention.

Costumed Team Plug "Town" for Harpster

A team of a gal and two boys dressed in Gay Nineties costumes acted as Frank Harpster's street bally at the Ohio in Mansfield, Ohio, carrying suitcases placarded with "We're Goin' to Town to see Mae West." The three visited department stores and dined at leading restaurants.

Reserved for Miss West cards were placed on tables of night clubs, small colored cards distributed, one side containing playdates and other Westicisms. Frank also promoted co-op page.

ART STUFF. On the "Escapade" date in Los Angeles, the boys at Loew's State planted an oil painting and sculpture exhibit in the lobby with instructors and students working direct from models.

Being present at every convention so far of the Famous Players - Canadian circuit, N. L. Nathanson had no intention of missing the 1935 get-together to be held in Toronto, starting August 26. The following cable from the president of the Famous Players - Canadian Corporation, Ltd., to J. J. Fitzgibbons, circuit director of theatre operations, is not only an assurance of Mr. Nathanson's presence at the conference but also an indication why perhaps the Canadian theatremen are well pleased to be numbered among the manpower of this organization. Here is the president's message:

"Returning in time attend Eastern Managers Conference. Will have opportunity thanking the boys for their loyalty and splendid efforts which have made possible our continued progress since last meeting. Happy over results first year sharing plan and to know that they have materially shared in the betterment of their individual operation. Regards."

Circuit Represented From Coast to Coast

With representation in every key city and most smaller situations in Canada, the Famous Players-Canadian circuit, founded some 15 years ago by N. L. Nathanson, embraces over 200 separate operations in cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific in the Dominion of Canada.

The original house of the circuit was the Strand, in Toronto, the house manager at that time being Clarence Robson, who now occupies the post of Eastern Division Supervisor under J. J. Fitzgibbons, general theatres director.

Organ and de luxe presentations were also originated in Canada by Mr. Nathanson under the supervision of Jack Arthur at the Regent, Toronto, and perfected by Arthur at the Imperial, which house he now manages.

The circuit is represented by at least one house in each situation and by as many as 15 in Toronto with other cities having from three to four. Of the supervisors, John Hazza and Frank Gow operated their own theatres before selling to Mr. Nathanson and joining his forces. Morris Stein was head of the Michigan Managers' Vaudeville Association, and Larry Bearg came from Boston, where he held an executive post with Publix. Photos on this page are alphabetically listed.

"MANAGERS MUST KEEP INFORMED"

Circuit Chief Stresses Necessity Of Keeping In Touch With Latest Developments of Picture Business

by J. J. FITZGIBBONS
Director of Theatre Operations
Famous Players Canadian Corporation

J. J. FITZGIBBONS in a manner of speaking is the engineer of the far-flung operations of the Famous Players Canadian circuit that reaches from coast to coast in the Dominion.

Thousands of miles span the Famous Players operations, but every theatre and theatreman in the circuit has been visited by him a number of times. His boys call him "tops" and that's about "tops" in rating. On this page Mr. Fitzgibbons sets down some of his observations on this business of ours. His views are decidedly informative and we are pleased to present them.

With a full appreciation of the importance of a manager being able to successfully effect ticket selling ideas through newspaper advertising, ballyhoo, tieups or the many mediums of merchandising at his disposal, we wish to emphasize the importance of a manager keeping fully informed as to the latest developments in his business. This is true of every business, but more particularly does it apply to show business, which, by its very nature, must constantly reflect the ever changing public fancy. A manager with a full knowledge of these developments is in the best position to take the fullest advantage of the popularity of these new ideas which create new patronage and keep the interest of the old.

Important in All Towns

This is just as important in the small town and suburban theatres as it is in the big key runs. Much of the success of the so-called small town exhibitor is due to the fact that he himself is intimately informed on every development of his business and can make intelligent use of this knowledge. He has found it profitable to have a working knowledge of projection, sound reproduction, ventilation and the necessary temperatures for body comfort so that he himself definitely knows whether the equipment he has installed is being efficiently operated so as to bring about the results necessary for the comfort of the patrons anticipated when the original investment was made in this equipment. This, unfortunately, is not always true of some managers.

New inventions are rapidly coming to the front. Color and great improvement in the range of reproduction, new ideas in decoration, ventilating, etc., are constantly being advanced and unless the manager keeps informed on these new subjects he's going to find himself, and incidentally his theatre, following the parade.

That brings us to the subject of trade publications. Trade papers of merit are of vital importance to the manager and he should arrange for his staff to read and interest themselves in these publications. We regard the Motion Picture Herald as being so important an authority on our business that for some years past we have arranged to have a copy of every issue placed in the hands of each Famous Players manager.

Very often some minor employee, because of the interest created by reading publications of this kind, can suggest to the manager the basic idea for an interesting newspaper story that will be acceptable as news or perhaps some important ticket selling and merchandising idea. Even magazines such as Popular Mechanics, where in each issue a section is devoted to mechanical improvements and inventions affecting our business, are worthy of your attention. Readers of these magazines are better informed on what is going on in our theatres and studios for the improvement of the business we are in than many managers!

The July 27th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, for example, carried some very interesting ideas about tapping new sources of patronage and outlined how others have successfully approached the problem.

Hardly a week passes but that some interesting suggestion does not come through and you managers must realize that this publication has the greatest resources for collecting and presenting information of any other single publication of its kind in the industry, simply because it has specialized in the development of the various important phases of our business and has confined itself solely to the motion picture industry and its problems.

Producers, directors and research men at the world's leading studios carefully seek out new ideas. They present, through their showmanship and ability, the complete product for successful and profitable presentation, yet we sometimes find that the theatre manager, through neglect in the matters of projection or sound destroys the effect of huge investments which the theatres should have capitalized on, thus creating dissatisfied patrons which are your greatest resistance to ticket selling.

By carefully operating each department of your theatre, with a full knowledge and understanding of their requirements, you will deliver the maximum of satisfaction and assist greatly in making your theatre a place for people to go when they are seeking entertainment.

Your presence and personal appearance on the floor of your theatre, at least during the peak hours of your business, is of vital importance for your personal success as well as the success of the business you are managing. Here you have an opportunity of meeting the law-makers and important citizens of the community which you are serving. If you have a full knowledge of your business, you can clearly and concisely state your side of any controversy. You can protect your interests by being able to inform those who do not have a working knowledge of our business and who may be prejudiced because of ulterior motives of other interests.

Every business, ours no exception, is vitally interested in tax problems. Unless you are informed, you cannot convincingly explain our side of the problem to the law-making representatives.

By being well informed, you can present interesting and convincing arguments or discuss our business with the various local organizations you may be invited to speak before. These civic clubs invariably represent the most important and influential business men in your community. They are certainly going to be favorably impressed if you convince them that you thoroughly understand your own business and can understandably explain phases of our business the general public are not entirely familiar with.

Films Fashion Feature Popular With Newspapers

What has proved to be a decidedly successful regular newspaper service inaugurated by Jim Nairn's publicity department of Famous Players Canadian is a fashion from the films feature prepared and set out for release in a number of Canadian newspapers.

Eight-column half-page mats are made up with style photos and latest fashions worn by various stars coming in pictures to be shown at the circuit houses.

THERE IS A CANADIAN ANGLE

Famous Players Publicists Must Interpret Slant for Successful Picture Selling in the Dominion

by JAMES R. NAIRN

Advertising Director, Famous Players Canadian

There is really such a thing as a "Canadian angle" to theatre advertising and exploitation. Hence the particular need for a Canadian publicity department to interpret that slant. For instance, Muni and Raft copy stressed their success in "Scarface" for some time after that great hit. These stars would have been comparatively easy to sell to Canadians but, due to censorship problems, "Scarface," "Public Enemy" or other important hits of the gangster cycle didn't get a showing in Ontario—the best theatre-going province in the country. Press book ads on "Flirtation Walk," to pick another example at random, carried such copy as—"Will pick you up like a band playing Yankee Doodle on the Fourth of July," etc. Perfect for the United States but not so hot in British Canada!

Quite obviously it would not be practical for major companies to alter their campaigns just to suit Canadian exhibitors, yet such copy allowed to stand, would be definitely harmful in Canada.

The Publicity Department, besides preparing supplementary campaigns on most of the important productions from Hollywood, also has the problem of British pictures. Campaigns are prepared on these also. We have been most successful with such attractions as "Man of Aran," "Rome Express," "Iron Duke," to mention a few, by using our own type of campaign. Then we have the problem of duty to contend with in this country. It costs money to import mats and photographs.

Campaigns Designed to Fit

Working in cooperation with managers of Toronto's key-run houses we design our campaigns primarily to meet their requirements. By doing this we give the other managers an opportunity of seeing how our ads stack up in the papers and pre-sell the pictures in cities and towns adjacent to Toronto where local papers have a heavy circulation. All ads are made with an eye to circuit use. In each case they are drawn so that the signature slug drops out and other theatre names can be sustituted. Each manager has a special set of slugs for this purpose. Complete proofs of each campaign are rushed to managers who order direct-pressure mats at cost through the department. This plan was put into effect less than two years ago and by the end of July mat orders filled by the department totaled 16,317.

In addition to the regular campaigns we prepare every year at the request of managers who have no art departments, hundreds of complete campaign for anniversaries, openings, special weeks, etc., besides producing the majority of institutional trailers used throughout the circuit. The work of the Toronto department is supplemented by exceptionally good campaigns prepared by Miss C. Freyvogel and Allan Spencer of Montreal; George Clark of Vancouver and Charles Kirby of Winnipeg.

Each week the tear sheets from the entire circuit are received in Toronto and expertly checked by Clare Appel, who, when the occasion demands it, re-drafts the ads using the same material, and sends the copy to the managers, showing them what improvements might be made in their copy

Newspapers Cooperate

Canadian newspapers are generous in what they call legitimate tieups. Reasonably enough, they only want a tieup when it means something to them as well as to the theatre. The leading chain of Canadian newspapers was enthused about a feature prepared by the Publicity Department on "Fashions From the Films" and gladly used this eight-column weekly spread across Canada because they knew we offered them something with reader interest. That's their yardstick and they won't be high-pressured into anything else. The same is true of leading stores. The greatest of them will be happy to give their windows and newspaper space to something they can sell, such as Shirley Temple dolls and dresses, move editions of books, clothes and jewelry used in pictures—but don't try to sell them something they can't cash in on!

In addition to preparing newspaper and publicity campaigns, our department works out a weekly broadcast with the Canadian Radio Commission by using a fifteen-minute re-enactment of a current movie on a late Thursday night program that covers Canada on a coast-to-coast network. This costs the company nothing but a little work.

Every Famous Players manager operates his theatre as if he owned it. There are no "must" orders regarding publicity. There are no restricting advertising budgets. Some of the publicity shown on these pages is an evidence that our managers are on the alert and take advantage of every possible break. Famous players managers operate their theatres as they should be operated—as businesses, not rackets.

JAMES R. NAIRN has been with Famous Players Canadian for five years coming to his post with much experience in newspaper work and exploitation before entering circuit operation

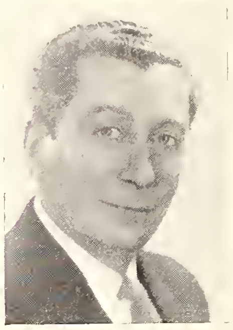
Harmony Sought On Every Picture

How results are secured at the Palace, Montreal, is detailed by Manager George Rotsky in outlining the activities of his staff, as an instance, on the preparation for the date on "Becky Sharp." So that the advertising, exploitation, front and lobby displays are in harmony, regular meetings are held on every picture. At these meetings are Rotsky, the advertising writer, publicity director, exploiteer and display artists.



GEORGE ROTSKY

It was decided on "Becky Sharp" that the entire campaign would feature that since the Palace was the first theatre in Canada to present talking pictures, it was also the first in Montreal to present the new technicolor film. The idea, says George, was that the two first coupled in the minds of his patrons would be in keeping with the prestige advertising of his house.

In the matter of fronts, George lays stress upon the fact that the art and copy tie in definitely with his newspaper advertising. The front was created to carry out the dignity of the house and the picture, though as this member writes, "the policy of making the front so that it is noticeable is never allowed to dominate the fact that it must bring money in at the box office."

Trailers and Radio

On pictures of this caliber, George uses preliminary trailers ahead of his regular advance and for "Sharp" plugged two weeks ahead a new era in entertainment angle, copy selling the technicolor slant.

Radio tie-ins were emphasized by local commentator on popular laundry program who devoted most of his period to an explanation of the process of coloring used in making the picture. Special preview for newspaper critics also aided the publicity.

Merchant tie-ups were widespread, says Rotsky, including a number of prominent stores, which featured the picture in book cooperations. One spot featured special Thackeray editions and another placed bookmarks in all outgoing packages.

Favorite recipes of the woman stars were also put out by the grocery department of another leading store, one side in English and the reverse in French. Becky Sharp headdress and collar were also featured in different establishments, and smoke shops and florists also cooperated.

Works With Local Society

George and his staff were responsible for an excellent advertising and exploitation campaign on the British picture, "Drake of England."

Prior to the opening he contacted secretary of local British Film Society, which has a large Montreal membership, and had them notify its entire membership by mail of the showing. This letter was directly responsible for extra admissions.

Bishop Describes His Music Nights

by LEONARD N. BISHOP

Manager, Capitol, Halifax, N. S.

For twenty-two consecutive weeks the Capitol Theatre, Halifax, has presented successfully a series of "Musical Nights" with amazing box-office results. "Musical Nights" are nothing more or less than amateur shows, but are presented on the stage with a finesse that, according to the opinion of many, give them the professional touch. In producing "Musical Nights" the "presentation" idea is used. The band is arranged on the stage on parallels, in pyramid fashion. A set of blacks is used for a background. Cut-out metallic paper of varied colors and in designs that are changed from week to week are fastened to the black velour background.

L. N. BISHOP

All the dancing schools in the city became interested in this innovation, for it provided an outlet for their pupils and unlimited advertising possibilities for them. In rotation, they prepare tap ensembles, and ballet routines weeks in advance. They work for a small monetary consideration.

The approximate cost of a "Musical Night" is $75.00 to $85.00. They are generally presented on the last day of a picture, and the slight cost is returned tenfold.

Use Amateurs of All Kinds

Amateurs of all kinds and descriptions are used; singers, dancers and instrumentalists. They are introduced by the Master of Ceremonies (who happens to be the writer).

Great care is taken with the lighting effects. The acts seldom do more than three or four minutes, and the programme, which runs about forty to forty-five minutes as a rule, is kept moving at a merry clip. An occasional "blackout," comedy situation or gag is used. The programme is always prepared with an idea to balance, and never in one instance has anybody walked out on the show. The Master of Ceremonies has successfully planted the idea that "Musical Nights" lend a marvellous opportunity to develop talent, and that it is incumbent upon the citizens of Halifax to support and encourage their own. The response to date has been exceptional.

There is no attempt to introduce the "hook." Every performer is taken seriously, presented in a cordial fashion.

By this time, the writer, since he has taken the opportunity of playing the role of Master of Ceremonies, has become intimate with the patrons, and has taken advantage of telling them about forthcoming productions, little bits of chatter of institutional importance and so on.

It has been the experience of the writer that it is futile to advertise for talent. One must simply keep looking for them, and it is astonishing just how much talent there is if one digs for it.

Arthur Uses Living Model On "She" Lobby Display

The lobby of the Imperial in Toronto, Canada's largest theatre, is used to the utmost advantage in selling his coming shows by Manager Jack Arthur.

A week in advance of the showing of "She," a large replica of the book was placed where incoming patrons couldn't miss it—at the head of the stairs leading into the theatre. Attractively painted and lighted with spots, the book stood eight feet high by four feet wide. In the opening an attractive living model (see photo) costumed as "She," was posed with a native girl in bright costume passed out heralds to the patrons. The display was made so that at certain hours when the model was off duty an attractive cut-out was substituted.

Makes "Richelieu" Tieups

Out in Penticton, B. C., where its difficult to make publicity contacts, E. G. Smith of the Empress, succeeded in formulating a comprehensive campaign on "Cardinal Richelieu," which, in addition to regular house and newspaper advertising, consisted of a number of window displays, spot radio announcements, jewelry tie-ups of costume valuables, and hat store contacts on "Richelieu" hats. Hooking up with a national campaign on Model Coaches, Smith reaped additional benefit.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Knevels Plugs Color On "Becky Sharp" Tieups

Howard Knevels of the Regent, Ottawa, Ontario, really went to town on "Becky Sharp," with a comprehensive campaign that apparently covered all angles. In addition to an extensive ad campaign, a special house front was designed in striking colors. Full-size window displays were secured from several department stores which were augmented by a number of window cards, heralds and throwaways. Book-marks were placed in libraries, tying in the feature with Thackeray's novel.

A large newspaper ad was sponsored by a beauty salon, on a hair-dressing tie-up, in which the theatre attraction was liberally displayed.

Wilson's Annual Flower Contest

by JAMES R. NAIRN

Ad Director, Famous Players Canadian

A showman hitched his hobby to his lobby and the result is his greatest box office attraction of the year! The showman is Walter Wilson, manager of the Capitol theatre, Edmonton, Alberta, and his hobby is rose growing. Three years ago Walter Wilson started his first Rose Show in the lobby of the Capitol theatre in July. It caused city-wide interest and he immediately saw its tremendous possibilities and started to work in earnest. His second show was even greater and there is no question but that his third show this month will be the biggest attraction of its kind the West has ever seen. The entries this year will tax the capacity of the theatre to the utmost.

WALTER WILSON

Gets Mayor to Cooperate

Wilson got the mayor behind the campaign to make Edmonton the "Rose City of the West" and public-spirited citizens took up the campaign.

Radio stations and newspapers were generous in their cooperation and Wilson obtained the assistance of a reputable firm of growers in Edmonton who have sold more than 5,000 rose bushes a year as the result of the campaigns in the past. This year 10,200 rose bushes were sold through Capitol Theatre coupons!

The Capitol theatre charges no entry fee for the show. Pamphlets describing the contest and the best methods for rose growing are given free to every patron of the Capitol upon the purchase of an admission ticket. Coupons attached to the pamphlet entitle patrons of the Capitol to a substantial reduction in the price of rose bushes through the theatre's tie-up with the growers. The bushes are bought early in the season for delivery in the spring.

Entries Sent to Theatre

Roses for the contest are sent in to the Capitol theatre, accompanied by entry blanks obtained at the box office, and are arranged and ticketed by the manager and his staff. These are on display to patrons of the house and are later judged by an expert on horticulture. Prizes, donated by Edmonton merchants, are presented from the stage of the theatre at the close of the contest.

Entirely apart from the heavy advertising and good-will the Capitol theatre receives in Edmonton and surrounding towns as the result of this annual Rose Show, the box-office is stimulated every July to the extent of doubling normal receipts, which is no small accomplishment.

Wilson's hobby pays off in dollars and good-will.

THE COLLEGE TOWN THEATRE

Good-Will of Students Essential To Successful Operation of This Type of House, Says Theatreman

by E. O. SMITHIES
Manager, Capitol, Kingston, Ont.

The value of good-will has been stressed and discussed so extensively in theatre management articles that we are all aware of its vast importance in the conduct and operation of the present-day theatre.

But it is only the manager of a theatre in a college town who really appreciates its full meaning. He may have the choice of the entire picture product, his services may be unexcelled and his theatre the finest in the land, but if he has not the good-will of the student body, his theatre will not be a success.

After 15 years operating a theatre in a town that must look for its revenue from students of two universities, a little of our experience in cementing good-will with them may prove a little help to those managers who may be called upon to operate theatres in college towns.

Our first line of attack on the good-will front is the Freshman. Each year between three and four hundred young fellows and girls come to town to register for a stay of between three to six years. These, together with the other students and the teaching staff, make up the entire population and its main source of revenue; so you will readily understand our anxiety to get their good-will the minute they come to town.

Mails Cards of Welcome

This is done by mailing them a card of welcome as fast as we find their respective boarding house. On the card we express the hope that they will be successful in their studies, give them a few interesting facts about our town and incidentally work in the theatre, its prices, times of shows, change of programs and the advantages of group theatre parties. Our next move is to acquaint ourselves with the different "Year" chairmen as soon as elected. To these, we mail personal letters congratulating them and suggesting that they bring their "Year" down to the theatre as a get-together gesture. Our next move is to learn who will be the members of the Alma Mater Society (the student government body) and when elected, send each a pass to be our guests for an evening. In this way I personally meet every important member of the different branches of student life. The Literary Society, the Drama Group, the English Clubs, Debating Class, etc. Knowing all these people personally comes in mighty handy in promoting certain pictures that come along and need just that kind of exploitation support.

VISITS STUDIOS. That's Manager Larry Graburn (left), Capitol, Winnipeg, visiting on the Warner lot in Hollywood with James Dunn and director Bob Florey.

Contacts Sports Units

Another important part of our good-will campaign consists of making ourselves friendly with the different sport units. As a rule the members of the different sporting fraternities are the most popular chaps in the college and are looked up to by the other students. Through this connection we have been very successful in eliminating, to a great extent, the periodical student "Rushes" at the theatre. We support all their activities that call for programs by taking space in them. We take regular space in their bi-weekly newspaper and permit them to cover the attractions and report same in their columns. In this way the theatre becomes part of the students' university career.

Have the students sour on you, and your theatre and they will make your life pretty miserable. On the other hand, cultivate their friendship, take an active part in their different activities, invite the players of the senior football team to your show the night before an important game, give your aid when they ask it to their amateur theatricals, and you will operate a very successful and profitable theatre.

Stresses Vacant Store Displays

Manager C. G. Holmes of the Royal Theatre, Guelph, Ontario, watches for vacant store premises upon the main thoroughfares, wherein he sets up his attractive window displays which bring added business to the theatre. Circularizing an extensive mailing list, by means of a postcard, advertising coming attractions, has also proved of value in bolstering his general publicity campaigns.

Town Band Parades On Bolinsky Date

Offering his patrons a variation in entertainment with the advent of hot weather, Joe Bolinsky of the Capitol, Paris, Ontario, sold a dance teacher on the idea of sponsoring a dance revue comprised of local talent. The home-town angle, plus the novelty of stage attraction created a boost in business.

Plugging the patriotic angle on "Lest We Forget" a Canadian war film, Bolinsky persuaded the Town Band to stage a parade. The musicians confined themselves to patriotic airs, and Bolinsky headed the troupe with a large banner selling his attraction. Tieups with local and surrounding regions brought a number of theatre parties.

Easson Adds New Slant To Kid Show Angles

Some of the oldest gags are still the best. Alan Easson, manager of the neighborhood Oakwood Theatre, Toronto, Ontario, doped out a Kiddies' Kartune Club by giving a new slant to a collection of kid show ideas with amazing results. Starting off along the line of hundreds of other clubs by having children fill in the membership application blanks to be exchanged for cards with punch numbers from one to ten, Easson worked out a new cartoon angle.

Each child was given a sheet of cheap paper on which was printed a famous cartoon character in miniature. The children were asked to draw the cartoon on an enlarged scale. The theatre's coming shows were printed on each sheet, sheets distributed at the Saturday matinee to be returned completed on the following Saturday.

After the drawings were judged, 10 winning numbers were flashed on the screen and these children were given free tickets for the following Saturday matinee. Winning sketches were displayed in the lobby. It's proven a great business builder.

Joiner Creates Thrill Gag On "Frankenstein" Trailer

Prior to his showing of the "Bride of Frankenstein" trailer, M. S. Joiner of the Orpheum, Vancouver, B. C., successfully tried this attention-arrester. All house lights, including aisle lights, were switched off. An effect of a skeleton carrying a woman in his arms, was flashed on the organ grill, and moved around the top of the proscenium arch, to the right-hand organ grill. Then back to the center, at which point the regular trailer broke through the effect.

Both the effect and the trailer were shown by using green gelatin in front of the lens. Additional effects were created by the use of thunder sheet, wind machine, wind whistle, etc., from off stage, through the duration of the trick.

Robertson Clicks With Various Exploitations

A splendid tie-up brought J. M. Robertson of the Capitol, Victoria, a real ticket selling front on "Public Hero No. 1." Complete finger-printing apparatus, handcuffs, leg-irons, batons, bullets, and other items of criminology featured the display, which had as its feature the original Identification Wanted Card used in the capture of John Dillinger, by the U. S. Department of Justice, containing photos, description, and finger prints of the once wanted man. The entire display was augmented by art cut-outs and displays of the attraction.

One of the feature broadcasts of a local radio station in Victoria, was a contest for the discovery of juvenile radio talent. The presentation aroused keen interest in the city, and 75 contestants competed for the sponsored prizes. J. M. Robertson of the Capitol successfully secured at no cost to the theatre the Grand Finals of the Kiddies Contest, as a special stage attraction, with a resultant marked increase in business for the theatre.

Egan Breaks Page One During Stampede Week

Pete Egan, Palace, Calgary, broke the front pages of the local newspapers by digging up Dad Johnson, a well-known character in Calgary whose early life on the range gave Owen Wister some of the material for his novel, "The Virginian." Egan played the picture to great business during the famous Calgary Stampede.

He also used the old, but ever-effective "rube" stunt as a street ballyhoo parading a stooge dressed as a farmer through the main streets with the sign, "In Town to See the Virginian at the Palace" fastened to his carpet bag.

When the circus advance man arrived in Calgary, Alberta, Pete Egan of the Palace, learning he was one of the West Coast's best known organists, sold him on the idea of six organ recitals, during which there was a heavy theatre ad plug, interspersed with circus copy. Visitors were reminded of Palace show times and attractions, and gratis banners were obtained to be placed in side-show tents.

LOOKING AT SHOWBUSINESS

In Which a Canadian Member Sets Down Some Observations On Different Phases of Operation

by WALTER F. DAVIS

Manager, Capitol, Regina, Sask.

WALTER F. DAVIS

A dark house means opportunity lost. The foyer of the Capitol Theatre, Regina, Saskatchewan, has a floor space of 20 by 112 feet level with the sidewalk with doors opening on the two most thronged thoroughfares. There may be no "show" Sunday evenings, but the theatre is thrown open and "Famous Players" are at home to the strolling public. The foyer is lit up, bathed in rich golden shades and cooling colors, the lounge is given a warm and friendly atmosphere, choice radio programs lend charm, while, as host and chatelaine, Mrs. Davis and I move genially about with the groups.

We give warm greeting to all out-of-town visitors and local citizens alike—with the whole scene always in full control. On the tables is plentiful display of coming attractions, reading matter of house programs, and a wide array of fan magazines and motion picture periodicals. Guests are left free to pass to and fro, resting awhile, listening to the air concert, reading and smoking, and visitors enjoy the innovation of a quiet couple of hours in pleasant atmosphere. There is nothing commercial or mercenary about it, but it makes many friends for the Capitol Theatre.

Printed Matter Useful

Every piece of lithograph, novelty or odd art work in the publications pertaining to motion pictures, we have our art shop mount them, with striking background, borders, etc.

Have them on display in the foyer, lobby and out front.

This is the only method for this printed matter to reach the public—such a variety of displays—always something new. They never fail to attract a lot of attention.

Is Against Passes

Anything negative is an evil to its subject. If that is good philosophy the major evil to the theatre business is the "free admission."

The passes issued year in and year out, regardless of service rendered to newshawks, city and government officials and the like—must be definitely eliminated.

Let 'em howl! A theatre's business is merchandising seats. There are no sidelines, no by-products.

A store-man who would give his stock away for some imaginary favor he might have through press publicity or civic protection, would soon ruin his shop.

The policy is a detriment to the whole show business. It COULD be stopped. And that, without curtailing a manager's discretionary power in the interest of charity or good advertising.

Regarding Billboards

Billboard advertising is designated as "propaganda extraordinary." It may be costly, but actual diagnosis will show that, when warranted, it is effective and practical. Circumstances alter everything.

No manufacturer would dream of using a billboard for one sale. The objective is to generalize a commodity and its attractiveness in the mind of the public. Undoubtedly a psychosis is created that will follow through with a purchase.

It is different with a picture. It has only one sale. Prohibitive costs make billboard advertising unthinkable. No warrant for it.

Again, the same people pass the same billboard all the time, unless the billboards are on a prominent artery, their psychological effect can be of little use to the theatre.

Ritchie Stresses Fronts In Congested District

Being a suburban theatre in a congested district, with a concentrated booking policy, A. Ritchie of the Alhambra, Toronto, has successfully concentrated on building fronts (see photo), which have garnered him a goodly share of business. On "Ruggles of Red Gap," Ritchie worked an imprinted wrapping paper and bag stunt, which bore lucky free pass numbers. News stands also co-operated along similar lines.

In order to bolster Saturday matinees, a cartoon blotter was created, and circulated to kiddies at the schools. Cartoons and other short attractions which would appeal to youngsters, were also added to programs.

Finds Personal Mailing List Valuable For Better Contacts

There is no single item of publicity more important to any theatre than a live mailing list, and nothing more useless than letters or circulars sent out in a hit-and-miss manner addressed to "The Householder." The latter commands neither respect nor attention.

Realizing that in our situation, with all the great Fraser Valley back of us, that a live mailing list was vital to the real success of our theatre, we decided after much study and thought, that the best way to build up such a list was to start from scratch, and build slowly but permanently. Therefore, by means of advertising on the screen and the papers, circulating within a radius of forty or fifty miles, we advised our patrons that anyone desiring a list of coming attractions, to be issued bi-monthly, might have their name placed on the mailing list by handing it in at the box-office, or to any employee. The list has grown steadily ever since that time, until now it is in the neighborhood of six hundred, every name being there at the person's special request.

It is our constant aim to make the wording of these letters of such a nature that it will create a real intimacy, and a feeling in the patrons receiving them that the Columbia Theatre is their theatre. That this result has been achieved is witnessed by the many letters we receive thanking us for the service, and also containing valuable suggestions.

We have found our mailing list, in addition to the publicity and goodwill created, of incalculable value through the suggestions written in by many patrons. This is undoubtedly the surest way of keeping in touch with public opinion.—By J. P. Pitner, Manager, Columbia Theatre, New Westminster, B. C.

Purves Invites Children To Sign Temple Book

Jack Purves, manager of the Capitol theatre, Sudbury, Ontario, sponsored an excellent stunt for his theatre. His artist, Harry Young, produced a large book, three by six feet, with the cover inscription, "Happy Birthday, Shirley—we celebrate your birthday at a special show in the Capitol Theatre, Sudbury, Canada."

A special Shirley Temple morning show was advertised and children attending were invited to sign their names in the greeting book to be sent to the little star in Hollywood. The birthday book contained the signatures of 1,480 kiddies who attended the special show. Just 1,480 extra admissions for an idea.

Purves is turning out some nice art work, accompanying photo showing some of the work executed by his artist, Harry Young, for lobby set piece on "Nitwits" with special stage show.

Another striking setpiece produced by these showmen was on "Bride of Frankenstein," featuring a giant cutout head of Karloff bordered in contrasting colors and topping a three-panel board with copy.

Local Dealers Supply Smart's Birthday Party

J. S. Smart of the Capitol Theatre, Port Hope, Ontario, capitalizes each year on his theatre's anniversary. This year he announced a birthday party for all the theatre's patrons and ice cream, cake and soft drinks were supplied by local dealers, each of whom advertised the party. The refreshments were obtained without cost in return for credits. Electric refrigerators were borrowed for the occasion on the same terms. Smart ran his party on the poorest two days of his week.

Merchants Cooperate On Popularity Contest

Manager W. P. McGeachie, Algoma Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, recently arranged a popularity voting contest for the most popular girl, leading merchants participating. The theatre obtained a great deal of front-page publicity and McGeachie arranged for the ballots to be deposited at the theatre, and also for the presentation of the prizes from the stage.

Road House Plugs Picture Over Act

When Bob Knevels of the Capitol, Hamilton, Ontario, played "West Point of the Air," he secured 3,000 heralds, with a glider cut-out imprint, and distributed them at schools, playgrounds, swimming pools, and other places where children gather; twenty cut-out standees were prominently located.

A tie-up was arranged with the opening of a new roadhouse, bringing radio spot announcements and advertising in which the cost to the theatre was 50 guest tickets.

Community Spirit Good Exploitation

by WALTER GOLDING

Manager, Capitol, St. John, N. B.

Some might consider it in bad taste to include community spirit and cooperation in the category of exploitation as concerning a theatre. Be that as it may, the reflex of such helpfulness to the public at large I have found to be one of the most potent factors in building up and retaining goodwill.

That certainly has been the case with Capitol Theatre, Saint John, N. B., Canada. When the house was opened 22 years ago in the presence of the late A. Paul Keith, partner in that enterprise with E. F. Albee, he turned to the writer after the big doings were over with the remark:

"There it is, Walter, it's your house. Run it as if it was your very own. This is your town, you know its people best. Keep the house clean, pay your bills promptly, offend nobody and we'll stand at your back."

That was a wonderful cue to hand a man breaking into a fairly small community with an 1,800-seat house. But exemplification of that advice, which has been repeated by changing executives up to the present day, has built a patronage which is rooted to the very heart of every home within the scope of the theatre.

Between-hour and after-hour entertainments for orphanages, Jewish relief movements, Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., Red Cross, etc., have made Capitol Theatre a powerful instrument in the public weal. Miniature trade fairs have been held in its lobbies and behind its expansive plateglass frontage Oxford Groups have packed it to the roof.

In fact hardly a month passes but what the instrumentality of the theatre is sought to put over some public welfare effort. It has even permitted pantry sales in its waiting-room parlors off the main lobby to buy shoes and stockings so that poor kiddies might attend school.

Theatre Friend of All

I do not have to explain to my fellow showmen that this constant contact with an element of people whose hearts and hands are so usefully employed for the benefit of others, has not redounded biblically to our commercial benefit, although I shy at that word "commercial." The best people feel Capitol Theatre is its friend and councillor. This applies to the Catholic community, the Rabbis, Evangelical Alliance, Salvation Army, as well as the altruistic secular bodies of the city.

This use of our house I have always considered in the light of class-A citizenship. A close personal interest, too, the right thing on the part of the staff. But some managers, I have heard, frown upon this form of gratuity for reasons I could never well understand. I am convinced, nevertheless, that there are eternal reasons why helpfulness in such cases are never barren of helpful reactions.

In a popular-priced house of entertainment community spirit takes on its 'nth degree of effectiveness. Built for life in lighter vein it is doubly blessed when it occasionally steps out of its role and lends its power to helping solve the more serious phases.

Theatre Fronts For The Smaller Towns

by HARRY E. CREASEY

Manager, Capitol, Kamloops, B. C.

In the average small town with its three changes a week, the problem of an attractive front is always foremost in the manager's mind. As it is too expensive to build special fronts, except occasionally, activities must be confined, for the most part, to utilizing the standard frames to the best advantage.

Paint is inexpensive and will work wonders. We paint frames every three months, also re-varnish larger surfaces at the same time. I have found that a very inexpensive manner of attracting attention to frames is by changing the backgrounds. This we do with the aid of wallpaper, using a high-grade paper that is not only attractive but also sun-proof. Designs can be chosen to suit the different seasons of the year. Since we have been using wallpaper we have put it to many uses, such as backgrounds for lobby displays. When changing the backgrounds of display frames we also place the 11 by 14 frames at a different angle than formerly, which breaks the monotony. Two large wall frames which formerly held three-sheets are now used for one-sheets with the extra space being used for various designs and ideas to make a setting for the one-sheet.

We have two one-sheet frames on the walls by both entrance doors; these have been utilized for many months to give space to a program of the current month's attractions. I cannot recall any display that has attracted more continuous attention from patrons, as it is only natural that they are anxious to know of the play dates of coming attractions.

Changes Color to Solid White

After many years of dark colors on the front of the house it was decided to change it to a solid white. The result not only makes a much smarter front but lighting from both Neon sign and regular white lighting, is much more effective.

As we use a canvas marquee during the summer months, it does not lend itself to the hanging of large banners. In their place we hang small banners both sides of the marquee. These are made from smooth finished lumber and as kalsomine and water colors are used they are easily washed after each using and will last indefinitely.

While some managers may not agree with me, I personally do not believe in having my cashier wear a uniform. With the idea in mind of eliminating monotony and realizing that we are catering mostly to the same people each week, I would rather have my cashier wear her own dresses which, naturally, she constantly changes.

"No parking" signs are always kept clean and painted. An announcement board on the sidewalk is always in the same condition.

A smart, attractive, clean front will pay dividends, especially so in the summer time, as it will attract tourists, many of whom must be sold on the idea that the small town theatre is just as good as the big city theatre that they know so well.

Circuit Art Departments Aid Theatres With Ace Displays

Prior to September, 1930, all the display work for Famous Players theatres in Toronto was farmed out to various sign shops. In many cases managers could not afford the type of displays they wanted and in a great number of situations the front and lobby displays did more harm to the attraction than good.

The idea behind the unit was to produce up-to-the-minute displays at a cost that could come within the budget of every theatre. With 26 theatres on his list as customers, Ben Cronk organized his department to that end. The most modern equipment such as air spray outfits, multicut machines, electric saws, etc., were installed and by a system of careful buying and distributing, the department has been able to provide theatres with displays that were not only most effective but considerably cheaper than those devised by commercial shops. The department has been self-sustaining from the start.

The artists produce not only the latest in fronts but lobby displays, mats, window cards and silk screen process cards. A system of distribution by light trucks enables the smallest suburban theatre to receive in a short space of time the same elaborate displays as the de luxe downtown houses use, and at nominal cost.

Ben Cronk's department has had to seek larger quarters on two occasions because of the volume of work which is handled by 13 expert men, all of whom are capable of turning out every kind of work. The displays from this sign shop compare favorably with those from anywhere on the continent from both an artistic and advertising standpoint.

Exceptionally fine departments, operated on a smaller scale than that in Toronto, are maintained in Winnipeg under the direction of Charles Kirby; Hamilton under Ernest Marchell; and Vancouver under George Clark and L. B. Phillips. Smart displays are created in other cities and towns by local sign shops under the supervision of the managers.—By James R. Nairn, Director of Advertising.

Forhan's Monthly Calendar Jumps Rural Business

Generously acknowledging that he adapted the idea from Charlie Querrie of the Palace theatre, Toronto, George J. Forhan, of the Belle theatre, Belleville, Ontario, produces a monthly calendar 11 by 14 inches that he claims is a "natural" for small town rural trade.

Each day of the month is checked off with the name of his feature printed underneath. The calendar is punched for hanging on the wall and carries this announcement: "Each day in May I call some one on the telephone, asking if they have our calendar. If you have, and can tell me what picture is playing on a certain date, a double guest ticket will be left at the box office for you."

"In my 25 years of operating theatres," says Forhan, "I have never put out a piece of advertising that is a better business or good-will getter. We have won many new patrons through our telephone contacts and it has jumped my rural business."

Maddin Promotes Fair Officials

In Kelowna, British Columbia, in the heart of the fruit belt, they run a big Fair each year, celebrating their fruit harvest. Manager W. Maddin of the Empress sold the Fair officials on the idea of a popularity contest, staged at the theatre, ballots given with admissions.

Maddin also publishes a small mimeographed booklet, which carries, in addition to theatre publicity, a large number of advertisements, which more than compensate for operating costs. This little magazine is in great demand in Kelowna, and possesses a large circulation.

Doctor Gets Results With Popularity Contest

In a town where there is no radio, and the local press hard to crack, Manager C. Doctor worked a genuine money-making stunt in his Movie Queen Contest, at the Capitol, Nelson. Advance publicity, in the form of trailer, house advertising, merchant tie-up, cash prizes promoted from local business men.

Purely a popularity contest, operated through ballot vote, Doctor announced his results entirely from the theatre stage, without having resort to the press, and thus centered interest entirely within the confines of the house, with an evident increase in receipts. A check of ballots showed the effectiveness of the stunt, when 80 per cent of the ballots distributed, were used for voting returns.

Doctor concentrates much of his publicity in the outlying districts and ties in with bus lines for regular bannering. Accompanying photo shows hookup on "Goin' to Town."

Spencer Thinks Quickly On "Lost City" Gag

What's one man's tough luck is another's publicity

A water main burst in front of the Tivoli Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, and Manager C. T. Spencer, who was playing "The Lost City," immediately had large signs placed on the barricade reading "Found at Last—The Lost City" with arrows on the sign pointing to his theatre. Plenty of people attracted by the sign stopped to look down the hole. Maybe they hoped to see "The Lost City"! Many of them did—after buying tickets at the Tivoli box office.

Spencer's front for the picture which consisted of a barricaded door with the sign, "Enter the Lost City," also attracted considerable attention. Photos in entrance doors were placed on end and proved additional interest-arousers (see photo).

Drohan Ties Theatre To Merchant Promotion

A. P. Drohan, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, was responsible for an excellent no-expense tie-up with the Chatham Daily News. The newspaper wished to call attention to week-end bargains being offered by local merchants and ran over 3,000 extra copies, which gave considerable coverage in the surrounding districts.

An eight-column heading carried the line "Stars everywhere Friday and Saturday—star values at our stores and Will Rogers at the Capitol Theatre."

Paul Valliere of the Capitol, Quebec, worked out a novel ticket-selling stunt for "Bride of Frankenstein." The moulding and creation of the mask proved an excellent crowd bait, and resulted in many added ticket sales at the nearby wickets.

Moule's Tieups Obtain Full Page Co-op Ads

Ernie Moule, manager of the Capitol theatre, Brantford, Ontario, has an unusually spacious and beautiful lobby in his theatre and he has it working for him all the time. By giving important and reputable firms in Brantford occasional lobby displays he is paid back many times by co-operative advertising.

A tie-up with the local gas company, for instance, brought him on full page of advertising topped by the names of his attractions in an eight-column streamer. In addition the gas company devoted 400 lines to straight advertising of the Capitol's picture and a giveaway stunt for Capitol patrons. A similar tie-up was made with Studebaker Champions. Moule exhibited the new models in his lobby and was given a full-page ad on his pictures with such a direct hook-up as "You won't find anything less than 'Champion' pictures at the Capitol."

Any time you begin to think your situation is a tough one, consider the problems of Will Harper, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Trail, British Columbia and smile!

About 1,500 of the population of Rossland have to come to Trail to work and the Rossland-Trail highway is the only vehicular connection between the two towns. As the people must travel by highway, the road is the theatre's most important advertising medium.

Harper uses roadside posts, rocks and fences for hand-painted signs. As the newspaper in his town does not give him sufficient coverage, Harper resorts to spot announcements on the radio and handbills distributed on the busses running between the towns.

In the Stampede parade, advantage was taken to build up a theatre float, from which throwaways were distributed publicizing the local features of the program. Theatre men here are looking forward to the fall season with high hopes. With box office receipts steadily on the upgrade and an interesting group of pictures in the offing, chances for business are the best in a long time. When the Fair was here last summer and the summer before, business was exceptional; this summer comparatively it has been even better.

One thing that will help business here a great deal will be the end of the free summer music concerts which are held nightly during July and August along the lake front. This form of entertainment, which runs from philharmonic orchestras to band music, draws crowds nightly of from 10 to 50 thousand persons, depending upon the attraction offered. Needless to say, this cuts into the theatre grosses, but the theatre men are civic minded and, realizing the good such an attraction does the community, voice no protest.

SENSATION

EASTMAN Super X Film was originally designed for rephotographing projected backgrounds. Yet because of its great speed it also won fame as the negative extraordinary for tough newsreel shots. And now it is being widely used for regular feature production, as well. Offering not only extra speed but generally improved photographic quality, Super X is unquestionably the sensation of the year in 35-millimeter raw film. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. THE THEATRE AS A MOTION PICTURE MECHANISM

A story of the advancement in theatre equipment through twenty years will be a prominent editorial feature of the

MARTIN QUIGLEY

20th

ANNIVERSARY EDITION

in which will be celebrated the progress of the motion picture and its industry since 1915, when Martin Quigley began his career in motion picture journalism.

Appearing in September, this elaborate edition of the industry's leading publication will be exactly concurrent with the beginning of a new show season—a season, incidentally, which will be the greatest in product and patronage that the motion picture business has enjoyed for a number of years.

"The Theatre as a Motion Picture Mechanism" recounts the steady growth in the mechanical needs of the theatre as the motion picture became the modern world's universal medium of the theatrical arts. Not only does the theatre complete a process carried but part way by the studio; it has immense technical functions derived from its position as the motion picture industry's only contact with a vast heterogeneous public. "The Theatre as a Motion Picture Mechanism" is thus a story of modern theatre equipment.

CATCHES THEIR EYE

A new PITTCO THEATRE FRONT

BRINGS THEM IN

MODERNIZE Main Street by remodeling your theatre with a new Pittco Theatre Front . . . and see how it lures prospective movie-goers inside, see how your admission figures and profits grow! Pittco Store Front Products, already famous for their quality and beauty in the store-modernizing field, have been applied to theatre use with outstanding success by many theatre managers and owners . . . and they can make your theatre more profitable, too!

Don't think for a minute that you can't afford to modernize your store. Usually a new Pittco Store Front pays for itself in a short time by the extra business it pulls. And thanks to the National Housing Act, you can apply, if necessary, to a local lending institution for a loan to help you finance a new Pittco Front. Our representative will gladly assist you to negotiate such a loan. And we recommend that you retain a local architect to design your new front for you.

You'll want our booklet "How Modern Store Fronts Work Profit Magic," which contains all the facts about Pittco Fronts, numerous pictures of Pittco-remodeled buildings of all types, construction costs, and resulting business increases, etc. Clip the coupon for your copy.

BEFORE: Here's the Banner Theatre, Chicago, Ill., as it looked to prospective theatre patrons before being remodeled.

AFTER: Who would recognize it today, after this new Pittco Theatre Front has dressed it up with sales appeal and business-drawing personality? Naturally, people would prefer to patronize this handsome theatre!

New G-E COPPER OXIDE RECTIFIER IMPROVES PROJECTION EFFICIENCY

This new General Electric Copper Oxide Rectifier is especially designed to meet the requirements of projection lamps using the new Suprex carbons. It is a rectifying device of proven reliability, safety and economy. The G-E Copper Oxide Rectifier operates indefinitely without attention or replacement. The three-unit transformer for three-phase, full-wave rectification delivers extremely smooth output. Great operating flexibility is provided by line voltage taps and secondary taps for adjustments in line voltage, arc voltage, and current. This wide range of adjustments meets all individual operating needs.

The G-E Copper Oxide Rectifier is available in two sizes: 40-50 amperes for the 6-7 mm. trim and 40-65 amperes for the 6.5-8 mm. trim. The overall efficiency of both is 70 per cent. Such high efficiency saves from 5 to 10 cents per hour in cost of current over other types of D-c. power equipment. Mail the coupon today for complete information on this G-E Copper Oxide Rectifier.

How Many Theatres Are Equipped for 1935-36 Product?

MOTION PICTURE entertainment can be no better than the equipment with which it is created. And it is ultimately created, of course, in the theatre.

For this rather obvious but imperfectly realized reason the beginning of the 1935-36 season advises a comprehensive examination of the facilities of our theatres. Are they equal to — are they worthy of — the product to come to them from the studio?

One need not consider in this connection their possession or lack of the story characteristics which please one's patrons. Certainly, the 1935-36 motion picture will represent technique that has steadily advanced.

Every showman, no matter how much he may have quarreled with the studio concerning the selection of story subjects and material, is conscious of the technological and artistic progress of the motion picture since the introduction of sound. And the 1935-36 product will unquestionably reveal greater progress than has been made previously between one season and the next.

WORKERS OF THE CINEMA, ART OF THE MACHINE

Ida Lupino, Aubrey Scotto: Paramount

Probably the most notable recent advancement lies in the recording. Many have been the improvements here. Many others, however, were merely talked about before they were fully realized in practice. Extension of the frequency range is a case in point. Another is control of extraneous sound, and yet another is control of realistic allocation of sound sources. It is not the purpose here to make a mere list of recent advancements in the methods and mechanisms of production. These paragraphs are necessarily concerned with the theatre—the theatre as it relates to production at the beginning of a new show season which promises to bring a finer motion picture. It may be well to point out, however, the general significance of the greater flexibility allowed both performer and director as a result of the solution of many technical problems which had rendered the new audible picture stilted, and the consequent return to pictorial values in the art of narration and staging.

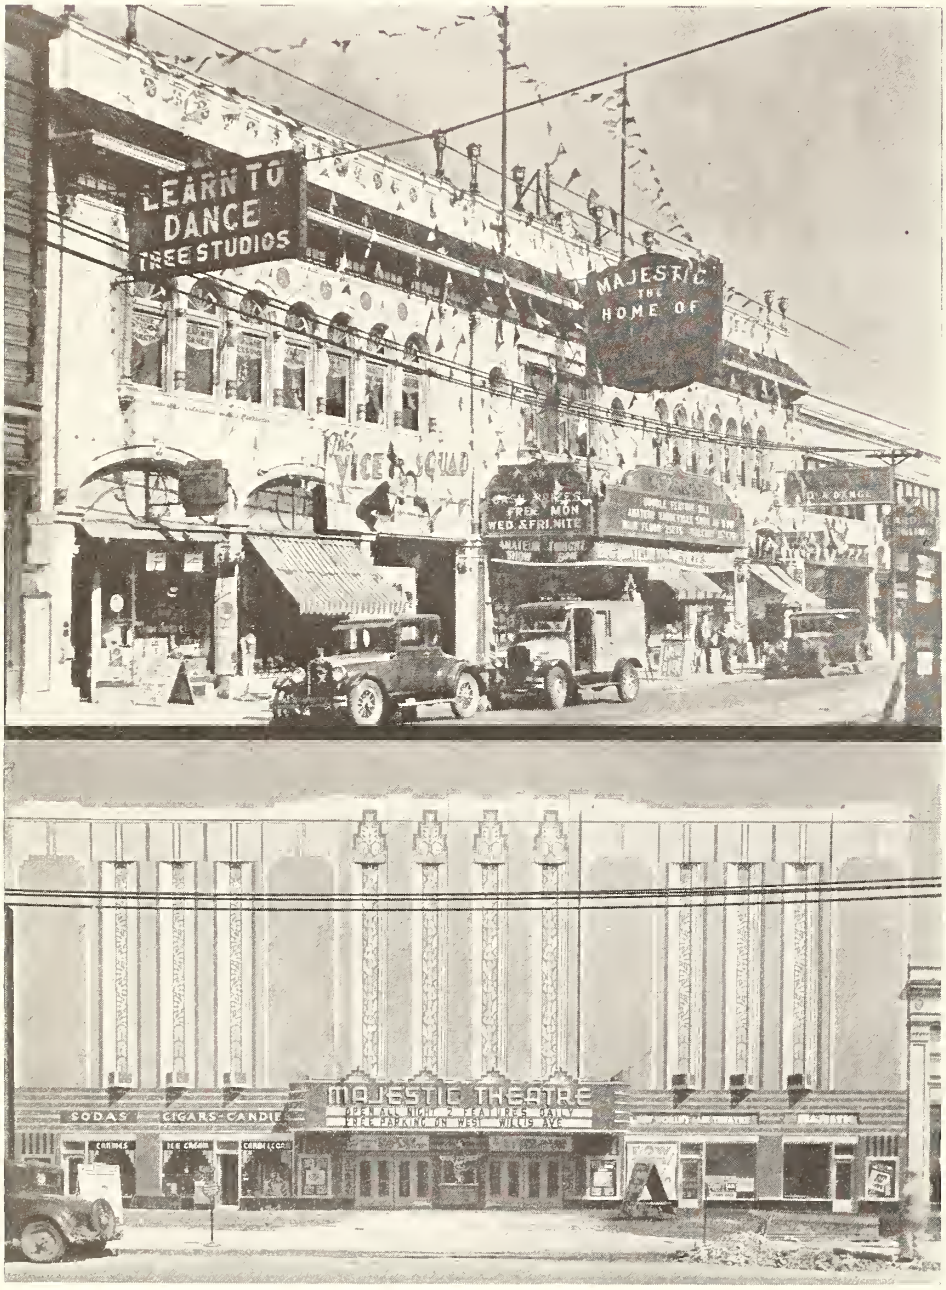
But a finer motion picture in the can does not mean finer motion picture entertainment, and that represents a problem of the theatre alone.

It is not wholly a problem involving projection and sound equipment, but it doubtless is more importantly concerned with those functions. A source of misgivings, then, in viewing the approach of a new season, is the fact that a large proportion of our theatres have screens which are either under-illuminated or unevenly illuminated . . . the fact that the ravages of the depression are still manifest in ill-repaired projector mechanisms . . . the fact that not much more than half of our theatres are equipped to reproduce the voices and the music of the film with the naturalness and effectiveness that is potentially there on the film. Speaking before the Technician's branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Science, in Hollywood the other day, M. A. Lightman, who is president of the large Malco circuit with headquarters at Memphis, Tenn., declared that 50% of the theatres today won't get any more out of the product now available than just ordinary results—this, in his particular reference, because of the lack of suitable sound equipment. Mr. Lightman's prominence and experience covering many theatres perhaps permits further quotation from his Academy speech:

"Some theatres and some exhibitors have advanced, but I think that in general the exhibitor must be told and must be kept acquainted with what you are doing out here. The exhibitor has an obligation to the industry to keep his equipment up to the best possible efficiency."

Nor, as was indicated, does the problem—the obligation—end with the provision of suitable projection and sound facilities. The theatre plays a complex part in the merchandising of the motion picture, and one of its components is environmental. Comfort is mandatory. Absolute safety is imperative. Attractive, stimulating surroundings elevate the motion picture as a dramatic form and thus reinforce its conviction. In all its departments, the theatre is one-half of the great motion picture mechanism. Now, with the 1935-36 product on the way, inspection should be made to determine whether it is capable of doing its part.—AN EDITORIAL.

A MODERN THEATRE FOR A MODERNIZED STREET



Pictured above are the old front (upper view) and the new of the Majestic theatre in Detroit. The facade is built of macotta in a pattern of vertical line motif contrived through offsets. Each block of macotta is edged with a narrow band of stainless steel to enhance luster and also to attain both vertical and horizontal lines, as desired.

[Remodeling of the Majestic theatre in Detroit presented no ordinary problems. Woodward Avenue, Detroit's famous thoroughfare, was to be made so much wider that the Majestic had to be pushed back 46 feet. How this was accomplished and the subsequent architectural treatment which has made the Majestic a theatre of today, is told here in an account prepared by the architects, Bennett & Straight of Dearborn, Mich.—THE EDITOR.]

AMONG the many changes resulting from the widening of Woodward Avenue in Detroit was the complete new facade on the Majestic theatre, one of the major houses of the city. The original layout, before the widening of Woodward Avenue, contained a long theatre lobby, the auditorium, and six shops on the ground floor. The second floor above the shops and lobby housed a large ballroom. This portion of the original building extended back to the foyer of the theatre proper.

STRUCTURAL CHANGES

The widening called for a strip of land on the east side of Woodward Avenue forty-three feet from the front building line, thereby eliminating the six shops, the long theatre lobby, and the ballroom on the second floor. It was also necessary to cut into the auditorium a distance of approximately seven feet to conform the building with the new line of wider Woodward Avenue. This presented a distinct engineering problem, inasmuch as the auditorium ceiling is supported by five large trusses, twelve feet high and spanning from the entry end of the theatre auditorium to the main truss spanning across the auditorium at the point of the proscenium.

It was necessary to cut through each of the five trusses, refabricate the ends and erect new steel columns for the end support of each truss. After this step had been accomplished, the ends of the trusses were burned off and the old steel columns removed. Serious thought was given to the method of refabricating the ends of the trusses, inasmuch as riveting would endanger the present plaster ceiling of the auditorium, due to vibration. An ordinary bolting scheme was not considered plausible, and the idea of spot welding was abandoned in favor of the use of gardelle bolts, which rendered a perfect structural piece of work, and which eliminated the hazards heretofore mentioned. In view of the fact that the line of the new front is not at right angles to the depth of the theatre building, each individual truss has a varying length.

THE REVISED PLAN

The new plan resulting from the street widening altered the theatre proper but little. A new lobby and a wide modern ticket office were built, on either side of which are single shops. Each shop was finished with plaster walls and ceilings, and attractively decorated.

The lobby is plastered, and decorated in light blue and gold. The floor and base is a patterned terrazzo. Very little alteration was necessary in the foyer. Only the ramps at their lower ends on either side of the lobby were altered.

USE OF CINDER BLOCK

The auditorium was completely redecorated. The new wall at the rear of the auditorium is of cinder block. A new modern projection room was also built of cinder block. The cinder blocks were decorated in a maroon shade to correspond to the remainder of the auditorium. The block was left exposed and efficiently added to the acoustic qualities. The block also lowered the noise level within the projection room. The new cinder block wall in the auditorium serves also as the backup material for the facing on the facade.

THE FACADE

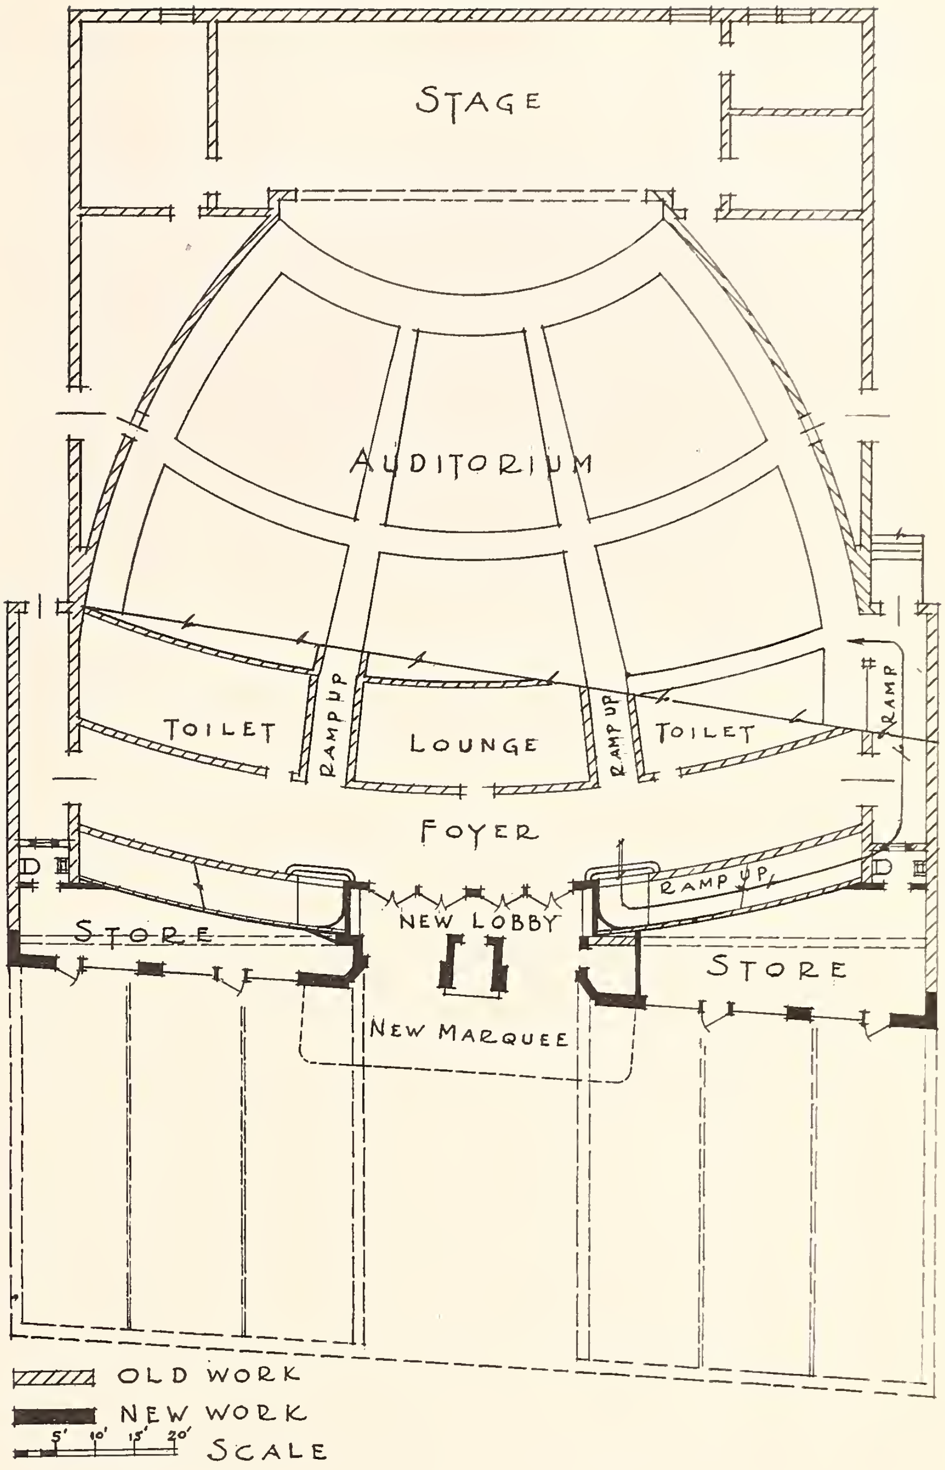
The material used for the front of the building is Macotta, manufactured and furnished by the Maul Macotta Company of Detroit. The lower portion of the building is a rich shade of blue, with horizontal bands of Chinese red. The upper field of the building is mainly Chinese red, broken up by recalling the blue of the lower portion. The recessed vertical stencil designs are of a multi-colored effect, embodying the various colors used throughout the general design, and are emphasized by recesses formed of a vertical line motif created through the use of a series of offsets receding back from the front plane of the building. The vertical line motifs are worked out in a light shade of yellow, thereby rendering the desired contrast necessary in making the vertical stencil design predominate.

The vertical features terminate at the upper band effect, which is worked out in a light shade of green and which is in turn broken by vertical lines recalling some of the other colors of the facade. The coping and the upper portion of the center of the building is of a light yellow shade. Each block of Macotta is edged with a narrow band of stainless steel, which greatly enhances the sparkle and luster of the front. At certain points where either a horizontal or vertical effect is desired, the use of the stainless steel edgings have been arranged accordingly.

FRONT ILLUMINATION

The vertical stencil motifs on either side of the entry emerge upwards from built in Macotta baskets, each containing a flood lamp, which throws a concentrated beam of light. In addition to this lighting effect, the entire facade is flood lighted from a battery of lamps, located on the roof of a building on the opposite side of the street. The color scheme of the building, together with the flood lighting effects obtained, renders an overall brilliance. The lines and color scheme of the marquee blend into the general design used. Silhouette type of attraction letters have been used with a background of flashed opal glass. Hanger rods for the marquee have been eliminated in favor of the cantilever type of construction.

A truly new theatre has resulted from this effort, modern in appearance and in keeping with its improved surroundings.



The drawing above shows schematically the general floor plan both before and after remodeling. The blacked in portion indicates the structural changes. The narrow sections below the new building line (dotted lines) represent the former store, lobby and entrance area, which had to be entirely eliminated from the old building.

SETTING AND STAGING A STYLE REVUE

An inexpensive home-made presentation to reinforce the draw of the screen program with community help

By O. T. TAYLOR

THE STYLE REVUE is a proven attraction. Co-operation of local stores in staging the revue reduces the cost to a trifle as compared with other attractions of equal box office worth. The stores furnish the show; the theatre does the staging, which should, of course, be in keeping with the modeling to make the revue an interesting attraction.

For the added screen fare it might be well to book a feature of strong appeal to the male patron so as to make the show one of general interest. This does not imply that pictures in which fashions are featured should not be considered—as a matter of fact, many excellent pictures have featured fashion sequences.

Open the revue with an organist or an orchestra playing a selection from a well-known light opera or musical comedy, such as "Mlle. Modiste" or "Irene." During the modeling, selections of similar nature or a program of popular numbers could be played.

The best effect, and one more than worth the added effort, is obtained by the use of a specially arranged musical score fitting the revue. For example, for the demure girl modeling a quiet little gown: "Alice Blue Gown." For the vivacious flapper in a bright costume: "Yes, Sir, She's my Baby." For the Spanish type, or for shawl modeling: "Marcheta." For the chic, Frenchy model: "Fifty Million Frenchmen Can't Be Wrong," etc. In this manner the revue is "cued," the music conveying a suggestion which is reflected in the action and in the costume modeled.

To get in closer contact with the audience, as well as to show the costumes to still better advantage, a runway may be built out from the stage, over the orchestra pit. The runway may be of a semi-circular design or (easier to construct) three-cornered, as a half of a hexagon.

The Style Revue setting should receive special attention. It should be pleasing, appropriate and not over-ornate. An archway set on a platform in a drape cyclorama makes a simple, yet pleasing setting. A pair of large baskets filled with flowers and greens could be used to dress the set.

ENTERTAINMENT

Stage entertainment—divertissement—in conjunction with the Style Revue is very much to be desired; it puts the audience in a more congenial mood and relieves the monotony of uninterrupted modeling. Two or three good numbers—song, music and possibly a clever dance act—could be used as a prologue to the Style Revue, and one or two additional numbers as an interlude between parts one and two. Where several stores participate in the Style Revue it will be found more satisfactory to model the groups from each store separately, rather than grouping the models according to the apparel modeled, such as street wear, evening gowns, dinner dresses, etc. Furthermore, by showing each store separately the announcer has the opportunity to emphasize (to plug) the name of each store without any danger of confusion.

The services of an announcer is preferable to the use of lettered credit cards. The latter take up considerable time for reading, therefore the copy is necessarily limited to very little more than the name of the store. An announcer, with the aid of a loudspeaker system, can describe each garment as it is being modeled. He also "plugs" the name of the store; and he credits hairdressers and beauty parlors for coiffures, shoe stores for footwear, milliners for hats, and specialty shops for accessories. A regular script should be prepared as obviously the announcer cannot be expected to commit all announcements to memory. As the announcer does not appear before the audience, but works from the wings, the script may be read just as it is done in a radio broadcasting room. If a suitable public address system is not available, effective use can be made of the theatre sound system, the only requirement being a "mike" with wires to the projection room panel. Your operator should be able to make the hook-up. Tests must be made of course, to determine volume, position of the "mike," etc.

Unless assisted by someone who knows now to prepare a script, the merchant will invariably make it stilty and too lengthy. This should be discouraged. Script paragraphs should be concise, easily understood and have a personal touch. The announcer should feel that he is telling the story to a few friends rather than to a large audience. He cannot get that feeling in reading a stilted script. A pause now and then permits the background music to filter through and eases the strain of continued listening to a speaker.

REHEARSALS IMPORTANT

Rehearsals are very important. The participating stores will, of course, furnish their own models. Professional models are seldom available outside the larger cities, but stores invariably are in contact with local young women whom they can get to do the modeling. The stores should be requested to instruct and rehearse their models individually, after which each group should be rehearsed with music on the stage of the theatre. A final rehearsal with models, announcer and music is then held at the theatre under the direction of the manager, or of an appointed production manager. A form of instructions, delivered to each store in person by the theatre manager or his stage producer, will aid the store in carrying out its part of the show without confusion and slip-ups. The following form is an example:

RE: SPRING OPENING STYLE SHOW

The Style Show will follow immediately after stage entertainment, which starts at 9:00. First group of models should be ready at 9:15.

ROUTINE: 1—Infants
2—Children
3—Style Shop
4—Emporium
5—Toggery
6—Mode Art

MAKE-UP: Because of the extremely strong lighting used on the stage, all make-up should be "high," eyes accentuated, lips well defined and face rouged.

NARRATOR: Mr. ——— of KXRO, has kindly consented to act as announcer and narrator. Mr. ——— will require a continuity covering each group of models. This should begin with name of the store, name of each model and a brief description of costume, in the order in which they appear. Credits may also be given hairdresser or beauty shop and for shoes or other accessories furnished by another store, if so desired.

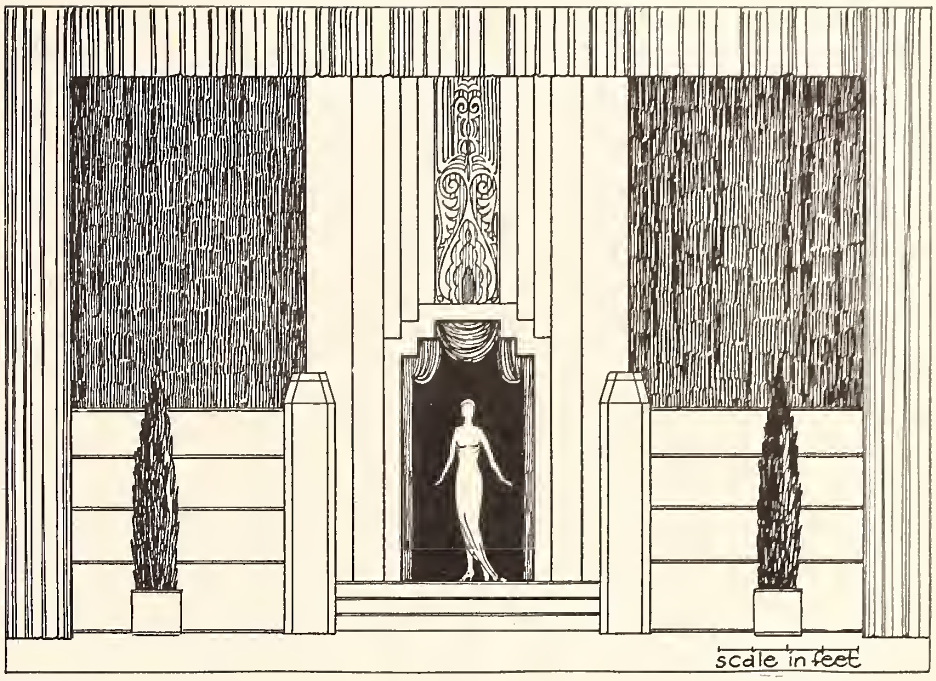

Figure 3

ENTRANCE to dressing rooms is on the ——— side of the theatre building. If more convenient, stage entrance in alley may be used.

REHEARSAL: Final rehearsal will be at 5 o'clock Friday afternoon—it is important that all those who participate as models attend this rehearsal if possible.

PERFORMANCE: Models will please remain in or near dressing rooms until their turn. Crowding in the wings on the stage makes confusion. After appearing, models are requested to stand by for grand finale. Models or entertainers are requested not to enter the auditorium until after the performance is concluded.

THE KIDDIE ANGLE

The Style Revue may or may not include a "kiddie" part. There are many who feel that it is incomplete without the children's revue. That this part of the revue is a box office factor is an undisputed fact. The continuity should be so arranged that the children are put through their part first so that they will not be kept up late.

A TWO-PART SETTING

An interesting and effective setting for a Style Revue in two parts is illustrated in the accompanying designs. Part one features a motor car as background for the showing of sport, street and traveling apparel. It also provides a direct tie-up with a motor car dealer and resultant publicity.

Part two features a formal setting for showing of evening and dress wear. The settings are so planned that a distinct change is made possible at a minimum cost and with little effort, and without interrupting a smooth routine.

The formal setting appears a trifle severe in the sketch. It will be found, however, that if it is done in a color scheme in harmony with the drape curtain, and in a more or less neutral key, the result will be a strikingly modern setting that, while impressive and unusual, will form a perfect background against which to show the models.

To open with divertissement, a garden drop should be hung directly behind the wall, but in front of the car. In this scene the children's modeling could follow the entertainment, or one or more clever youngsters could entertain as well as model.

Upon conclusion of the Kiddies' Revue, the garden drop flies to reveal models grouped in and around the car. Here may be introduced any sort of sport wear from bathing suits to hiking togs. Tennis, polo, golf, bicycling, motoring—any and

By EUGENE CLUTE

The seventh and concluding article in a series on remodeling, embracing every main division of the theatre building

In my preceding article, which was also on the lounge, I was particularly concerned with architectural materials. I shall conclude the discussion of lounge treatment with some suggestions concerning furnishings, color schemes and accessories.

The surest way to avoid cigarette burns on carpet is not to have carpet where people stand or sit, but only in the traffic lanes where they keep moving. Among the suitable materials for lounge and powder room floors are the following:

Zenitherm in squares, resembling buff stones that are nailed down; Martstone, a genuine buff sandstone in squares ready to set; plastic floorings, rubber tiles in squares; linoleum in marbled effects, such as black and gold (not divided in squares), used with a plain black border, or in golden brown tones, or in black and cream squares, Terrazzo, in squares or in a big, modern style design in varied rich colors outlined with brass strips. Carpeting, of course, makes a richer and warmer room, if the maintenance budget permits it.

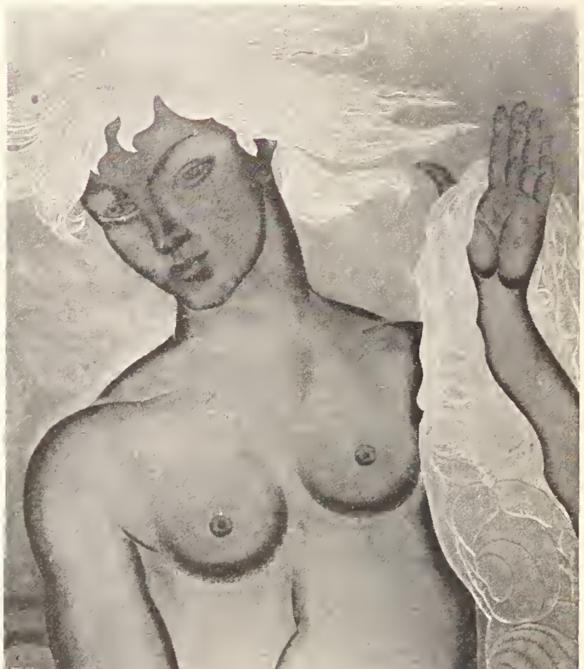
FURNISHINGS

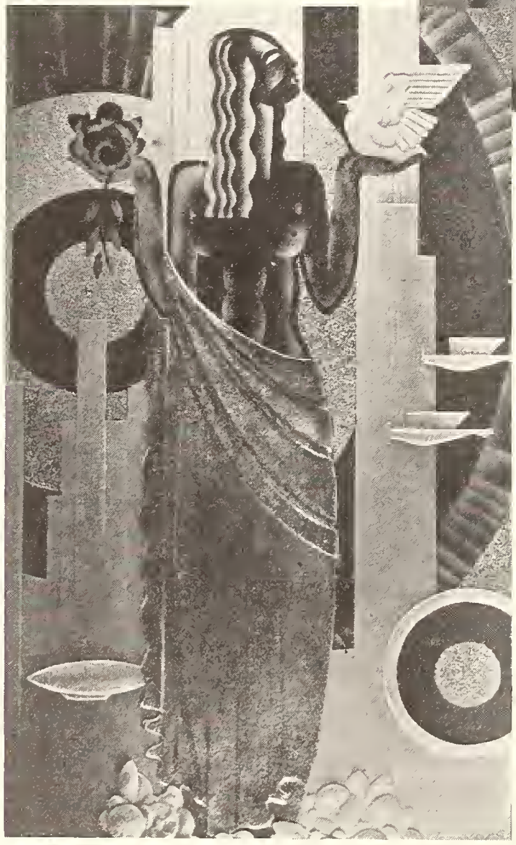
Sofas and large easy chairs fully upholstered in plain pile fabrics usually are best for the main furnishings of a large lounge. There can be also a number of chromium-finished tubular metal chairs with seats and backs in plain leather fabric of some vivid color, such as vermilion or ultramarine. Metal chairs are often best for a small lounge because they are light and open in effect and do not tend to make the room seem crowded. Bent wood chairs of similar design can be used, enameled vermilion or deep ultramarine, with seats and backs in chartreuse, tête de Nebre, eggshell, gray-blue, Burgundy, raisin or black enameled fabric. Varied colors in the furniture make up for the pronounced absence of ornament in the room.

The draperies at doorways should be of plain rep or moiré or other fabric without pattern, and should hang in straight folds. The color may be strong, as ultramarine, or of a soft medium shade, such as jade or gray-blue.

Plain carpet, as a rule, is best in these rooms. Taupe, tête de Negre, blue-gray, gray-blue, and raisin are good colors. If patterned, the carpet should harmonize with colors in the wall treatment. In a large lounge with much open floor space a big modern style design often in seamlock inlay of varied coloring is often best.

Pictures relieve the plainness of walls and can be Japanese prints in wide mats and narrow plain frames, lacquered in vermilion or in almost black teakwood finish. Or one might well choose modern still-life or figure sketches, or paintings or good reproductions of them appropriately framed, are suitable. Pictures should be of appropriate size, often uniform, and hung in a formal arrangement spaced wide apart and on the eye level.





Above and at left are examples of distinctive wall features suited to lounges. These are carved glass panels by Harriton. That at left is edge-lighted; that above, lighted from in back.

MODERN COLOR SCHEME

It is best to use a quiet tint for painted walls, such as light beige, blue-gray, buff, light turquoise or bone white in lounges; and more feminine colors, somewhat stronger, in powder rooms, such as coral, robin egg blue, jade green, salmon pink, medium royal blue or medium chartreuse. Formica and other materials, as well as paint, can be used in these colors. Black polished glass is fine for walls or dadoes, bases, pylons or pilasters. Walls of veneer in medium and light colors such as walnut, prima versa, and lacewood are excellent in wood veneer.

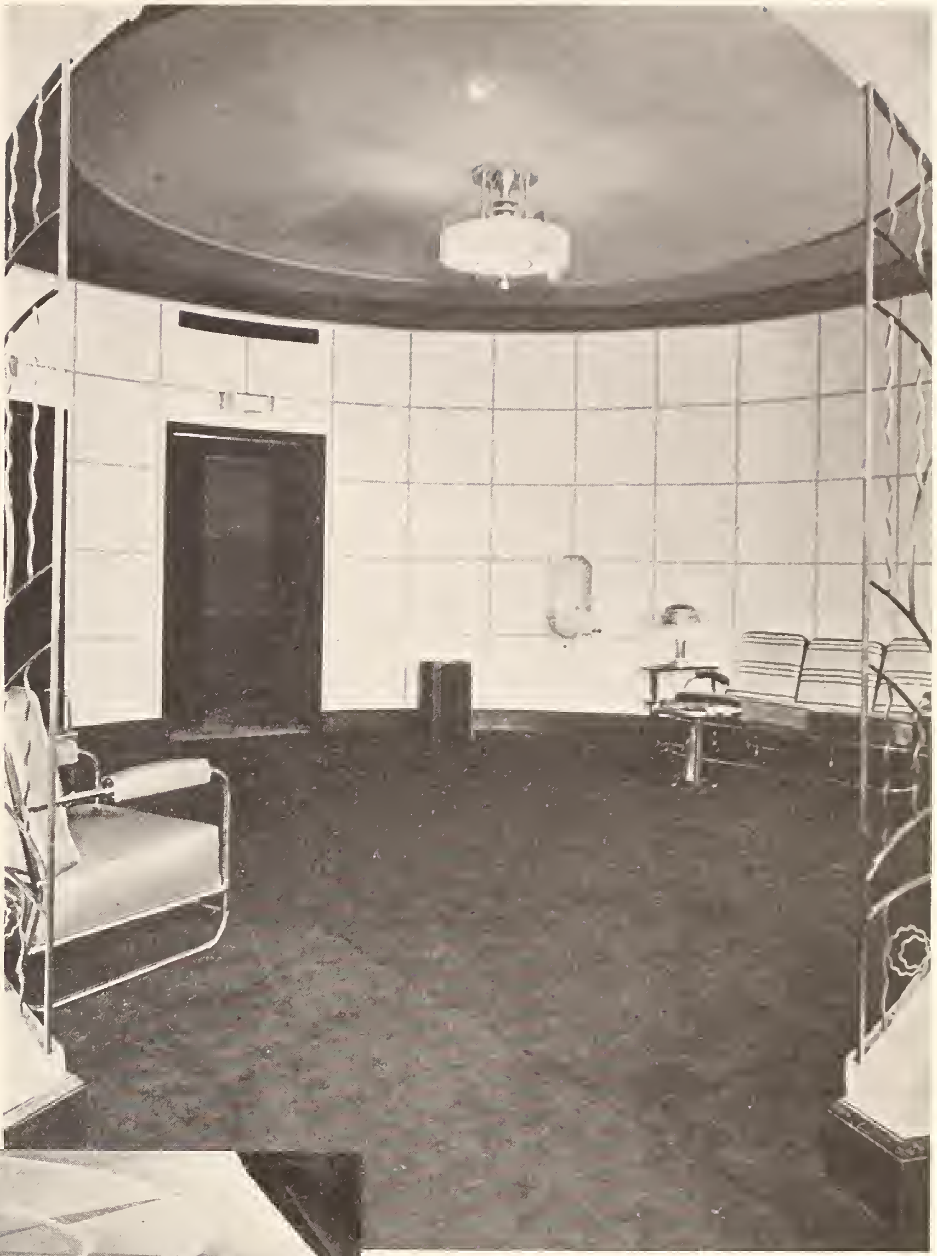
The colors in the more bulky furniture should be of medium strength and soft quality, while the lighter furniture can be in vibrant accent colors—vermilion, ultramarine, etc. The idea is to use quiet, soft coloring, in selected shades that are either light or rich, on the walls; more pronounced but quiet colors on larger furniture; and snappy accent colors on smaller areas. A good rule is that the larger the area, the more quiet and lighter or softer the color should be. The bright colors liven up a scheme that would otherwise be a too quiet scheme and compensate for the lack of ornament in modern interiors.

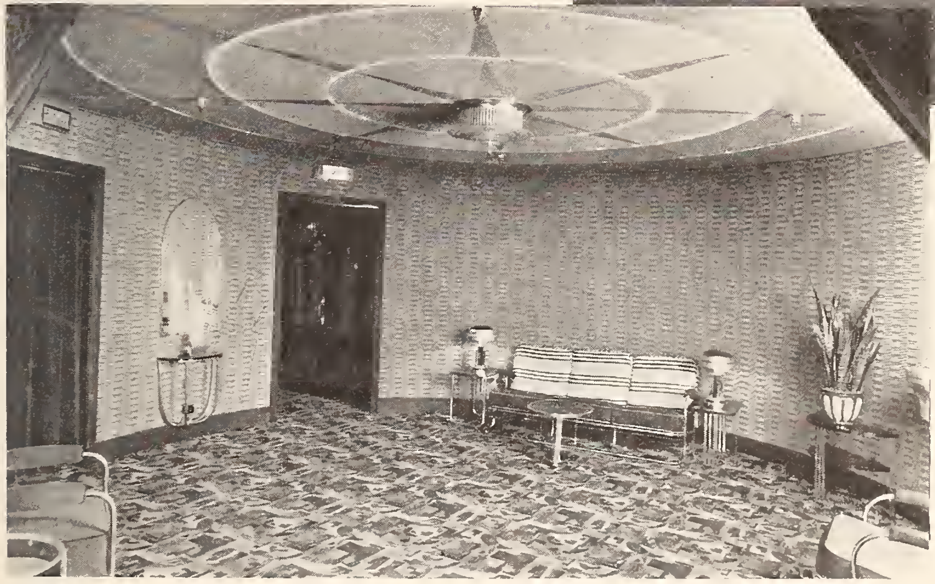
POWDER ROOMS

Women need some place in which to retouch their makeup and they appreciate an ante room between the women's toilet room and the general lounge, foyer or corridor, when there is no separate women's lounge. The powder room is the answer. The walls can be in any of the materials mentioned for lounge walls. A few vanity consoles give character, but a strip of mirror glass on the wall in front of which women can stand will take care of a rush, and a full length mirror on another wall will be appreciated. Consoles and tables should have glass tops to prevent cigarette burns on the wood.

LIGHTING

Built-in lighting is best in lounges and powder rooms and toilet rooms, as a rule, and it is made possible anywhere at moderate cost by the new stock units that come ready to be inserted in the ceiling. Such a unit consists of a metal box or housing 4 inches deep and 9 or 12 square, or 9 or 12 inches in diameter, or of oblong shape with a sheet of flashed opal glass in a bright or satin chromium frame. It is recessed in the ceiling flush with the surface. This is very neat and smart. Where the wall frieze is of handsome material, such as Kapashell, it can be given special lighting from a trough reflector incorporated in the ceiling a few feet from walls.





Two women's lounges in new Trans-Lux theatres are shown above and at left. The latter (Fulton Street, Brooklyn) has silk covered walls of tan and red. The Philadelphia Trans-Lux lounge above has walls of leather and stippled ceiling.

The toilet rooms can be smart, if materials and colors are well chosen. Architectural black glass is an admirable material for walls, perhaps with a row or two of tiles in vermilion next to the ceiling for accent. Water closet stalls could then be of black glass with doors of vermilion Formica, banded near the top and bottom with an inlaid stripe of aluminum. Bright chromium metal mirror frame, white fixtures and black or aluminum trim complete an effective scheme. In the women's toilet ultramarine can be used for accent instead of vermilion.

PLANNING LOUNGE SPACE

About the only space in most motion picture theatres that can be used for the purpose of a lounge is the area that gives access to the toilet rooms and the foyer, or the inner lobby that lies between the ticket vestibule and the auditorium—both primarily traffic areas. So far as possible it is desirable to plan so that lines of travel to and from the toilet rooms or the auditorium do not cross the portion of the floor used as a lounge.

EQUIPMENT and OPERATION

A DEPARTMENT OF PRACTICAL MAINTENANCE AND OPERATING SERVICE

● ● CONDUCTED BY J. T. KNIGHT, JR. ●

HOW TO WORK OUT A BUDGET SYSTEM

In which an effort is made to remove the dread most managers have for these simple devices

TO THE AVERAGE theatre manager, particularly one who has had experience in being a cog in the machinery of one of the major circuits during the past five years, the terms budget and efficiency expert are equally obnoxious. Probably some will get the "jitters" from just the thought of the audacity of anyone attempting to write on the subject of budgets. Also, some of the more experienced circuit operators may still feel that the show business can't be put on a budget basis.

When such thoughts are expressed, it is a positive indication that the individual has never known the proper use of a budget or an application of its basic function. A budget is the science of intelligent planning; an instrument of administrative control; a means of financial control; an index of financial position; a means of coordinating policies with actual practice; and, finally, it can be used as a measure or indication of personnel efficiency.

Certainly, every manager in some way tries to do some or all of these things in the process of operating his theatre. And most certainly all of these functions are properly a part of good management.

OPERATING VALUE OF BUDGET SYSTEM

IN REALITY every good manager does make use of a budget, whether made for periods from week to week, or for the run of a single picture, and whether kept in his head, on his cuff or in a more formal and systematic manner. How do you keep your budget, and is it doing full time duty for you? You must answer this question honestly, at least to yourself. Theatre management is a serious, industrialized business these days, and some of the guesses, hazards and speculations so frequently met with in the past must be eliminated or we are going to find new blood taking the place of the die-hard managers of the older school.

I have heard it estimated that only about one-half of the theatres in this country make a profit; a smaller percentage make bread and butter; a similar small number make a fair profit; and by far the minority make rather large returns. I am quite sure that those that lose money have no idea why they have failed, but it sounds good to damn the major producers and distributors Furthermore, of those theatres that break even and make money, only a very small percentage of them really know their actual cost of doing business. It is quite possible that devoting more thought to compiling and following through a program of proper budgeting might be very profitable.

So frequently in discussing budgets with managers and operators, this question has been presented to me:

"How can I budget my theatre when the commodity I sell to the public varies so much? One week I have a 'Becky Sharp,' then a Mae West, then 'Break of Hearts' and so on! My advertising campaign varies, even my payroll might vary," etcetera, etcetera.

This is all quite true, but there is a solution to this problem which still retains all the fine features of budgetary planning, control and guiding and yet provides the necessary flexibility.

PLANNING THE BUDGET SYSTEM

HERE IS MY suggested approach and answer to the problem. Think of (or check your records if you need reminding) the name of the picture that did the poorest business in your theatre in the last eighteen months. On the basis of what this picture actually did for you, build up a budget which would have been reasonable in light of the actual gross on this picture. Include every item of fixed charges, repairs and renewals, all expense items, insurance and other services. This budget then becomes the fundamental or basic budget for your theatre.

Now begin from that poorest picture and list the next, say ten, better pictures up to the very finest one you can think of. The best picture is naturally the one which, because of its inherent appeal, made the most money. Then ten pictures, each progressively better, plus that poorest picture from which you established the basic budget, will make a total of eleven pictures. Each of those eleven pictures is a type or quality of picture representing eleven classes of pictures into which all future pictures may be classified.

Now assign to each of these classes of pictures certain amounts which may be added to the various items of the basic budget when pictures falling into the various classes are to be played at your theatre. The basic budget plus the class itemized amounts, form the budget for that coming picture.

Every one of you managers and exhibitors group and classify pictures continually in your various conversations and in your reports to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, so this plan so far should be easy to follow out.

SEASONAL FACTORS

There is one more variable factor that must be given weight, and that is the season of the year. Every manager who watches his business at all can chart the entire year, either by weeks, months, quarters or seasons, as spring, summer, fall and winter. Whichever your grouping is, list the various budget items that are affected in the form of amounts or percentages to be added to, or deducted from, the picture class budgets for the various seasonal fluctuations of business.

With these schedules of budgets before you, it should require but a few minutes' time to establish the proper budget for each picture. Book as well in advance of playdate as possible and in ample time really to use it as a guide and a control instrument. Of course, you can still make errors in judgment by the wrong classification of pictures which perhaps you have never seen. To minimize this chance of error, my advice to you is to read every trade paper review of every picture that you have booked or hope to book for your theatre. If you do this you will err much less frequently in classifying pictures.

In the final analysis, an intelligent less frequently in classifying pictures. than a guide, a control mechanism, in order that policies may be conformed to actual operating conditions. It never establishes operating policies. A theatre manager should not be discouraged if his first attempts at budgeting in accordance with this plan do not produce all the results that he might think proper to expect. Just remember that any new tool put into your hand to use will require practice, patience and continued intelligent refinement to bring out its maximum utility or benefits. A budget is a tool of good, up-to-date management, no matter what the business is.

BUDGET ANALYSIS

Perhaps the most important part of budget systems is the analysis of the budget variations after the expiration of the budget period. The comparison of the budget and the actual performance of the operation which the budget was designed to guide and control is the real "proof of the pudding." A complete investigation and explanation of the cause of all significant variations from the budget will frequently save many dollars in the future. Regardless of whether or not you have a home office requiring you to make up and use a budget system, as a manager or the proprietor of a theatre, you owe it to yourself to establish a system for self-improvement in the business of motion picture exhibition.—J. T. K.

SERVICE DIVISION FORMED FOR NEW SOUND PROJECTOR

EXHIBITORS and film men attended two special showings of the new Simplex-Acme projector under the direction of Herbert Griffin, general sales manager; Henry F. Heidegger, chief engineer, and R. H. Driesbach, sound engineer of International Projector Corporation, in Kansas City. High fidelity and wide range recordings were shown exclusively. With the introduction of the new projector there, Walter Denney, National Theatre Supply Company branch manager, announced the appointment of Albert Orear, for three years divisional engineer for ERPI out of Philadelphia, New York, and Chicago, and more recently out of Kansas City, as manager of a newly created sound service and engineering department of the Kansas City branch.

The department will be entirely separate from sales and will offer complete surveys of the physical equipment of theatres. Theatres not now getting sound service will be able to do so from the new department, and all types of sound equipment will be serviced.

WASHING YOUR CARPETS WITHOUT REMOVING THEM

- The way to prolong the life of carpets is to follow a regular cleaning routine. That will probably be conceded, even by those in charge of theatres who do not follow such a routine. Grease and grit not only reduce the beauty of a carpet very quickly, but they continually work to destroy it. And to theatre carpets, which are always located where the traffic is heaviest, dirt is a constant menace.

Vacuum cleaning equipment has reduced this menace considerably. Theatre carpets would not last long, relatively, if vacuum cleaners that are really effective were not available today. Vacuum cleaning of carpets, and of other fabrics that are accessible, should form a never neglected part of the daily cleaning routine.

But carpets need more than suction-cleaning. Occasionally they should be washed. Many people have the carpets in their homes washed at intervals. Carpets in theatres, of course, have infinitely more grease and grit ground into them than carpets in a home, and while a regular routine of thorough cleaning with a vacuum cleaner can minimize the necessity of washing, it cannot eliminate it.

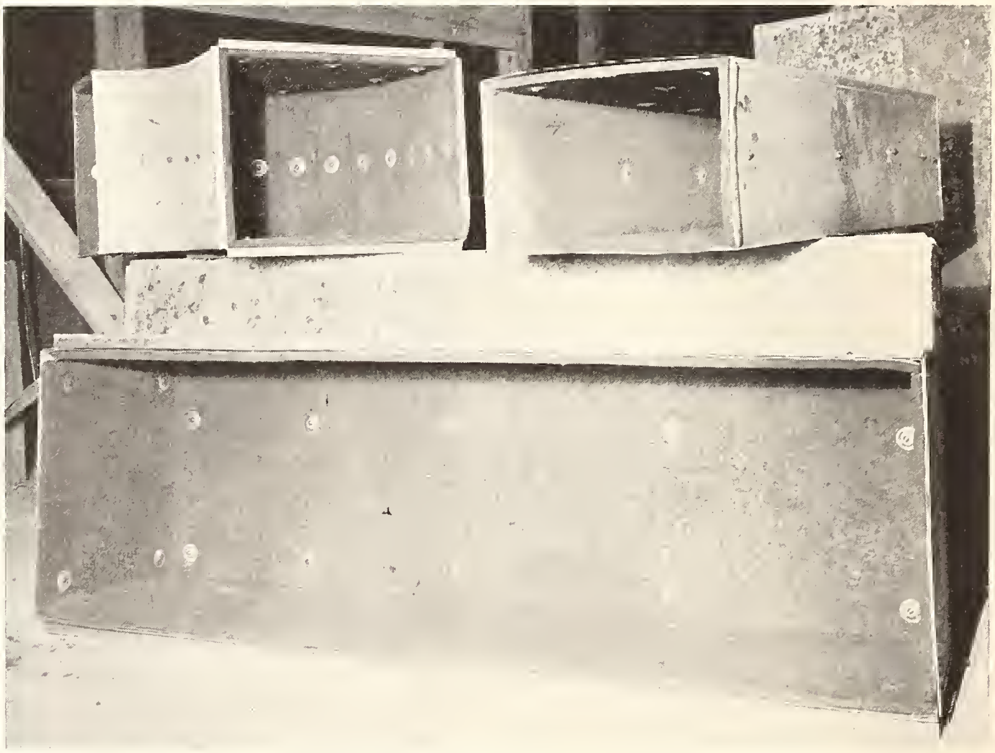
Carpets can be taken up and sent out to commercial cleaners for a washing, or at substantial reduction in time and cost, can be washed by a member of the house staff while remaining on the floor. Equipment for this purpose has been developed by the Hild Floor Machine Company of Chicago. The device is mounted on rollers which permit one person to draw it easily over the carpet.

The contacting part is a rotary scrubbing brush which is fed, in proper amounts, the cleaning liquid, the latter being contained in a tank attached to the handle. The company makes a shampoo liquid of volatile chemicals (no rinsing or wiping is therefore required) for use with this machine.

The brush, which is driven by a small motor riding above it, distributes a light, even film of the shampoo solution over the entire surface of the carpet so that the material is not soaked through (soaking may cause the carpet to shrink). Actual cost of shampooing a carpet in this manner runs from a quarter of a cent to a half-cent per square foot.

NEW MICROPHONE FOR PUBLIC ADDRESS

- A microphone of uni-directional characteristics — does not pick up sounds emanating from points opposite its active side—has been brought out by the Brush Development Company of Cleveland. This company makes other types of microphones suitable for public address systems in thea-



Sections of ventilating ducts lined with Air-Acoustic sheets, a new product brought out by Johns-Manville for the elimination of noise transmitted through ventilating systems. The sheets are of rock wool and a suitable binder. This material has very little thermal conductivity, hence its adaptability to air-conditioning systems. The sheets are attached by spot cementing or by mechanical fastenings.

tres, but the uni-directional functions of the new model are especially adaptable to the technique of single performers and to announcing. The range of its active side is through 180°. It may be adjusted, however, for non-directional operation.

This microphone employs sound cells so that there is no need for button current supply or polarizing voltage.

AUTOMATICALLY CLEANED AIR FILTER

- An air filtering unit for installation at the source of fresh air in ventilating systems, employing dry type filters which are automatically cleaned by the action of the unit, has been developed by the Coppus Engineering Corporation of Worcester, Mass. The filter element is a curtain made of a woven cotton material. This runs in zigzag fashion in a endless belt over rollers, forming tapered pockets. Sprockets and a chain belt provide the propulsion.

To prevent the by-passing of unclean air, the edges of the filter curtain pass through a labyrinth seal formed between interlocking tapered side plates which extend into the filter pockets on the air intake side and into the corresponding pocket on the clean air side.

These units are available in various sizes, depending on the amount of air to be introduced, and except for the curtain, are of structural or cold-rolled steel, rust-proofed and enamelled.

A LIQUID FOR THE PROTECTION OF PAINT

- A compounded liquid which is applied over painted surfaces, leaving an extremely thin transparent film for the protection of the paint, has been developed by the Franklin Research Company of Philadelphia. Its action is to insulate the paint from sun and rain, checking drying and oxidation.

The compound, which is marketed under the name "Triple Life Paint Protector," has also been adapted to the surfacing of such metals as brass, copper and bronze.

PUBLIC ADDRESS EQUIPMENT TODAY

By HARRY C. ROLLS

Describing, for guidance in planning and purchasing, the technical advancements which have accompanied the growth in importance of P. A. systems in theatres

PUBLIC ADDRESS has been, so to speak, sneaking up on the theatre until without noticing its arrival we suddenly realize it is here. It would be purposeless here to attempt to estimate how many theatres are now using microphones, but the number must be very large. The depression interest in amateur nights, prize nights and give-aways has stimulated the adoption of sound reinforcing systems, which once installed are used also for organ recitals, professional stage shows, election, baseball bulletins and so on. Or, transferred to a truck or to the roof of the marquee, they serve double duty outside the theatre for ballyhoo.

Such equipment now is inexpensive—very inexpensive. Under exceptional circumstances a complete announcing system for a good-sized theatre can be bought for approximately a hundred dollars. And these prices do not denote inferior apparatus. They are made possible by a long series of inventions, improvements and simplifications in every part of the public address equipment.

WHAT IS PUBLIC ADDRESS?

Five component parts make up a public address installation. They are the power supply, the microphone, the mixer (if used), the amplifier and the speakers.

The power supply can be very simple. For public address inside most American theatres, it consists only of two or three ordinary 60-cycle, 110-volt a.c. outlets, the amplifiers and speakers being plugged in as if they were so many bridge lamps or radios. For operation with d.c. or with 25-cycles, the power supply is more complex and usually is a rotary converter.

When the P. A. system is removed to a truck or automobile for ballyhoo purposes the question of power supply becomes further involved. Sixty-cycle, 110-volt generators now commercially available are driven by belt connection to the fan-belt pulley of the automobile or truck motor. Commercially available rotary converters can be used, deriving their power from the truck or automobile storage battery. Inexpensive gasoline-motor-electric-generator combinations are also common.

Lastly, the whole procedure may be reversed by buying a public address system designed to operate from a six-volt automobile or truck battery, and powering it when it is moved indoors through a special "a.c. adapter" sold with it for that purpose. In such systems the amplifier supplies d.c. exciting power to the speakers, and also to the microphone if the microphone is of the type that requires current supply. The amplifier in turn is powered by means of a six-volt-driven rotary converter built into the same case. When it is used with a.c., the rotary converter is switched out of action, and the "adapter," tube rectifier filter, takes its place.

Choice among these various methods of providing power supply is chiefly a matter of the size of the P. A. system in question. Thirty watts is about the upper limit of sound power that is possible with a six-volt source. Beyond that point the drain upon the battery becomes too great for prolonged operation and, moreover, shortens the battery's total life. The generators driven by an automobile or truck fan-belt pulley have about the same limit in the sizes now commercially offered. Consequently mobile equipment of greater power is nearly always driven by a gasoline motor generator outfit mounted in the truck.

MICROPHONES

The microphones of only five years ago are substantially obsolete. Progress in this field has been more rapid and thoroughgoing than in any other. Five types of microphones, operating on four different electrical principles, are available for public address work today.

First: Still used, although seldom purchased with new equipment now, may be listed the familiar carbon double-button mike. This consists of two tiny containers, or "buttons," packed with carbon dust and mounted at either side of a vibrating diaphragm. The air waves of the sound to be picked up cause the diaphragm to vibrate, and as it does so it releases some of the pressure against the carbon dust in one button and presses more firmly against the dust in the other. An instant later the diaphragm is moving in the reverse direction and pressure conditions in the two buttons are reversed. This mike requires a supply of direct current, which flows through the carbon dust, but varies in power according to the pressure to which the dust is subjected, tightly packed dust carrying more current than loose particles. One drawback of this microphone is the "mike hiss," a high-pitched rushing sound.

Second: The condenser microphone, first introduced in connection with early recording of sound pictures. This consists of two metal plates placed opposite each other, which therefore constitute an electrical condenser. One of the plates is so mounted that it is free to vibrate in response to sound waves in the air in front of it. In vibrating it approaches or moves away from the opposite plate, and every change in distance changes the amount of the charge the condenser is capable of retaining under the pressure of the voltage applied. Consequently a minute charge-discharge current flows in and out of this condenser when sound waves act upon it. That current is amplified.

The condenser microphone requires an external source of voltage, and for most practical purposes also requires a single-stage pre-amplifier mounted in the same case with it. Amplifier and microphone together often appear in a case that looks somewhat like an artillery shell.

The condenser microphone is free from the carbon hiss, and therefore can be used with amplifiers and speakers that reproduce the higher sound frequencies. Concurrently with the introduction of the newer types of microphones described below, its cost has fallen off to one-third or less, as compared with a few years ago.

Third: The crystal microphone consists of crystals of Rochelle salts mounted in a suitable case. Such crystals, when twisted in a definite way, will create an electric current. The reason is not known. When used as a microphone, they are so mounted that the pressure of sound waves against them will twist them in the proper manner, and a corresponding current is created which can be amplified in the usual way. The crystal is the simplest of all microphones. It consists essentially of a plate of Rochelle salt (sodium-potassium tartrate) and two connecting wires. It needs no current or voltage supply to enable it to function. Used not more than twenty feet away from a modern, high-gain amplifier, it requires no pre-amplification. It has no microphone hiss, and its sound is especially rich in high frequencies.

Fourth: The dynamic microphone is a miniature generator, creating sound currents by means of physical motion in a magnetic field. The sound waves provide the power for that motion. The length of line between a dynamic microphone and its amplifier is seldom of importance within the limits of ordinary public address work. There is no background noise and sound quality is excellent, but high gain amplification is required.

Fifth: The ribbon microphone is a special form of dynamic microphone. The moving element is an extremely thin, corrugated ribbon, which also serves as the armature in which sound currents are developed as a result of its vibration. Length of connecting line is not particularly important in normal P. A. work, but high amplification is necessary. This microphone has directional properties which make it peculiarly valuable in cases of feed-back—that is, when the loudspeaker sound reaches the microphone in sufficient volume to feed back through the amplifier and cause the entire sound system to "break down" into a condition of howling. The most effective remedy is to move either the microphone or the speaker until the volume of speaker sound reaching the mike is reduced to safe limits. Shielding the microphone with ozite or absorbing material is a remedy.

The ribbon or velocity microphone, by virtue of its directional properties, is less subject to feed-back than any other, since all that is necessary is to turn the microphone until it will no longer pick up sound from the direction of the speakers. (Unidirectional crystal microphones have also become available recently.)

PICKUPS

Although they are not microphones, electric phonograph pickups should be included here, since they are frequently used as sources of P. A. sound, especially on ballyhoo trucks or automobiles. A crystal pickup, operating on the same principle as the crystal microphone, is now very popular.

EQUIPMENT AND OPERATION

is a new department in Better Theatres conducted by J. T. Knight, Jr., essentially as a service. Unbiased, expert counsel will be gladly given you in your maintenance and related problems. Merely address Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

For mobile work, 6-volt phono-motors are favored, since the output of a small 110-volt generator is seldom steady enough for smooth phono operation.

MIXERS

Sound from several sources, as from a number of microphones, or from both microphone and phono turntable, is blended in the mixer (which is built into many modern amplifiers, although in other systems it is a separate unit). The mixer consists of as many individual volume controls as there are sound input channels to be mixed, all the output circuits of the volume controls being wired in parallel to the amplifier input. A recent development in mixers uses as many amplifying tubes as there are sound input channels, the volume from each tube being controlled by a grid potentiometer in the conventional way. All tube outputs are connected in parallel to the input of the main amplifier, which also supplies the mixer with plate and filament power. Contrary to what might be expected, this mixer is not at all expensive, the cost of the tubes being more than offset by the fact that potentiometers of less careful construction can safely be used.

AMPLIFIERS

Detailed description of recent improvements in amplifying tubes, circuits and construction would require several articles, each longer than this one, and still leave much to be said. For the present it must suffice to remark that theatre men who are acquainted only with projection room amplifiers of the earlier and heavier types may be surprised to find that amplifiers of equal power and output are now made in such size and weight that they can be carried in a suitcase not much larger than an overnight bag.

SPEAKERS

The development of the high-frequency speaker, sometimes called the tweeter, has made simpler and less expensive speaker systems practical. The horn or directional baffle that formerly reproduced the entire range of sound frequencies (within the narrower range then possible) was a large contrivance, and expensive because it had to be very carefully designed. The more modern practice is to use the standard speakers and baffles to reproduce the lower frequencies only, which is much less difficult, and leave the highs to the tweeter.

One form of tweeter uses a dynamic speaker designed for high-frequency work, and wired to the amplifier through a filter that supplies it with high-frequency current only. Another uses the Rochelle Salt crystal. This crystal, which generates electric current when it is twisted, twists when it is supplied with current and therefore can be used to translate electrical vibrations into air vibrations. However, it has no appreciable response at the lower frequencies and consequently needs no filter in the wiring that is located between itself and the amplifier.

High-frequency speakers are used only where exceptionally high quality is desired; for all ordinary P. A. work a single speaker of the radio type is sufficient, trumpets or flare baffles being used to project the sound for reproduction outdoors or in the larger theatres.

A COMBINATION LIGHT ANALYZER

A NEW ANALYZER consisting of a light-meter and combination voltmeter-ammeter with suitable cable extensions, switches and plugs in a compact case for making a complete illumination analysis, has been brought out by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company. The instrument is designed for analysis of volt and current consumption as well as foot-candle intensities and light distribution.

Complete illumination analysis requires measurement of input as well as output to obtain efficiency. With the illumination analyzer the watts input to the lighting circuit are measured by taking a reading of current and voltage. The light output can be measured with a "Photox" cell foot-candle meter supplied as part of the unit. The cell, which has a color response like the human eye, is mounted on a paddle, which is provided with a handle so that it can be held in any position without disturbing the analyzer. (See accompanying photograph.) This provides a means of taking light intensity measurements from several positions. The cell unit is connected to the micro-ammeter by a flexible cable equipped with a plug and receptacle, thus providing for additional cable lengths when desired.

The indicating instruments are equipped with knife-edge pointers and fine-line scale divisions, which may be read to a high degree of accuracy. One instrument is a micro-ammeter which measures the output of the light sensitive "Photox" cell, and the other is a combination voltmeter-ammeter having scales of 0-3 and 0-15 amperes, and 0-300 volts, either a-c. or d-c. The proper ranges are selected by switches on the panel.

PRACTICES EFFECTIVE WITH ADOPTION OF 2,000-FOOT REEL

RECENTLY, impatient at what seemed an unnecessarily long delay by the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in arriving at a decision concerning the long heralded 2,000-foot reel, I wrote a very bluntly worded article in criticism. These recommendations, however, have finally been made, and we probably are justified in believing that they pretty well settle the matter, and that soon after January 1, 1936, the 1,000-foot reel will begin to pass gradually out of use in connection with features.

Briefly, the printed recommendations say that editorially the change will save time and expense in the cutting department, one reason for which is that only half the reel end changeovers will be necessary. It warns that in no event should any reel contain less than 1,700 feet of film.

In the laboratory no change in release printing procedure will be necessary. Labs will issue film in 1,000 foot lengths, which will be shipped to exchanges in cans, not mounted on reels, the exchange effecting the splice of two 1,000-foot lengths and mounting them on reels.

There will be no change in procedure in sound recording, dubbing or duping, or in sound track printing. Exchange procedure with regard to film will remain the same, except for splicing two 1,000-foot lengths together and mounting on reels. The storage vaults must be altered, but since most of them are built up on angle-iron frames, the change may be effected for an estimated sum of $10 per vault, more or less according to local conditions. Exchanges having welded angle-iron frames will have a higher cost to face. Extensive tests have shown that a rewind having a gear ratio of 2.75 to 1 may be operated as easily as does a 4-to-1 rewind with a 1,000-foot reel. Features will be released on 2,000-foot reels. Shorts and newsreels will be released on 1,000-foot reels until the supply is finally exhausted and all equipment converted to the new standard.

A reel design of maximum efficiency has been approved, and we are assured by the Council that after these reels are in use there will be no necessity for the use of special projection reels—a thing I will believe when I see it. However, we are told that all reel makers were consulted and that the experience, technical and practical knowledge of them all was combined in forming the new proposed reel, so after all it may be true. But I do not forget that cost must enter into the matter, hence I am skeptical.

The new reel is to cost little or no more than two of the present 1,000-foot reels. It will have an outside diameter of 15.5 inches; diameter of hub, 5 inches; clear width between flanges, 1.5 inches; center opening to fit all standard 5/16-inch rewind and projector spindles, with keyway ⅛ x 1/3-inch. There will be a slot of 3 inches minimum opposite the film slot for threading. [See drawing on page 22.]

The reel will be of No. 24 U. S. standard gauge (.025-inch), with raised stiffening ribs and rolled edges. There shall be no raw edges, even the edges of hand openings will be rolled. The material will be steel, with anti-corrosive alloy coating.

I had hoped a new reel with sides made up of strips of spring steel, might be adopted, but perhaps the Council feared its cost would be such as would prevent its use by a great many exchanges. I also believe it would have been much better to ship the films from the producers in 2,000-foot lengths, but again I can understand that such procedure, in the beginning, before all exchanges completed the change in equipment, might have caused possible trouble, so probably the procedure recommended is better under the conditions.

AS TO DRAWING WIRING DIAGRAMS

FRANK C. CHAMPLIN, chief projectionist of the Roxy theatre in Twin Falls, Idaho, writes, "Concerning the letter of Brother Titsworth, Nowata, Oklahoma, I agree with this gentleman that it is a poor state of affairs when an equipment manufacturer refuses to supply a wiring diagram of his amplifier, even at a small charge. However, may I suggest that experience (not only my own, but that of others) shows that one may best get really acquainted with an amplifier by getting a bit of paper, a pencil and a test kit. Next roll up your sleeves, use your eyes and brains and draw your own diagram.

"A test kit (borrowed if necessary) will enable you to ascertain the resistance of all resistors in any circuit, the capacity of condensers, plate, screen and the bias voltage of all tubes under normal operating conditions. It will in fact tell you everything you want to know, and on top of all that you will gain a far better knowledge of your amplifier than can be had by any other method.

"You must remember, though, that a test kit that will read condenser capacities places voltage on the condenser being measured from its own power supply. Precautions must therefore be taken to protect the rest of the circuit from being injured, before starting to make the test. This may be done by disconnecting one side of the condenser from the circuit.

"Incidentally I might add that a test kit that will cover practically all equipments used in theatres except for checking photoelectric cells may be had for $40. I am neither an engineer nor a supply dealer, Brother Richardson. Purely a projectionist. My radio knowledge—what I have—was all obtained through building and operating my own equipments. Here is hoping you will long continue the good work you have been doing for many years."

Thank you, Brother Champlin. I'll try to do that li'l thing. I cannot altogether agree with you concerning the tests referred to, however. I do most emphatically agree, though, that what you suggest is the proper course for men with brains, who know enough to proceed with care and caution. But if it be undertaken by Mr. N. Wit—well, the result might and probably would not be any too good. And while we now have many high-class professional projectionists in our theatres, we still have with us an abundant supply of those who are (and probably always will be) wondering what it is all about.

The genuine projectionist has brains and he uses them. He is proud of his profession and wants to know all there is to know about it. He desires to understand his equipment, to the end that he be able to get the very best possible results from it and get them at the least possible cost. Theatre managers will do well to supply such men with a test kit and to stand any reasonable cost attached to learning how to use it effectively. In the end they will be the gainer in every way.

As to having wiring diagrams, I hold the projectionist to be justly entitled to them.

WHY A.C. CAN'T CHARGE A BATTERY

FROM A southwestern city comes this letter:

"Dear Brother Richardson: May I ask you a question? Lately our local has been setting apart a time for discussion of such questions as any member may wish to present. At the last meeting a member asked for an explanation of this: Just exactly why cannot a storage battery be charged with a. c.? I think we all felt rather foolish when it was discovered that not one of us could give the answer. May I therefore ask you to supply the right one."

I can understand just how you all felt, brother. But I venture the assertion that some of our Big City men could not answer that offhad, either, when it came right down to brass tacks. Yet the answer is very simple. Had your members really considered the question on its merits I think it would have been answered.

To charge a battery, something must go into it. Direct current acts continuously in one direction and puts something into the battery. Alternating current (60-cycle) acts in one direction for 1/120 of a second, putting something into the battery; then it acts in exactly the opposite direction for the same length of time; hence pulls exactly the same amount of energy out again. And there you are.

REMOTE CONTROL OF SOUND VOLUME

I HAVE received a letter from a Midwest company as follows:

"In your Comments in BETTER THEATRES we noted a letter from Irl Gordon, a projectionist of Akron, O., in which he complains concerning wide variations in sound track density. We note in your reply that you have had similar protests from projectionists in several cities. We also note that the S. M. P. E. Journal, under convention discussion, these remarks: 'We often have this situation in the theatre: projection is progressing very well, with sound at its proper level; suddenly the sound decreases to almost nothing, or increases far above its normal level. The dialogue may be lost or the ears of theatre patrons strained. In either case it is annoying. Such a situation is bad enough in two-man projection room. In the one-man room it often is beyond control, because other duties that cannot be neglected keep the projectionist away from his post of duty beside the working projector. What are the causes of such situations and how may they be remedied?'

"It is not our purpose to discuss the causes of such situations, but we can answer your question as to how they may be prevented. For four years past we have been making a remote volume control by means of which volume may be instantly altered by a monitor man located anywhere in the auditorium. They are now available for use with Western Electric and several other types of amplifier."

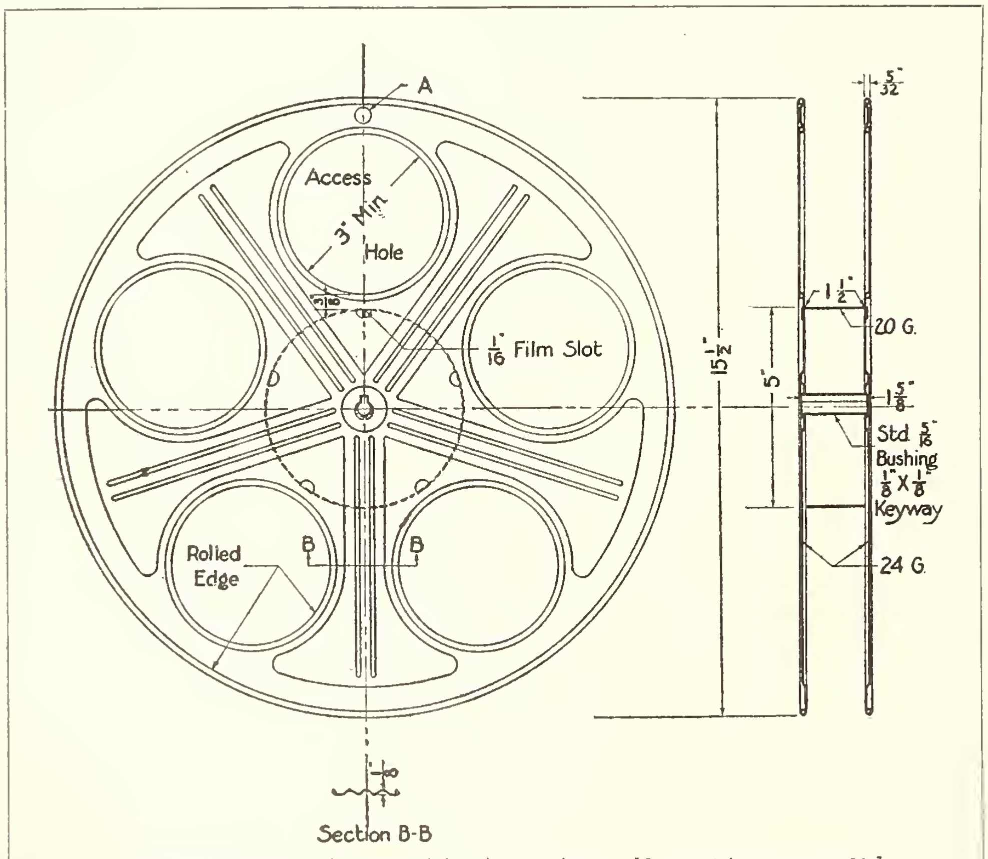
Now that sounds quite all right, but there is a great big bug in the ointment. This company may guarantee that the device named will take care of the situation, provided it be competently handled. But how can they guarantee it will be constantly and competently handled? Past experience has pretty thoroughly demonstrated the fact that few theatre managers will employ a carefully selected, thoroughly competent observer (or any at all, for that matter) and keep him constantly on the job monitoring sound.

In the projection room is a man who is on the job constantly, in no position to be much otherwise. Now it is and always has been my view that the sound engineers should provide some practicable means for placing the projectionist in direct touch with the thing he is producing. I hold that engineers who have given us so many marvels can, if they will, provide this last touch that completes the mechanism. To place men in a position where they must be responsible for the sound which they themselves cannot control intelligently for the simple reason that they cannot hear it, is not only unfair, but verges on absurdity.

It is quite possible to build practicable remote control equipment. I cannot say, however, that I favor such a method for controlling sound volume—at least until theatre managers are willing to employ a very carefully selected, thoroughly competent man whose only duty shall be to observe and monitor sound and who is in charge of the actual fader controls except during changeover period. Even then I hold it to be a poor method, in that it takes entirely out of his control one of the elements in entertainment the projectionist is creating.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN FLUTTER AND WOWS

J. L. JACOBSON, of Kansas City, Kansas, writes, "I often hear flutter and wows spoken of. Have asked several what is the difference, but no one has given an intelligent answer. Will you tell me what, if any difference.



Standard 2,000-foot reel approved by the Academy. [See article on page 21.]

there is between the two. Also, who is the oldest projectionist in point of years of service?"

The difference between a flutter and a wow is wholly one of rapidity of the action. If the sound track speed at the sound gate be uneven, and the action be fast, the effect on sound is called a "flutter." If the action is more slow, it is called a "wow." Just where the dividing line is I doubt if anyone could say.

The oldest projectionist in point of continuous service is, beyond any question of doubt, William Reed, who still is projecting in Atlantic City. He began projection work (caring for the equipments) in the Edison peep-show days. He was projectionist in the first motion picture theatre of which any authentic record exists. That was in the fall of 1896. But he projected life-sized pictures in a New Orleans park from early spring of that year until the theatre opened later in Canal Street of the same city. Incidentally, I should like to see the Mr. Reed, who has been recognized by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, made an honorary member of the IA, of which he has for years been and now is an active member.

EXAMPLES OF MISMANAGEMENT

A MASSACHUSETTS projectionist is the author of this interesting letter:

"Will you be good enough to advise me as to whether or not sound-on-disc is still being used? One projectionist assures me it is not. Another says it is being used in small theatres in some localities. Still others have a different idea.

"I have made it my business to visit several projection rooms, though not as many as I would like to because, despite my 'blue card,' I have been refused admission to several. Here is what I have seen in too many of them:

"The projectionist not even looking at the working projector, much less remaining beside it. Many projectionists leaving the projection room door wide open. I have seen men leave the room wholly unoccupied, the projector working, while they went out to get a drink or for some other reason. I know of one room where the projectionist sits in the balcony, entirely outside the projection room, except only while making changeover, threading the idle projector, etc. This man smokes a lot in the projection room too.

"What puzzles me, is how, in view of the strict license and fire laws in this state, do they dare do such things? One would assume that, it being so hard to get a license and a job, a man would not take the chance of losing both for the sake of a smoke, a drink or a seat in the balcony. When a man gets to the point where he must smoke to keep going it would seem wise to consult a doctor. Before closing may I ask if the new Bluebook is illustrated?"

The new Bluebook will be well illustrated, including many sound equipment

To be sure of my ground in the disc sound matter, I wrote Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc. The following reply was signed by Maj. Albert Warner:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Replying to your letter of July 8, please be advised that all of our productions are now made sound-on-film. We do not use sound-on-disc at all, and to the best of my knowledge all other major companies use only sound-on-film likewise."

As to the projectionist faults noted, it would seem rather useless to talk to or about men who have so little respect for the profession of projection that they will thus outrage it. They are not even good machine operators. Not only do they show disrespect for their profession, but also for the motion picture industry that supports them. They have total disregard for the safety of the audiences.

However, ultimate responsibility lies with managers who permit such practices. Most emphatically they evince very small regard for their duty as a theatre manager. That they do not know of them would be no excuse. It is a part of their duty to know.

Certainly a theatre manager who permits his projectionist to leave the room with a projector working very well knows both life and property is being endangered. That "nothing has happened yet" is no proof it won't happen very soon. Certainly he very well knows that with the projectionist paying no attention to either the projector or the screen (as certainly he is not when he is looking at neither), projection is not being carried on with any possible certainty of quality and efficiency.

It is one of the most important duties of a theatre manager to employ the most competent projectionist he can get, then to see to it that the projectionist attends strictly to business every moment he is on duty. Projectionists are not employed to take it easy. They are hired to work and to make every possible effort to achieve the best results obtainable with equipment and film given them. If they don't like the job they should quit. I have fought for the best possible working conditions. I am for adequate ventilation of projection rooms, and for toilet facilities and running water. They are all necessities. I am for as high wages as conditions warrant. But I also am for compelling projectionists to do their full, complete duty, in the best possible manner.

A PROBLEM IN IMAGE DEFINITION

ROY W. HOWELL, manager of one of the Howell theatres in Coleman, Tex., orders a new Bluebook and says, "I am one of your old correspondents, dating back to the time when you were putting a lone fight for better projection, dealing out information of large value to theatre owners and projectionists who desired to give their patrons the best possible service. I now have a lens problem, or problem in definition, that we can't solve, hence ask your aid.

"I have tried lenses of several different makes. Now using Ross 5-inch E.F., with projection distance 128 feet, 8 inches, picture 17 feet, 5 inches by 13 feet, 3 inches; seats, 600 on main floor, 300 in balcony. The auditorium is 40x150 feet. Use simplex projectors with Peerless lamps. Draw 34 amperes from a Hertner Transverter. The screen is a Walker white cloth sound screen."

Mr. Howell further states that he can get one side fairly sharp, but the other side is then badly out. He says the sharp side is "fair," but not what it should be, that when they try to sharpen the whole picture the result is an exceedingly hazy, unpleasant effect.

Something queer here, or so it seems to me. If this is correct, it can only mean that the projectors are spaced too far apart, but even so there should always be one vertical section that would be sharp. A lens will only project with critical sharpness at one exact distance, though a good lens will have enough depth of focus to give definition through a considerable difference in distance sharp enough for the fault to be unnoticed by the average person.

It is of course evident that when projectors are set off center with the screen, the distance from lens to one side of the screen will be shorter than the distance from lens to the other side. However, it would seem that under ordinary conditions of projector spacing, which should be 5 feet from lens center to lens center for a 128-foot projection distance, a good lens should give sufficiently sharp definition all over a 17-foot screen to be acceptable to the average person.

I am forced to the belief that Mr. Howell's projectors are spaced too far apart. I would suggest that the distance be reduced to 4 feet, 5 inches between lens centers, each lens being, of course, equidistant from the center line of the screen. I know this may compel changing the lens, and possible even the observation ports, but if the description of the effect be correct, I guess it will have to be done. First, however, all data should be sent to lens manufacturers asking whether or no they can supply lenses of sufficient diameter to work efficiently and to be guaranteed for acceptable results. Give the projection distance, picture width, spacing of projection lenses, center to center. I might add that reduction of picture width would help, but the reduction would, apparently, have to be considerable.

out discs from black film and cementing them in place, I punch out discs from gummed paper, using a punch approximately the size of standard cue marks. I believe gummed paper is better than film for the reason that it may be so quickly and easily affixed to the film. It is merely a matter of moistening the gum a bit and sticking the paper on."

I believe I agree with you, Brother DeVietti. The general idea is that such a mark be affixed in cases where the regular cue mark is missing—at the standard distance from the film end, of course. May I suggest that a roll of gummed slide binder paper, costing maybe a dime, would last, if carefully used, for "ages."

SINGLE EXCITER LAMP SUPPLY PANEL

RCA is mailing out to all projectionists using their type PG-30, PG-31 and PG-32 equipments pamphlets telling how to make the change necessary to operate, in an emergency, with only one exciter lamp supply panel. Each pamphlet contains adequate printed instructions supplemented by drawings, so that any projectionist should be quite able to effect the change in minimum time did it become necessary.

This represents real service, or so it seems to me. We trust that in the interests of right and justice this action will be followed by other similar activities by RCA and other manufacturers covering all things that can thus be practicably explained and made clear to projectionists.

CAUSES OF "FRYING" NOISE

C. H. BRITTON, of St. Charles, Minn., sends a frame of film and asks, "Can you tell me whether or not any part of a DeForest sound system could make this scratch on a sound track? Am having some trouble with a noise like frying. Can you tell me what causes it? Am very careful not to use too much oil. Have put in a new set of tubes, also a new photocell."

The scratch is rather wide and runs in a perfectly straight line. The microscope shows it to be caused by some substance rubbing, and rubbing rather hard, on the sound track. It is not due to the equipment itself, but in all human probability to some deposit on some part of the sound track. Doubtless this has been located and removed long before this will reach you. It might be in any one of a dozen places, either in the sound-head, the projector mechanism or the magazine fire traps.

As to the frying sound, that is entirely too indefinite. Such a sound might have its source in any one of many things—dirty battery tops, for example, if you use batteries. A dirty or loose connection is another possible cause. Or—gosh, numberless things. Will readers of my comments be good enough to write setting forth all the various things they have found to be

THE PURCHASE OF DUPLICATE PARTS

J. L. QUIMBY, projectionist of Sedalia, Mo., writes, "I have been a projectionist in a small town near here for several years. I have tried hard to give the best results I am able to. I read all your articles and study them and work out the HERALD Bluebook School problems, all to fit myself, when times perhaps get better, for a job in a larger town and theatre.

"Not long ago the theatre was bought by a man who admits he does not understand the business as well as he might, but wants to and really tries to learn. I am sure he will make good. Just now I am having an argument with him and want your help.

"I am needing some new parts for the projectors. He has found out he can get parts not made by the manufacturer of the projectors at less than the genuine parts cost. He is unable to understand why they are not just as good. Will you, Mr. Richardson, help me out on this?"

As to the help, I don't know, but I will set forth my honest opinion, which is based on many, many years of practical experience. Granted there are a few concerns that make good parts, there are others that make "dupe" parts that are not up to the standards that should be adhered to in projection today. How is your employer to know which is which? And if he makes a wrong guess—well, it will be just too bad, for in the end he will be the "goat."

Here is the common sense of the matter as I see it. The manufacturer of a projector is vitally interested in his equipment, giving as nearly as possible perfect service. It therefore is unreasonable to presume he would supply you any but the best possible parts to replace those worn out in service. Unquestionably he is supplied with the machinery and engineering staff enabling him to select the best possible materials and to fabricate the parts with consummate skill and precision.

This being true, when parts made by the projector manufacturer are purchased, the purchaser knows he receives the best parts that can be produced. Perhaps such parts do cost a little more? They cost more because proper manufacture of them costs more. It is very possible to save a few cents, or even two or three dollars, by purchasing other parts, but in the end one is usually likely to lose several times that amount in excessive replacement, lowered efficiency and poorer results. And this is to say nothing of the gray hairs added to the scalp of both the projectionist and the exhibitor.

I well know that in saying this I will give offense to some makers of, and dealers in, what is known as "dupe" parts. However, I feel that this is a matter which, in the interests of effective presentation of motion pictures and appropriate standards of theatre operation, merits frank, honest expression.

COMMENT FROM OUT MISSOURI WAY

FROM Thomas L. Jackson, projectionist of the Electric theatre in Joplin, Mo., center of the great zinc mining industry, comes this letter:

"It is a long while since I wrote, but I just must thank you for the way you have been handling the projection department in Better Theatres. (I don't handle the whole department, but thanks anyway.—F. H. R.) The 'Projectionist and Repair Work' article in July 27 issue was excellent. It was so illustrative of the wrong procedure followed by too many chief projectionists, who, instead of building up the knowledge and therefore improving the work of the men under them, do exactly the opposite.

"May I suggest that the assistant who sent the letter would be very much benefited did he get a Bluebook, study it for a while and forget about repairing projectors until he has acquired basic knowledge and understanding of all details of the same. The man under me has done so, and I am letting him do the repair work, under my observation. This, however, might not work out well with a good many of the men because of the fact that they have not the tool equipment I have.

"Have you had an opportunity to inspect the Supreme P. A. Analyzer, just released? Every projectionist should have one, though it is pretty costly—$71.

"Conditions in Joplin are excellent just now. From general appearances they will continue to be so. We have a nice bunch of men in our local (Projectionists Local Union 465, IATSE and MPMO). We have six theatres in Joplin, two RCA Photophone, four Western Electric. There are three wide range sound systems.

"Where I work (the Electric theatre) we have W. E. three-way wide range, with which we are well pleased. I attach a program and fader setting blank which may benefit others."

REMARKS:

Reduced about one half.

Brother Jackson is wholly correct. It certainly is the duty of every chief projectionist, or man in charge of a plant, to teach those under him every possible thing he can that will tend to make better workmen of them. This is true if for no other reason (there are other reasons a-plenty) that the chief cannot possibly tell what day he may be supplanted by one of these men, perhaps through his own voluntary action. It is small-time stuff and the mark of a small time man to fear to divulge such knowledge to another brother Projectionist.

KEEP DIRT OUT
KEEP PROFITS IN

The millions of particles of dirt and dust daily entering your theatre are like so many demons, eating away at your profits in a dozen ways.

An ounce of fine sand, imbedded in a carpet that has heavy travel, can ruin it in a few weeks by cutting the nap. Dust ruins decorations and equipment and makes frequent painting necessary. Dust mars motion-picture projection, interferes with stage performance and gives the theatre a "smell."

Why not remove this dirt and dust—just after the patrons leave and before it has a chance to spread?

Spencer Central and Portable Vacuum Cleaning Systems show the way. They save cleaning time, are efficient in operating and maintenance costs, and have proven their ability to produce results in hundreds of theatres.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The Question:

I HAVE a lot 30x115 feet. I wish to build a theatre with as many seats as possible, comfortably spaced; if possible, also a small shop and managers' office. Also with toilet on main floor. Can you help me? I am very anxious to get started, as the town has no theatre at present.—H. H.

The Answer:

AS IT WILL take at least 14 feet for the width of the lobby, I think you will have to forget about the small shop, as the space left will be too small.

Place the entrance lobby in the center of the building. Have ticket office at sidewalk with double entrance doors on each side, and make the lobby 12 feet deep. This will leave space on each side of lobby for men's and women's toilet rooms. These rooms should open from the foyer. On the Men's room side may be left enough space for a small manager's office, opening from lobby. Plan for a 6- or 8-foot foyer or cross-aisle. The seating should be arranged in a row of 13 chairs to the row with aisle on each side.

You will need a platform for horns and projection screen and perhaps for small acts. This should be about 15 feet deep, so there will be space left for 27 rows of seats, making the total seating capacity 351

The Question:

I AM CONSIDERING a change in my present marquee and lobby entrance. The theatre itself is a 550-seat house, but the lobby is only 12 feet wide and about 18 feet long. A candy store is alongside the lobby in the same building and is about the same size.

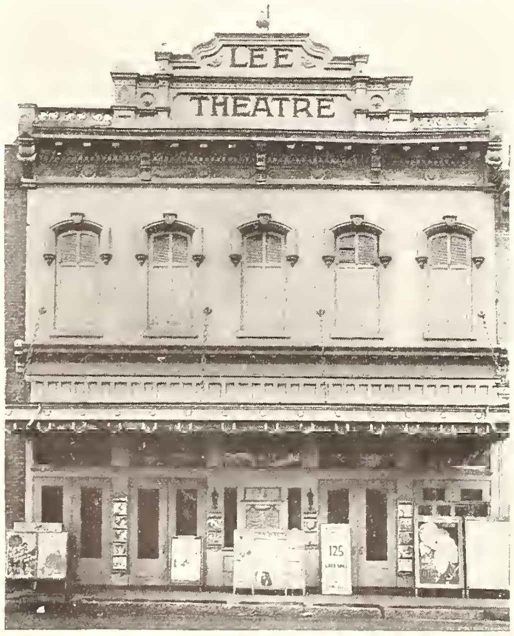
I expect to have a new marquee erected to extend over the lobby entrance and the candy store, with the possibility at some later date of putting my lobby across the entire building to include the candy store space also. My theatre space is about 40 by 110. I trust the diagram shows you enough to have you give me some advice including answers to the following:

Do you think the proposed marquee change is satisfactory when it extends over another store? How high from the sidewalk should the marquee be? Considering that my sidewalk is only 9½ feet, do you suggest 2, 3 or 4 rows of letters on the sides, under the name, on the marquee? It is a neighborhood house. Do you suggest lettering across the front? How many rows? Do you suggest name on front?

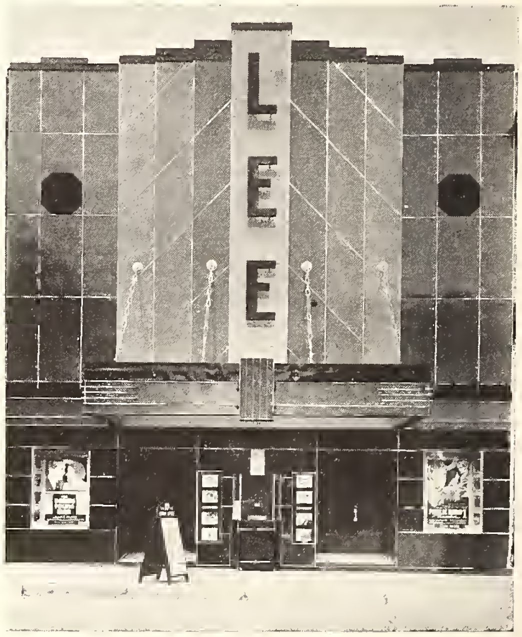
Can you suggest a different layout for my theatre entrance, using the same space, 12 feet? Would it be possible to put the ticket booth on the sidewalk line with this limited space? I also expect to redecorate my interior somewhat and have therefore requested the mailing of information and catalogues about other items of interest.

Both the HERALD and BETTER THE-

A MODERNIZED FRONT OF COMPOSITION BOARD



● The remodeling of the Lee theatre, an 800-seat theatre in Clinton, Mo., was accomplished under conditions calling for the strictest economy. Only the front and lobby were retreated. The front was resurfaced with Masonite tempered hardboard, which was painted with enamel finishes in rose, turquoise blue and yellow, with silhouette letters in black. Aluminum mouldings conceal division between the wood sections. The marquee, which also is of Masonite, is lighted with neon. The black hexagonal openings at the sides are exhaust ventilators. The Lee is operated by Commonwealth Theatres. Robert O. Boller was the architect.



ATRES have been of great help to me. Each issue is thoroughly read and reread. Please accept my thanks in advance for your kind assistance.—M. L. R.

The Answer:

A LOBBY is rather small for a 550-seat house and since you are considering that on some later date to include the candy store space in the lobby, why not do it now since you are going to make some improvements? However, there is no objection to extending the marquee across the entire width of the building. The bottom of the marquee should be 9 feet above the sidewalk line.

I am sorry not to be familiar with the location of your theatre. If I knew the width of the street and any obstructions to adjacent buildings, I could advise you more correctly. If the street is rather wide, I suggest to carry the changeable program letters on three sides. Should the street be rather narrow, the letters should be located on the sides only, and the name of the theatre could be placed in front. A vertical sign with theatre name is really more advisable, but it all depends on how much money you have budgeted for this improvement. For a 9 feet, 6 inches projection from the building, use three rows of changeable program letters.

Have the marquee so designed that the letters stand against a background of flashed opal glass. The letters should be silhouette letters 10 inches high and either suspended from a cable or sliding in a track. A block letter of cast aluminum will give the most readable results. Should it be necessary to read the sign from a large distance, I suggest that you build a triangular sign without front. The two sides would come together at the curb of the sidewalk and the front would be eliminated. This would give longer sides and maybe this would solve your problem more satisfactorily.

Place in box behind the flashed opal glass, a strip-light with lamps staggered 3 inches from center to center. This should be placed in center of each row of letters to give the best results, but two rows of strips may answer your problem. The lamps can be small, 10 or 15 watts. Neon tubes may also be used if you desire a color change.

Since the lobby is only 12 feet wide, it will be impossible to place the box office in front, as on your sketch you show offsets on piers at entrance, and as the width of a box office is about 4 feet, there is not enough room left to be safe for proper exit space in case of panic. The location of the box office in front at sidewalk is as it should be, but you will be able to work this out only when you add the candy store to the lobby.

The Question:

THE THEATRE I have in mind has a frontage of approximately 30 feet. I wish to remodel it with the new modern glass fronts or any other process which you might suggest. I also wish to construct a complete new marquee neon sign plus a vertical neon sign. Also, I expect to eliminate the entire exterior of the building and redecorate and renovate the auditorium, lobbies, etc.—S. K.

The Answer:

I AM SORRY that your inquiry does not contain sufficient details to give you proper information. Structural glass, Formica, and tile are used to a great extent in making new modern theatre fronts.

For the marquee I suggest you use silhouette letters on a background of flashed opal glass, and a good readable vertical sign may be constructed out of channel letters with neon tubes or with bulbs. The flashed opal background of the marquee can be eliminated if you prefer to use neon tubes of three colors, and with a flasher, changing the color scheme as desired.

all of the summer sports may be included. Afternoon frocks and street wear are equally in keeping with the scheme. The models, one by one, or in pairs or groups, walk downstage to model just behind the footlights, or on a runway if one is built over the pit. At the finish of this part of the revue, a split drop on a traveler (track) comes down in front of the wall. The car is pushed off stage. As an alternate, the car could be driven offstage before the drop is lowered. Here it becomes necessary either to introduce entertainment or to continue modeling of a suitable line while the stage is being set for part two.

The curtain now opens on the formal setting with the first model posed in the doorway. Models enter through the doorway, turn and pose on platform, walk down stage right to footlights, cross over to left and exit. The next model appears in the doorway just as the previous model exits. Models exit right and left alternately. Undue hurry should be avoided. It is better to let the model take an extra turn or a few extra steps than to appear in a hurry to leave the stage.

CONSTRUCTION OF SETTINGS

The settings shown in Figure 1 and 3, while eye-filling and apparently costly, can really be built at a surprisingly low cost. Construction of the walls is shown in detail in Figure 4. Rear elevation (A) shows frame made of 1 x 2-inch battens, covered with 40-pound rosin or sheeting paper. The end post is wallboard cut to shape (indicated by dotted lines at the top) and fastened to a separate frame, which in turn is fastened to the projecting top and bottom arms of the main frame as shown (B, top view). End elevation (C), on slightly larger scale, illustrates how the frames can be fastened to floor brackets, with a weighted board running parallel with the frame to prevent it from toppling over. The weight can be sand bags, iron bars or other heavy material. Skids or gliders placed under the brackets make it easy to slide the pieces from one position to the next. The foliage of the profiled trees can also be sheeting paper or heavy manila paper. The tree trunks are cut from wallboard and braced with 1 x 2-inch battens. Trunks and foliage are suspended from a fly batten. The evergreens in front of the walls are preferably natural trees in tubs. Promoting these from a nursery in return for credit mention should not be difficult.

The main feature of the setting for part two (see Figure 3) is a single flat with a draped center opening, set on a platform with steps leading to the stage. The walls are drawn closer together to conceal the ends of the steps. Construction of the flat is shown in Figure 5, illustrating also how it can be suspended from the same batten on which the drape legs hang. Fasten the bottom of the flat to the platform, take a strain on the lines to the batten and no stage braces will be needed.

SCENE PLOT

Part one—Dark blue sky drop with garden or wood wings, and foliage border (Figure 2). Profiled trees (A). Dotted lines (B) indicate space occupied by car. (Platform and steps are off-stage). Position of walls (E) indicated by dotted lines. Tubbed trees (F). Announcer and "mike" (G). Close-in drop (H). Garden drop (I).

Part Two—Strike car, sky drop, wings and trees. Set platform and steps. Slide walls (E) to positions shown by black lines. Backing behind platform. Drape legs (D) and flat (C) down. If loudspeakers are used, these may be placed as indicated at (J) with fairly satisfactory results.

Bright, flashy colors should be avoided or at least used very sparingly, except in part one, where the trees may be given a bright, airy treatment. Walls could be in a neutral medium gray-green with chromium horizontal bars. Flat, vertical bands, nearest edges, in the same color as walls, each adjoining band a tint or two lighter. Center panel ornamentation in turquoise, yellow-orange and black on silver ground. Band around opening, silver or chromium-edged with black. Drapes, burnt orange or green.

The above is merely a suggestion. The entire color scheme should, of course, be in harmony with the cyc or curtain.

LIGHTING

Except for the divertissement, the entire lighting should be in white, otherwise costumes will not show in their true colors. Use plenty of light—floods and spots as well as border and footlights.

LAW AND THE THEATRE

A DEPARTMENT DEVOTED TO LEGAL PHASES OF THEATRE OPERATION

THE AVOIDANCE OF SUITS FOR DAMAGES

By LEO T. PARKER

A digest of recent cases disclosing the law applying in injuries to patrons of theatres and employes

ALL THEATRE owners carry insurance against fire and tornado, and many are protected against theft and burglary. Yet few theatre owners and managers have accumulated sufficient legal knowledge to insure themselves against heavy liabilities for injuries to theatre employes and patrons. Yet such protection may be accomplished by following certain well defined and simple rules established by the higher courts.

First, it is important to know the owner or operator of a theatre is not an insurer of the safety of employes, patrons, and others who are lawfully in the building. Also, in order to impose liability for injuries to an employe, patron or others, by reason of a dangerous or defective condition, the injured person is bound to prove that the condition which caused the injury was known to the one in control of the premises, and that it existed for such time that it was the legal duty of the person in control to discover it and make the necessary changes or repairs.

In other words, the outcome of all suits against theatre owners for injuries to employes and patrons depends on whether the person in control of the theatre had knowledge of the danger or defect which caused the injury, and also whether by the application of an ordinary degree of care he should have discovered and remedied it. Under all circumstances the person, or company, in control of the premises may be liable in damages for an injury resulting from his negligence in keeping the building in good repair; and this is true notwithstanding the fact that the property is owned by another who may have had some obligation to keep it in repair.

For illustration, in a late case, Ziul v. Kol (175 Atl. 780, Britain, Conn.), a person, for mere accommodation, assumed control of a building, and later a patron who was injured while on the premises sued to recover damages. In holding the person in control of the premises liable, this court said:

DECISION

"Liability for negligence does not depend upon title; a person is liable for an injury resulting from his negligence in respect of a place or instrumentality which is in his control and possession, even if he is not the owner thereof. One who assumes to control and manage property . . . cannot escape liability for its defective condition by showing want of title in himself."

Obviously, therefore, if the owner of a theatre building rents it to a theatre operator, the owner of the building is not liable for any damages or losses sustained by patrons, unless he retains control over the premises, such as assuming obligation to operate the theatre or to make repairs therein. On the other hand, the landlord is liable for any injuries or losses negligently affecting a patron, although he rents the premises to another, providing the testimony indicates that the landlord controlled the premises and the employes thereon.

CASE

In Smith v. Atlanta Enterprises (169 S. E. 243) it was shown that a theatre owner rented the theatre for use as a cooking school, but retained his manager, stage hands, ushers and other employes in charge of the premises. One night a patron of the cooking school fell down an open stairway, and filed suit against the landlord to recover damages. The counsel for the landlord contended that he should not be held liable, because the injured person was patronizing the landlord's tenant who operated the cooking school. However, under the circumstances, the court indicated liability on the part of the landlord, and said:

DECISION

"An owner or occupier of land, who, by express or implied invitation induces or leads others to come upon his premises for any lawful purpose, is liable in damages to such persons for injuries occasioned by his failure to exercise ordinary care in keeping the premises and approaches safe. A suit against the landlord and one to whom he lets certain premises consisting of a theatre, to be used by the latter conducting a cooking school for the general public, which alleges that the landlord had its manager, stage hands, ushers and other employes in charge of the premises, did not warn the plaintiff of the presence and location of the stairway, set forth a cause of action against the landlord."

REGULAR INSPECTION AVOIDS DAMAGES

IN ALL CASES involving injury to theatre patrons, the most important evidence to be introduced by the theatre owner is that the thing causing the injury had been recently inspected and that no defects were discovered. A theatre patron may prove by convincing testimony that a defect existed when the injury was sustained, but the theatre owner may counteract this testimony and, in many instances, avoid liability by proving that no defect was apparent during a recent inspection conducted throughout the theatre premises.

CASE

For example, in Hunker v. Warner Brothers Theatres (177 S. E. 629) it was shown that the carpet on a theatre floor was heavy, and that both ends (and also at intervals of several feet along the edge) were fastened to the aisle way with tacks driven into wooden pegs in holes in the concrete floor.

A theatre patron sued the theatre owner to recover damages for an injury and testified that he tripped and fell when his foot caught under the edge of the carpet at the time he attempted to walk from his seat into the aisle. However, the theatre owner testified that the carpet was gone over every morning with an electric sweeper by the janitor, whose duty was to report to the manager anything wrong with the carpet; that it was inspected every day just before the theatre was opened by an usher with a flashlight, whose duty it was to check the aisle to see that all things were in proper places; that both employes had performed their duties on the day of the accident, and that both had found the entire length of the carpet to be flat on the floor; that no repairs or adjustment has ever been made on the carpet and it now lies flat and in its proper position on the floor; and that no one else has ever fallen in the theatre. Although the lower courts held the theatre owner liable for the injury, the higher courts reversed the verdict, saying:

DECISION

"The mere fact that the defendant's (theatre) carpet was raised at the moment of accident does not denote that it had been in that condition any certain period prior to the accident. Unless the condition had existed long enough to have given the proprietor opportunity to have seen it in the exercise of due care, he can not be held liable. Knowledge either actual or constructive is essential to impose liability. Liability could not be imposed upon defendant (theatre owner) unless it was also shown that this condition of the carpet was known to defendant (theatre owner) or had existed for such a length of time that defendant should have known of it, or was of such a nature that it must have existed for such a length of time as to give it notice."

CHARACTER OF DEFECT IMPORTANT

A THEATRE OWNER is not liable in damages for an injury sustained by a theatre patron as a result of defective construction or a condition, such as torn carpets, poor illumination, slippery floors, broken seats, defective steps and the like, provided evidence is introduced showing that such defects were of recent origin, or that the defects were caused by another theatre patron and without knowledge of the theatre owner.

However, where evidence is introduced by the injured person showing that the defects have been in existence for a reasonably long period of time, the courts consider the landlord and his employes negligent in failing to use reasonable and ordinary care to inspect the premises for the purpose of discovering the defects.

CASE

In Tovey v. G. E. Lothrop Theatres, Boston (193 N. E. 19) it was disclosed that a patron paid admission to a theatre, went up to the balcony and was directed by an usher to proceed. The theatre was dimly lighted and the aisle where the patron stood was dark. The usher had a flashlight with him, but so far as appears from the evidence, did not use it. As the patron started to go down the aisle in response to the usher's direction, her foot caught and she tripped and fell.

The cause of her fall was the condition of the tapestry carpet at the head of the aisle. It was ragged, worn and torn and for the width of 15 or 18 inches was "lapped" or "rolled" over, or "curled up" so that it projected 1½ or 2 inches above the level of the floor. The carpet had been in use at that place for about three years, and in that period on an average of 200 people went over the aisle daily. In view of this testimony the higher court held the theatre owner liable in damages, and stated the following important law:

DECISION

"The plaintiff (patron) was an invitee, and the defendant (theatre owner) was under the legal obligation to use ordinary care to keep its theatre in a reasonably safe condition from the length of time the carpet had been on the floor, the extent of its use, its worn and torn state and the elevation above the floor level the finding was justified that the condition was not transitory or of recent origin."

The theatre owner might have avoided liability in this case (1) if testimony had been given to prove that the usher had directed the rays of his flashlight on the torn and worn portion of the carpet; or (2) the usher had made an effort to direct the attention of the patron to this dangerous condition; or (3) if the theatre owner had proved that the defect had existed only a short period of time; or (4) if the theatre owner had proved that the theatre was illuminated at this point so that the patron could have discovered the defect if he had used due care; or (5) if the theatre owner had proved that he had discovered that the carpet had been worn and had recently repaired it; or (6) that unknown to the theatre owner a patron or other person had very recently caused the carpet to become dangerous by kicking it or stumbling over it.

In order to avoid liabilities for injuries caused by worn or loose edges or carpets, all theatre owners should securely screw beveled metal strips over the edges of the complete length of the carpet, whereby patrons can not stumble by getting their feet caught under the carpet. Also, it is advisable to install at frequent intervals in the end seats shielded small lights which partly illuminate the aisles so that in the event a patron gets injured, and files suit for damages, the theatre owner may introduce testimony to prove that he exercised care to make the premises safe for patrons and that the patron could have avoided the injury had he been careful.

WHEN PATRON KNOWS DANGER EXISTS

ANOTHER IMPORTANT rule of the law relating to injuries to theatre patrons, is that a theatre owner never is liable in damages for an injury sustained where the evidence indicates that the patron was aware that the defect which caused the injury had existed. Under these circumstances the patron is considered contributory negligent and since he could have avoided the injury had he used ordinary care.

patron slipped in a hallway which was properly illuminated and fell sustaining severe injuries for which he filed suit to recover damages.

During the trial testimony was introduced proving that the patron knew that the floor was slippery. Therefore, the higher court refused to hold the injured person entitled to damages, and said:

DECISION

"It does not appear that the hallway was improperly lighted. Plaintiff testified that he knew that the floor was slippery; he is considered to have assumed the risk, and in case of injury resulting from such defects, he is held guilty of contributory negligence, and hence can not recover."

Also, in the late case of Bilger v. Atlanta Company, Mt. Oliver, Pa. (175 Atlantic 496) it was shown that a patron was severely injured when he slipped in the vestibule. He filed suit to recover damages and proved that certain substances had been dropped in the vestibule by theatre employes which resulted in the floor being extremly slippery.

The patron filed suit to recover damages. However, since it was shown that the substance was plainly visible and should have been observed by the patron, by the application of ordinary care, the higher court held the injured patron not entitled to recover damages, and said:

"If plaintiff (patron) had been exercising ordinary care in looking where he would have been required to avoid it; and he will not now be heard to complain against defendant (proprietor) of the consequences of his failure to observe an obstacle which ordinary care would have disclosed, whether defendant was negligent.

Therefore, in view of this decision while a theatre owner may reduce chances of liability by making frequent inspections of the building, and remedying dangerous conditions, yet no liability exists if it is proved that the injured patron knew that the dangerous condition existed.

In all cases involving injuries to theatre patrons, it first must be determined whether the theatre operator violated any state or city law with respect to construction or operation of the theatre. If the injury did not result from failure of the theatre operator to abide by such law, then the injured person can not recover damages for an injury resulting from falling down stairs, or the like, unless he proves conclusively that the proximate cause of the injury was failure of the theatre operator to provide proper illumination.

CASE

In Lengas v. Resnick, Manchester, N. H. (175 Atlantic 824) it was disclosed that a person was severely injured when he fell down a flight of steps. He filed suit against the proprietor to recover damages, and contended that the injury was caused primarily because the steps were not properly illuminated. However, since the state or city laws did not require a proprietor to provide illumination of the steps, and also since the evidence indicated that there was no defect in the steps, and that an average careful and prudent person would not have fallen down the steps, the higher court refused to hold the injured person entitled to a recovery. This court said:

DECISION

"Conceding that where special dangers may be encountered because of defective or unusual construction, a landlord may be required not only to install proper lights but to keep them lighted, we find here no evidence of any defect or pitfall connected with the steps."

CONTRACTOR IS HELD NEGLIGENT

THE COURTS have consistently held that a theatre patron, employe, or other person, lawfully in the theatre, when possessed of his natural faculties, may not escape being charged with negligence if he is heedless of his own safety. In other words, if he fails to use the care that an ordinarily careful person would have used in like surroundings, and in consequence sustains injury, he can recover damages for the injury. When deciding legal controversies of this nature the courts invariably investigate the evidence to determine whether other persons, under the same circumstances, were aware of the danger.

CASE

For example, in Hibberd v. Furlong, Detroit (257 N. W. 737), it was revealed that a man named Pentz had for a number of years engaged in the advertising business. In August he contracted with the Woodward Theatre Company to install an advertising curtain. On January 11, while

THE LAW ON PRIZE CONTESTS

By M. MARVIN BERGER

Member New York Bar

THE POPULARITY of prize nights and similar schemes for attracting customers to the box office has caused many exhibitors to lose sight of the disapproval with which the penal laws of the various States regard such plans. Lotteries and various transactions connected with them are generally forbidden by the statutes of every State and by numerous municipal ordinances as well.

In addition, by Federal legislation, the United States mails are closed to use for lottery purposes. While some of these laws do not attempt to define a lottery and differ as to the measure of punishment for violations, they may all be said, in the words of the New York statute on lotteries, to prohibit "a scheme for the distribution of property by chance among persons who have paid or agreed to pay a valuable consideration for the chance, whether called a lottery, a raffle, a gift enterprise, or some other name." The elements of a lottery, as set forth in this definition, are:

1. The offering of a prize.
2. The awarding of the prize by chance.
3. Payment by people of a consideration for a chance to win the prize.

PRIZE: A prize has been defined as an "advantage or inequality in amount or value," or an advantage accruing to one or more of the people participating in the lottery over others also participating. The chief element is an unequal distribution. For example, if every contestant receives property of equal value, there is no "prize" element present and the scheme is not a lottery. The prize may be money or property—in short, anything of value.

CHANCE: While some States hold that a scheme must provide for the winning of prizes by pure chance in order to be called lotteries, most States follow the rule that a lottery exists where chance is the important factor in determining the result, even though the result may be affected to some extent by the use of skill or judgment. In the latter States, such schemes as guessing the number of beans in a jar, are held to be lotteries.

CONSIDERATION: The fact that money, or its equivalent, is paid for the privilege of participating in the lottery is what has drawn legislative fire. The theory of the Legislatures is that people must be protected from foolishly risking their money on the chance that they may obtain a greater return. Therefore, a person may legally make a gift of his money or property in the form of a lottery provided that he obtains no money, or its equivalent, from the people receiving chances.

It is vitally important to note that in order to have the element of consideration present in a lottery, it is not necessary that consideration be paid only for the chance of winning the prize. Money may be paid for merchandise, and yet as long as the purchase of goods carries with it the right to participate in a distribution of prizes by chance, a lottery is in existence. For example, a theatre, charging a 50-cent admission for prize nights as well as ordinary nights, is charging a consideration for a prize contest in that a part of the prize night admission is paid for the chance of winning, and the exhibitor is taking the cost of the prize the theatre was being completed and prepared for its opening, the theatre owner had several men at work completing the building, such as installing seats, pipe organ, and a door for a trap opening in the stage of the theatre. Pentz arrived at the theatre on the morning of January 11, and brought the curtain upon the stage and started to unfold or unroll it.

Following the custom in such cases, Pentz walked backward in the process of unrolling the curtain. The stage of the theatre was lighted about the same as when a performance is on, and sufficient so men could work and see properly to perform their various duties. While Pentz was unrolling the curtain he fell through a hole in the floor and landed on the cement floor in the basement and, as a result of this fall, death followed in about two hours. His dependents sued the theatre owner to recover damages. However, in view of the above-mentioned conditions the court held the theatre owner not liable.

TESTIMONY OF DANGER PERMITTED

ANOTHER IMPORTANT point of the law is that in all trials, involving suits against theatre owners for injuries to patrons, the injured patron may introduce any and all testimony of witnesses which is intended to assist the jury to determine whether the injury was caused by negligence of the theatre owner, or his authorized employes.

For example, in Martin v. Angel City, Los Angeles (40 Pacific [2d] 287), it was shown that a patron stumbled over an obstruction in an aisle, fell down a stairway and sustained severe injuries. He sued the proprietor to recover damages.

During the trial the patron introduced witnesses who testified that the obstruction, over which the patron stumbled, was unusual and likely to cause injury to any patron who was unfamiliar with the construction and present condition of the building. In view of this testimony the jury held the patron entitled to a recovery. The proprietor appealed to the higher court to reverse the verdict on the contention that witnesses had no legal right to express themselves as to the dangerous condition of the building at the time of the injury. However, the higher court sustained the verdict of the lower court, and said:

DECISION

"Those witnesses were not asked their opinions as to the condition of the structure, but only what in their knowledge was its condition in relation to the standard or approved practice of such stairhead structures. Such evidence was proper and relevant to an enlightened consideration of the question whether appellant (proprietor) was negligent in the maintenance of such stairway. . . ."

DISTURBERS CAUSE INJURY

NUMEROUS COURTS have held that owners of places of amusements are liable for assaults on their patrons by third parties, but in each case the danger to the patrons was known to the theatre owner or his agents. However, a theatre owner is not liable for an injury to a patron caused by unlawful acts of other theatre patrons, as strikers, unless definite proof is introduced showing that the injury resulted from negligence of the theatre owner or his employes.

CASE

For example, in Paschall-Texas Theatres, Inc., v. Waymire, Tyler, Tex. (81 S. W. [2d] 676), it was disclosed that theatre operators were on a strike. A patron bought a ticket and entered the theatre for the purpose of seeing a motion picture. While she was seated in the theatre, and while the motion picture exhibition was in progress, there was a violent explosion followed by fire. The explosion was without warning to the patron and the inflammable substances and explosives in the bomb caused the patron serious and permanent injuries. She filed suit against the theatre owner to recover damages alleging that the theatre owner was negligent because he failed to place or maintain guards in constant attendance at the theatre for the protection of the general public, including depredation and injury at the hands of the person or strikers who might commit the act of exploding the bomb in the theatre.

The theatre owner testified that he anticipated some violence on the part of the strikers or some of their sympathizers, and that he sought the protection of the police, members of the State Ranger Force, and the sheriff's department, and in addition thereto, hired three guards of his own choosing. The higher court held the theatre owner not liable.

from the increase in the number of customers attending on prize night. As was said in one leading case:

> It is argued that the element of consideration does not appear because the patrons of the theatre pay no additional consideration for entrance thereto and pay nothing whatever for the tickets which may entitle them to prizes. But . . . there is an indirect consideration paid and received. The fact, that prizes of more or less value are to be distributed, will attract persons to the theatre who would not otherwise attend.

By their so doing, the theatre gets a direct financial benefit and, in the words of another important case:

> The fact that they (theatre customers) paid the same price as charged on other nights is not controlling. . . . A valuable consideration was paid.

It need hardly be pointed out that a lottery may still be a lottery even though entering a person's name in a book takes the place of giving him a ticket for the prize drawing.

The penal provisions of the various statutes dealing with lotteries vary widely. In New York, "contriving, proposing or drawing a lottery" or assisting in these acts, is a felony punishable by a maximum of two years imprisonment and a $1,000 fine. The advertising of a lottery is a misdemeanor.

In Pennsylvania, a person who shall "set up, open, make or draw any lottery or be in any way concerned in managing, conducting or carrying on the same," commits a misdemeanor and becomes liable to imprisonment for not more than one year and a fine of not more than $1,000.

In Illinois, "whoever sets up or promotes any lottery, and whoever aids or is in any way concerned in the setting up, managing or drawing," is liable to a $2,000 fine for each offense, and for a second offense is liable to the same fine and in addition not more than one year's imprisonment.

Besides the penal provisions for conducting a lottery, of which those quoted are typical, some States, by statute, permit a person who pays for the privilege of participation to recover a penalty from the person managing the lottery.

In New York, this takes the form of permitting the customer to sue for double the amount of the consideration paid for participating, and, in addition, double the amount of costs.

The law will not enforce an illegal contract as to the immediate parties thereto, and so, in all States prohibiting lotteries, generally any transaction in furtherance of a lottery is void, either by decisions of the courts or by statute. For example, the New York Penal Law declares all contracts and agreements made for, and on account of, a raffle, to be utterly void, and any transfer of money or other property "in pursuance of any lottery," or aiding and assisting therein, to be "void and of no effect." And so in one New York case it was held that a wholesaler who sold a retailer candy in packages, some of which contained tickets entitling the purchaser from the retailer to a piece of silverware, which was also sold to the retailer with the candy, could not recover the purchase price of the candy from the retailer as it was a sale for the purpose of aiding in a lottery. Nor may the winner of a raffle prize maintain an action for the recovery of his prize.

From the foregoing, it may be seen that there is in existence practically no form of prize scheme in common use in theatres today, which does not violate the lottery laws of the particular State in which the theatre is located. It would, therefore, be most wise for any exhibitor proposing to run a prize night, gift night, or similar prize distribution, to seek legal counsel before engaging in the scheme, and if he be now engaged in operating such a plan, to make certain that he is well within the law in so doing.

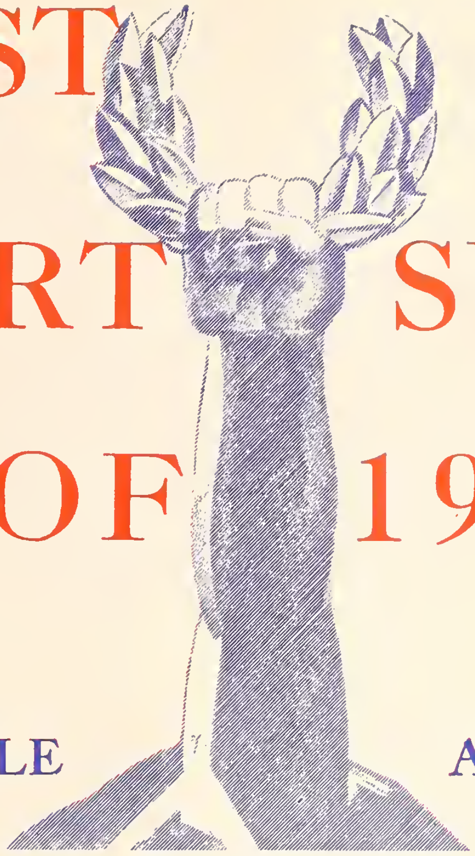
THE BEST SHORT SUBJECT OF 1935-1936!



AND THAT'S NO IDLE ADVERTISING BOAST!

We got the idea from these reviews:

"If this beautiful little novelty in the new three-color Technicolor process (the same as used with "Becky Sharp") doesn't win the Academy award, then I'll miss my guess. Without a doubt, here is a subject that rates especial attention from everyone."

—Jimmy Starr in L. A. Herald-Express

"Word of mouth advertising may build this short to feature importance, for it seems certain to be discussed at length as a splendid example of Technicolor in outdoor photography. The picture serves as a canvas that is always interesting and at times awe-inspiring. Included in the scenes shown are shots of Yosemite waterfalls, Mirror Lake, and the Grand Canyon as it probably has never been shown before."

—Motion Picture Daily

"This two-reeler stacks up as a really worthwhile subject. Scenically and from the standpoint of photography it comes close to masterpiece rating. Many of the Technicolor shots should not fail to elicit applause from any type of audience."

—Variety Daily

RED RULE

THOSE who have regarded with no special or practical concern the drive of the Reds against the newsreel issued by and bearing the name of Mr. William Randolph Hearst may now be discovered themselves discovering that next, in inevitable sequel, comes a drive aimed at dictation of the whole theatre program.

The theatre which can be told this week what newsreel it may or may not run, may expect to be told the next week what features it may or may not play. Some are now being told.

It is more than obvious that the Red movement initiated against the Hearst newsreels was intended as retaliation for attentions that the Reds have been getting in the columns of Mr. Hearst's newspapers. The newsreel itself, so far as one may discover, presented no provocations for special attention. The fact is that only one of the old line newsreels has developed any flair for political and social issues and it has treated them with surprisingly balanced attention. That newsreel has not been honored with Red consideration.

Politics, and all other controversial matters, as matters of controversy, have no place on the theatre screen. That does not however mean that the screen cannot properly purvey newspictures which derive their interest from events that take their origin in controversies and public issues. It further does certainly not mean that the Reds, or others, can with propriety demand of the art of the motion picture that it depart from or forget the standards, conventions and purposes of the civilization of these United States, that it must eschew dramatic material which derives from the American manner of living, policy of government, belief in property or principles of national defense.

We have had in this land of ours in the last few years the occasion, the very proper occasion, to hear some blazing words on the subject of the freedom of the press. The freedom of the screen is quite as significant a subject.

There is a Red press in this country. There are also, all imported, many Red pictures. They have both been permitted circulation among their followers. That it seems is not enough. The Reds would now decide what all America must see.

TASTE AND DECENCY

THE general approval of the industry will be accorded to Mr. Sidney R. Kent's announcement that the corporation will deal with "Steamboat Round the Bend" and "In Old Kentucky," and all other Rogers pictures "on exactly the same basis as though Will Rogers were still alive and working, and there will be no variation from this." Mr. Kent has voiced official refusal of proposals for reissues at this time, and "hundreds of demands for spot bookings of older pictures."

It is only to be regretted that pressures of the zeal that is willing to transgress the canons of taste and the proprieties have made such an announcement necessary.

Meanwhile it is perhaps equally necessary to point out that the motion picture as an institution bearing today all of the responsibilities and heritages, social and moral, of the theatre, stands thereby in special case, very special case. Not quite the same injunction of restraint would apply, for example, to a publisher purveying the books of an author given a sudden flare of attention by disaster, or to the merchandising of works of art in other categories, painting, sculpture, music.

It is necessary to understand that the theatre, being the theatre, a place of display, exhibition before the multitudes, may not properly make profit for itself or diversion for its customers by transgression of the conventions. In this present personified and particularized case the point is clear. It is unfortunate that decency on somewhat more generalized terms has not always been so sharply and readily recognized. The principle none-the-less prevails.

TOO MUCH BUSINESS

A DETACHED excursion into the pages of some, and many, of the national magazines of long established distinction—such an excursion as recently beguiled a tedious time aboard train—will reveal that some strange, disturbing changes, both typographical and editorial, have come about.

In the frenzy to sell stories the editors and their make-up men have come to the use of strange hybridized types for title lines that look most exactly like advertisements, while the advertisers, in a froth of desire to challenge reader interest have been permitted widely to adopt a mask of story telling and editorial treatment. Both, to the literate eye of any person accustomed to reading, result in a conviction of great insincerity. If it has not a price mark and a coupon you can not be sure whether it is an advertisement or an editorial feature.

One is reminded of that long ago story about Mr. Rudyard Kipling, sojourning deep in India, to whom some London friends made a shipment of current magazines, from which they carefully stripped the advertising pages to save postage. Mr. Kipling wrote back: "Send me the advertisements—I can write stories myself."

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S

After New Customers

Taking early advantage of the large number of pictures of special merit on the schedule for release in 1935-36, the organized motion picture industry, as represented by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, will, on September 15, set in motion the machinery for developing the concentrated interest of important women's and men's organizations in the outstanding photoplays through the medium of prepared study guides and discussion procedure for use during the routine clubroom meeting. Picture of the Month keynotes the plan.

The idea, already well rounded, is for the greatest movement to develop additional patronage ever directed to the non-theatregoing public, and is explained on page 13.

Law on Reds

Repelling attacks by Red elements which are boycotting and picketing theatres by way of showing displeasure with various pictures, motion picture interests this week were using and planning legal measures to stop the agitation.

Meanwhile as the New York police and magistrates were acting decisively to prevent further disturbances, the State Department's note to the Soviet Union made conspicuous the Communists' propaganda activities in the United States, of which the campaign against films is a part.

Details of these and other developments are related on page 16.

Park Giveaways

Chicago's largest amusement park—Riverview—enters the giveaway war that has been raging there since March, with the "Biggest Bank Night in the World!", offering this week an award of $2,500. This is the answer received by 115 theatre "Bank Night" and 200 "Screeno" users in that city from the outdoor amusement business in the midwest to the campaign of exhibitors to corral amusement seekers by the lure of the cash award. Chicago's giveaway situation, an acute one, is described on page 18.

Vaudeville's Low

Reaffirming motion picture dominance of the amusement world, vaudeville sinks to its lowest estate in history this season, and Broadway talent agents are definitely pessimistic over the immediate outlook.

With Loew's Capitol experiencing a box office uplift since inaugurating a straight film policy three weeks ago, the circuit is dropping stage shows from a number of houses. Only three Loew houses will have regular vaudeville this year as compared with 12 last season and, going further back, 36 five years ago.

Circuit heads believe that the current and forthcoming crop of releases precludes the need of stage support. A review of the nationwide vaudeville situation as it shapes up at the season's opening gun will be found on page 17.

Hellraisers Take Rest

Adjournment of Congress Monday midnight silenced, at least until January, the expressions of attack against the motion picture industry that were voiced variously during the first session by such legislators as Representatives Celler, Culkin, Sirovich and Pettengill. A review of the Congressional year as it related to the business appears on page 24.

Korda Asks Public

The largest "national" advertising campaign ever conducted by a British motion picture company has been undertaken by London Film Productions, and is the brainchild of Alexander Korda. The object is the investigation of British film tastes and the obtaining of information likely to be of value in planning future production.

The advertising asks 17 questions of the reader, and offers prizes for the best answers to the last question: "What book, play, imaginative or historical subject would you most like to see filmed?" The response has been big thus far and the campaign has made a deep impression on general advertising and journalistic circles in London.

C. M. Woolfe, whose affiliations have been the subject of much speculation lately, has been named managing director of British & Dominions. These and other matters are discussed by Bruce Allan, the HERALD'S London correspondent, in an article on page 28.

No Fox Injunction

Mrs. William Fox and her All-Continent Corporation on Wednesday lost their third attempt to prevent the Twentieth Century-Fox Film merger when Justice Edward Lazansky in New York supreme court refused to grant a temporary injunction, thereby upholding the decision of the lower court.

While a stay might have been issued, indicated Justice Lazansky, on the ground that the price paid for Twentieth Century's assets, "speculatively valued, was recklessly exorbitant," he refused to act because further delay "might cause serious loss to all interested," and for other reasons. See page 25.

David vs. the Goliath

The "gentlemen's agreement" binding producers not to indulge in "talent raiding" is just so much spinach to David O. Selznick, he indicated when arriving in New York to perfect his producing organization and distribution arrangements with United Artists.

"I'll get whom I want and be a gentleman afterwards," he announced. "I do not intend to permit any old line company agreement to keep me out of the business." His justification: there is not enough top flight talent to go around.

Mr. Selznick's pronouncement and other developments in United Artists will be found on page 26.

Allied Convenes

Allied States Exhibitors, in convention at Atlantic City: (1) Decried the policy of distributors in not delivering all product promised; (2) analyzed 1935-36 sales policies and prices; (3) attacked Columbia for its percentage demands; (4) heard Representative Pettengill discuss his anticompulsory block booking legislation; (5) decided on individual treatment of voluntary arbitration; and (6) congratulated Martin Quigley on his 20th anniversary as a trade publisher. The report on the convention is on page 27.

NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Crusades Music

Cecil B. DeMille, in his production of the spectacle film, "The Crusades," a Paramount release, commandeered the resources of the tonal media, and made of the music an integral part of the dramatic and spectacular texture of the production, says Joseph O'Sullivan, commentator on the musical aspect of motion pictures, in a discussion of that subject as it pertains to the DeMille production.

The producer, in the belief of Mr. O'Sullivan, has followed and amplified the best traditions of the stage and the old silent screen in the use of music for "The Crusades." A detailed exposition of the music in the picture is to be found on page 33.

"Pay as You Leave"

There is always a new twist to showmanship. The "honor system" preview is the newest. The arrangement, now spreading throughout the midwest, is for the patrons to pay as they leave the theatre only if they like the show. Experiments show that 88 per cent of the audience responds, only 12 per cent departing without paying. Considerable interest by word-of-mouth and quite some attention in the press attend the campaign staged in connection therewith. The idea is explained on page 35.

Wells to Hollywood

H. G. Wells, noted English author, having announced he will devote himself exclusively for the next three years to creating literature directly for the screen, is due to arrive in the United States in two weeks, and will leave immediately for Hollywood.

The announcement comes from Alexander Korda, production head of London Films, who arrived in New York on Tuesday. In this country Mr. Wells will participate in the launching, through United Artists, of his two films, produced by Mr. Korda—"The Man Who Could Work Miracles" and "100 Years to Come."

China Reconsiders

American distributors in China, protesting against the recent increase by the government of censorship fees and retroactive legislation, won a point when the government rescinded the rule requiring that all old censored matter carry the license certificate, with respect to films censored before the effective date of the rule, December 7, 1934.

In a country where rules are often made without thought to their practical application, this is an important victory, in the view of J. P. Koehler, correspondent for the HERALD in Shanghai.

Consideration was given to not censoring films in Nanking, since legally no license is required when films are shown in foreign-owned theatres under extraterritorial law, but the fear of innumerable annoying reprisals caused the discarding of the idea. Mr. Koehler discusses the situation on page 41.

"K. D" Resigns

Kathryn Dougherty (Mrs. John S. Tuomey), editor and publisher of Photoplay Magazine, this week resigned, effective October 31. Miss Dougherty was one of the founders of the magazine and was through the years of its upbuilding an associate of the late James R. Quirk. She became editor and publisher following the death of Mr. Quirk and the subsequent acquisition of the magazine by the Macfadden interests. Known to the motion picture world as "K. D.," Miss Dougherty will presently be making announcement of new activities.

"Becky's" Record

At the height of the June expectancy preluding the premiere of "Becky Sharp" in the new three-component Technicolor process, Motion Picture Herald said: "The destiny of color . . . is about to be placed in the hands of the theatre-going public."

A study of box-office figures shows that the picture grossed consistently higher than the average for nine weeks in 17 key theatres where it received a first run.

While no records were broken, "Becky Sharp" defeated the summer doldrums and drew more customers in the cities noted than films exhibited in from six to eight weeks previously. The press, too, was largely enthusiastic. An analysis of the public verdict is on page 36.

As Austria See Us

Wilhelm Miklas, president of Austria, sees the motion picture as performed art, which has brought about a "spiritual transformation," and therefore commanding a high sense of responsibility of all who have to do with it.

Motion pictures, says President Miklas, "shall be dedicated to the truth, to the good and beautiful, and must avoid all sordidness and trash." His statement is on page 42.

Mexico to Aid

Long awaited and earnestly hoped for by Mexico's film industry, state aid may soon become a fact. After an exhaustive examination of every phase of the motion picture in the country, undertaken under the direction of the federal government, the Ministry of National Economy has recommended that the time has come for the state to assist the struggling motion picture.

The Ministry of National Economy has recommended to the Ministry of Finance that no time be lost in the establishment of a National Institute of the Cinematographic Industry if Mexico's film business is to continue. Details of the recommendations for state aid are explained by James Lockhart, the HERALD's Mexico City correspondent, on page 44.

Radio Advertising

Results of a survey made by the bureau of advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association show that of the 635 national advertisers which utilized the radio between 1929 and 1933, a total of 448, or 70.6 per cent had abandoned their programs by 1934.

The number of radios in the United States in January was 19,001,592; but programs reached an area having only 12,489,886 radio homes, of which but 4,546,318 had sets in operation between 7 and 10 P. M. The average number of listeners to any one station or chain was found to be 1,102,606, or 9.1 per cent of the "sets in area" and but 5.1 per cent of the homes.

Nine programs, which averaged more than 2,000,000 listeners, paid an average of $8,287 each per program for time and spent, in addition, an average of $5,674 each per program for talent. The survey indicates that the advertisers which spent the largest amounts for radio last year spent at the same time twice as much for newspaper advertising.

The survey is based on a 22-week analysis of 79 leading programs between last October and May of this year.

Pooling Deals

Several pooling deals have featured theatre activities during the past week. Final details have been arranged on the pool of the Evergreen State and Hamrick theatres in Seattle and Portland, which has gone into effect. The parent company will be known as Cascade Theatres Corporation, affiliated indirectly with the National Theatres.

Warner and Loew have pooled two Pittsburgh theatres, the Stanley and the Penn, each circuit maintaining management of its own house, but sharing in the profit.

The Midland, Auditorium and Grand in Newark have pooled and will operate as the Newark Amusement Company, with the Mort Shea office handling bookings.

INDUSTRY MOVES TO RAISE MILLIONS OF NEW PATRONS

Plan to Enlist Large Women's and Men's Clubs in Group Discussions in Support of Outstanding Pictures Will Be Inaugurated September 15 To Bring Non-Theatregoers to the Box Office

The organized motion picture industry as represented by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America on September 15 will set in motion permanent machinery for cultivating millions of new and steady theatre patrons out of the vast market of non-theatregoers, and at the same time keep alive the interest in the screen of those millions of customers created in the past year by the new entertainment order that followed the voluntary adoption by Hollywood of higher production standards.

The procedure to be followed for accomplishing this, out of which a considerable additional return is expected for both exhibitor and distributor, has already been well developed and has as its basis a "Picture-of-the-Month" club idea, to be exploited nationally among large groups. Selections will be made from the outstanding product of all member companies and will be of a type appealing to all of the family.

The idea is a new three-point program for developing separately for the outstanding photoplay the concentrated interest and patronage of (1) School children, a movement already well under way; (2) Organized women's groups, as the second line to be tackled; and (3) Organized men's groups. This will be accomplished by promoting independently among them prepared studies and discussions of the selected pictures.

Having already made considerable progress to date in developing in the classroom, as part of the curriculum, an appreciation for the better motion picture, enlisting the support of educators in sending, at regular admission prices, millions of America's 25,000,000 public and grade school students—all of them potential customers—to theatres to round out their study of the specific outstanding production, the motion picture industry with the release on September 15 of Paramount's "Peter Ibbetson" will set out to cultivate the study-and-discussion idea in women's clubrooms the country over.

Combined Membership in Millions

The support of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, with its 2,000,000 members, is the first to be enlisted, and the move later on will be extended to other large groups with a combined membership of millions, many of whom are not steady patrons.

Next to be tackled, as the move continues to gain precedence among school children and organized,wo men will be the large men's organizations: the Lions, Kiwanis, Knights of Columbus, Masons, Knights of Pythias and the like. This will be the first step ever taken to interest organized men in motion pictures on a national and permanent basis. However, the industry will concentrate in this respect in developing their interest in the dozen or more feature productions that are released every year with a special appeal to men—"Doomed Battalion," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," "The Informer," "Lost Patrol" and the like.

Materialization of the entire project has hinged around two factors: (1) Securing the confidence of the groups cooperating, and (2) demonstrating the industry's ability to create out of classics of literature and drama motion picture classics equally as great ("David Copperfield," et al).

The extent to which motion pictures will be studied in schools and colleges during 1935-36, bringing untold new business to theatres, is evidenced by a report that 63 photoplays of educational interest will be released by large producers during the coming academic year. Seven pictures have already been selected for use in motion picture appreciation courses and guides will be provided to supplement a study of the selected pictures. There will be others.

During the first year—season of 1933-34—of the MPPDA's activities in expanding the market by appealing to millions of potential child customers with the photoplay appreciation idea, only three pictures were selected for study, "Little Women," "Emperor Jones" and "Alice in Wonderland." Last year (1934-35) nine productions were picked: "Sequoia," "David Copperfield," "Dog of Flanders," "Cleopatra," "Little Minister," "Anne of Green Gables," "Treasure Island" and "Les Miserables."

Proof of the interest aroused came with the submission of essays on "Sequoia" by 300,000 students. Several hundred thousand other students undoubtedly participated in the study but did not write essays. Too, Felix Feist, general sales manager of MGM, estimated that 250,000 admission tickets were purchased for "David Copperfield" as the result of the school study plan.

Schools Adopt Study Guide

Unknown hundreds of America's 20,000 high schools have already adopted the study guide as part of the regular school course and there are instances on record where superintendents have closed schools for an afternoon to permit students to attend a local theatre showing a motion picture which had been the subject of study.

In dozens of cases the local school faculties and the exhibitor work together in furthering the plan.

As many as 200,000 study guides have been in use at the same time on a single picture, as in the instance of "Sequoia." Some indication of the vast amount of publicity accruing can be obtained in analyzing the extent of their use, some schools having but a single copy, the text of which is given to pupils piecemeal for a series of English lessons, while elsewhere all pupils have been instructed to use their guides for home work. Thousands of relatives at home have become interested.

Convinced, therefore, that the study and discussion guide is the most practical idea evolved to date to interest the public as it is organized in its various organizations, clubs and schools, the industry has quietly decided to adapt it to adult groups.

On this the eve of a new motion picture season during which there are expected to be more worthwhile productions than ever based on classics both of stage and literature, the industry, in its new national move to create a larger market for the outstanding picture, hopes to cultivate not only millions of additional steady patrons, but expects at the same time to divert much of the usual inner-club discussion of the motion picture to the favorable aspects of the industry as the contributor of outstanding classics to the entertainment of the populace and its culture and education. The organized industry in this connection has in mind threats made in the early summer by large women's groups to invade the industry for the production, distribution and exhibition of product for and to community centers.

The study and discussion idea, of course, is a glorified, though, the industry believes, a legitimate exploitation campaign staged on behalf of the worthwhile picture, intended to develop word-of-mouth advertising on a wholesale scale among the socalled cultured groups, which rarely, if ever, engage in such box office stimulation.

That the large distributors have only recently awakened to the definite and valuable relation of the idea to the box office is agreed in Broadway home offices. They now realize that any study and/or discussion of outstanding photoplays in the schoolroom or clubroom eventually reaches the home, where because of the high type of production under discussion there comes a realization by the family of the high standard of such pictures.

The East Coast Preview Committee, on the roster of which are representatives of large women's organizations, was delegated by its membership last spring to ascertain whether these groups would be interested in adopting the study and discussion idea. The response was satisfactory, and after consultation with club leaders in various parts of the country "Peter Ibbetson" was selected to start the plan.

Paramount, producing "Peter Ibbetson," will finance the publication of this first discussion guide. Other producers are expected to act similarly when their pictures are selected, but it is hoped that the women's groups interested in the production of high grade pictures to the extent of furthering their box office performances, may be willing to pay the nominal individual cost of future discussion publications so that they may be self supporting.

Club Chairmen Advised

Postcard questionnaires have been sent to club chairmen the country over, asking them whether they are interested in introducing "Peter Ibbetson" on their regular club program or Better Film Council study program.

There is also offered to each club chairman a suggestion for their consideration in connection with the project. Preliminary to the meeting devoted to the discussion of the film, the club chairman is advised to secure a qualified member of her group to prepare a book review of Du Maurier's famous novel upon which the film is based, and a second qualified member to prepare a review and evaluation of Raphael's play adapted from the novel. "These two reviews presented on the same day and preliminary to the discussion of the film itself should round out a striking program for your members," the club chairmen are advised.

The clubs and women's groups are asked to pass on their "frank comments" not only upon the material in the guide but also upon the reception which is given to the whole project by their members.

Future selections will be treated similarly, some of the new season's possibilities including: Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" and "Midsummer Night's Dream"; Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities" and "Oliver Twist"; "Little Lord Fauntleroy"; Tolstoy's "Anna Karenina"; Pearl Buck's "Good Earth"; Scott's "Ivanhoe"; and Kipling's "Kim."

All Studios Contribute

Every studio is contributing pictures taken from high literary sources, other productions including: "Mutiny on the Bounty," "Knights of the Round Table," "Marie Antoinette," "Forty Days of Musa Dagh," "Three Musketeers," "Quality Street," "Last Days of Pompeii," "Faust," "Carmen," "Crime and Punishment," "Dodsworth," "Little America," "Life of Pasteur," "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and the like.

Sponsors of the new movement believe that the steadily rising levels of motion picture quality accompanied by a rising standard of photoplay appreciation are forces that have helped to inaugurate production programs that will include grand opera, light opera and photoplays based on the works of some of the world's most noted authors.

Dr. William Lewin, chairman of the motion picture committee of the National Education Association's Department of Secondary Education declared this week that in view of the upward trend in the number and quality of worthwhile productions, the picture appreciation movement will be rapidly adopted.

"A steady procession of photoplays of value and interest in direct relation to the arts and social sciences now seems assured," he added. "What remains is to give this adequate support."

In addition to the new move, some 8,000 theatres throughout the country are expected to be cooperating locally with community film projects this fall, in association with the MPPDA, sponsoring such arrangements as "Family Nights," special children's matinees and the like. This represents an increase of 3,000 theatres over the past season.

The usual study and/or discussion guide is a booklet, size nine inches by six, constructed somewhat as follows:

Introduction.
Viewpoint of the producer.
Viewpoint of the director.
Viewpoint of the adapter.
The cast.
Discussion before seeing the photoplay.
Discussion after seeing the photoplay.
Suggestions for discussion.
Questions for discussion.

Bessie Mack Quits Capitol; Serkowich Takes Position

Bessie Mack, publicity representative at the Capitol theatre in New York, and in the employ of the house almost as long as the theatre has been in operation, resigned last week to handle similar duties for Major Edward Bowes' amateur shows. She has also been active for years in the affairs of the Jewish Theatrical Guild.

Ben Serkowich has succeeded Miss Mack at the Capitol. He was for a number of years editor of Publix Opinion, former Publix house organ, and has been identified with various other companies during the past few years.

Amity Sues for Judgment of $4,100

The New York Amity Exchange, Inc., this week filed in supreme court a motion for a judgment of $4,100 against Essenem Pictures Corporation, covering six contracts. The plaintiff allegedly sold certain pictures to the defendant through these contracts.

Al Mackler and Harland Holmden, acting president of New York Projectionists' Local 306, who are said to have taken over Essenem, are named as co-defendants. The motion contends that Amity is entitled to a judgment because of Mr. Holmden's repeated failure to appear for examination before trial.

Kent Explains Fox Policy on Rogers

Hardly had the last of 100,000 friends and admirers passed the bier of Will Rogers, last Thursday, at Forest Lawn Memorial Park, Glendale, Cal., before movements were made in at least eight different directions to establish a fitting memorial.

The Producers' Association in Hollywood named the following committee of motion picture leaders to cooperate in any move for a national memorial: E. H. Allen, M. H. Aylesworth, R. H. Cochrane, E. W. Hammons, Will Hays, Henry Herzbrun, B. B. Kahane, Sidney Kent, Carl Laemmle, Jr., Al Lichtman, Harold Lloyd, Louis B. Mayer, John Otterson, Hal Roach, the Schenck brothers and Harry and Jack Warner.

Ideas submitted range from a national monument to an annual contribution to charity in the name of Rogers. Marion Davies sponsored a nationwide movement through the Hearst publications, Darryl Zanuck and Louis B. Mayer immediately pledged their support. Mr. Zanuck ordered a Rogers plaque placed over the entrance to the new Fox studio section, which, when completed in seven weeks, will be known as the Rogers Stage.

Jesse Jones, of the Roosevelt Administration, an intimate friend of the Rogers family, likewise suggested a national memorial. Several city governments were considering independent action, principally Mr. Rogers' birthplace of Claremore, where business men started to raise funds for a $2,500,000 museum in his honor.

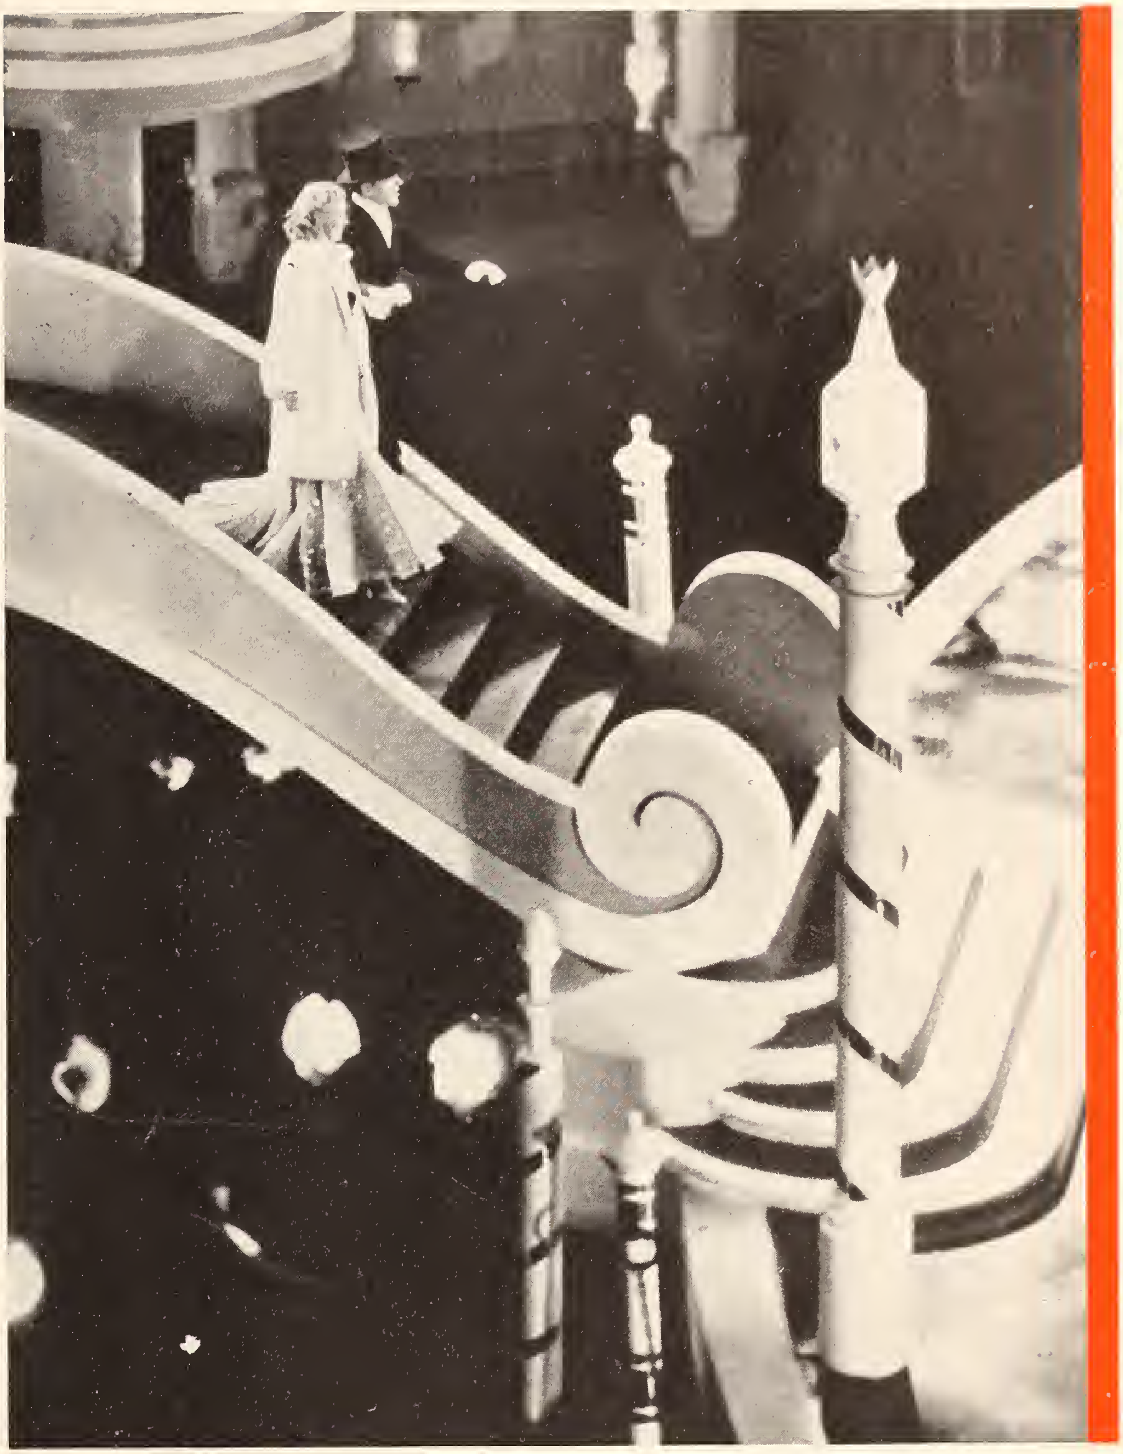
Kent Explains Policy on Films

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, has issued the following statement regarding the future distribution of Will Rogers' pictures:

"We have steadfastly refused to make any announcement as to our policy on the Will Rogers pictures, old or new, until everything that human mortals could do for Will Rogers had been done. That time has now passed. We have been deluged with telegrams and letters from the public at large, and from exhibitors, urging us to release the Rogers pictures, to reissue the old ones and to make all the pictures available for theatres and other places that desire to run them. So that there will be no misunderstanding, our position is as follows:

"We will continue to serve the Rogers pictures to those accounts of ours that have them under contract and to our regular customers in the regular way. This will apply to the releases that are now out, as well as to the two new pictures, "Steamboat Round the Bend" and "In Old Kentucky," which are still to be released. The handling and releasing of those productions will be done on exactly the same basis as though Will Rogers were still alive and working, and there will be no variation from this. We have refused, and will refuse, to reissue any of the old pictures at this time or take care of the hundreds of demands for spot bookings of the older Rogers pictures. We believe that the orderly showing of these pictures, without making any attempt to cash in on the publicity by the reissuing of old pictures, is the only decent and proper way to handle it, and that will be our policy.

"It is our opinion that Will Rogers will live in the memory of the people of the world for many, many years to come and that there will be a legitimate demand to see the work of this great character from time to time, but we refuse to make any attempt to cash in on that which would not have come to us except in the regular, orderly way. We believe that this would have been Will Rogers' wish if he were here today to express himself."



"Top Hat"

A gay extravaganza in the modern pattern, charged with music, dancing and ingenious settings, is the production with which RKO Radio starts off its 1935-36 program. "Top Hat"—here represented in the Herald's series of stills from the new season's product by a scene with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers—was produced by Pandro S. THEATRES FIGHT RED DICTATION IN EFFORT TO HALT PICKET NUISANCE

Effective Weapon Believed Found in Obscure Sections of New York Penal Code to Combat Communist Drive

Hearst Newsreels Reinstated in Loew Theatres Following Decision to Place Responsibility on Municipal Authorities

Fighting back against Communists, pacifists and various radical groups who are attacking films to which they object, the Hearst film interests this week were contemplating action under the New York penal laws, and it was learned that the United States postal authorities may be made aware of the thousands of threats sent through the mails to theatres and film companies.

The Reds' attempted dictation to the American motion picture industry has taken the form of specific demands of Loew's Inc., and, inferentially, of the Hearst film interests, that Hearst Metrotone News be eliminated from Loew theatres, with the alternatives that the Hearst identification be dropped and each release be submitted to censoring.

The Communist-incited attack on films arises at a time when President Roosevelt took official cognizance of Communist activity in the United States, with a rupture of diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia threatened as a result of the Third International's activities with reference to the domestic affairs of this country. In last week's HERALD it was described how the anti-film campaign is largely instigated by the Communist party.

A delegation of three attorneys, representing the American League Against War and Fascism—spearhead of the crusade—the International Labor Defense and the American Civil Liberties Union, on Tueday conferred with C. C. Moskowitz, in charge of Loew theatres in the Greater New York area.

Loew Houses Withdraw Newsreel

A Loew executive said unofficially that organized pressure had caused the elimination of Hearst Metrotone News from seven Loew houses in the most troublesome districts in New York City for a short time. The film was also censored, and scenes disliked by the anti-war groups, such as sequences of the imminent Ethiopian war, are still being deleted. That action was taken in preference to causing the arrest of pickets and incurring the animosity of certain neighborhood elements.

However, the militancy of the League expressed itself in a demand that Metrotone News be taken out of the remainder of the 60 Loew theatres in Greater New York. The newsreel since has been reinstated in all Loew houses, and the film interests have decided to let the authorities cope with the situation.

The police are on the alert to prevent disorders at theatres, and District Attorney William Dodge has instructed his assistants to prosecute each case of illegal picketing or disorderly conduct to the limit, it is understood. The magistrates are becoming more severe in their treatment of such cases

Fascism and other of the larger groups and their leaders. Actions of this nature may not be very effective, it is conceded, because there are so many different organizations in the movement that if one is suppressed the work can immediately be taken over by another.

The element of concerted action constitutes conspiracy under the terms of a little known law in New York State, which film attorneys are planning to invoke as directly applicable to the present situation. Sub-sections 5 and 6 of Section 580 of the penal code provide that if two or more persons conspire to:

1. Prevent another from exercising a lawful trade or calling, or doing any other lawful act, by force, threats, intimidation, or by interfering or threatening to interfere with tools, implements, or property belonging to or used by another, or with the use of employment thereof; or,
2. Commit any action injurious to the public health, to public morals, or to trade and commerce, or for the perversion or obstruction of justice, or of the administration of the laws . . . each of them is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Attorneys are also considering the possibility of proceeding under the postal laws because of the threats of boycott sent through the mails to theatre managers.

"March of Time" Attacked

The Communists this week extended their attack to theatres showing the current "March of Time" release, charging that the sequence depicting the "Cross of Fire" movement in France promoted Fascism and "slanders the French United Front of Communists and Socialists." The Daily Worker, official Communist organ, called on "all working class organizations" to take immediate steps to force withdrawal of the film and urged "boycotting and picketing where it is being shown or sending of letters of protest to the management."

Denying that anything political was intended in the sequence, Ralph Rolan of "March of Time," said the film is taking no sides in the Communist-Fascist fight. "We are not interested in the merits of the controversy," he said. "We reproduced the facts as they were and as the newspapers have been presenting the situation in France."

Fight on Picketing Begun

An attack on Columbia's "Together We Live" was featured in the Daily Worker this week. Here again there was a call to "picket lines and vigorous protests to show Columbia Pictures what we think of some of those 'good sound principles' of theirs." The film deals with the Red furore and labor strife.

With eight theatres in the metropolitan New York area being picketed by branches of the American League Against War and Fascism, and other houses by other groups, the City Committee of the League announced this week that it plans to extend the crusade to 25 theatres within its jurisdiction in a short time.

One theatre is being picketed in Throgg's Neck, N. Y. Loew theatres in Brooklyn and the Bronx are the chief targets of the Reds' concentrated fire.

Court Shows Less Leniency

acting de-

or dis-

that within the past week there have been 25 additional convictions, with sentences ranging from a $5 fine or two days in jail to 30 days in jail. Attorneys of the International Labor Defense have appeared for the defendants in each instance.

In sentencing eight youthful pickets in Washington Heights Court last Friday, Magistrate Raphael Murphy told the defendants there was no justification for "marching up and down because you didn't approve of some film." While the pickets sought to explain they objected to the "martial spirit" in Hearst Metrotone News, the judge drew from them the admission that they had not seen the particular release against which they were urging boycott. The police quoted the pickets as saying they were picketing "on advice of counsel."

"I am sure they have been misled," commented Magistrate Murphy. "It is perfectly plain that they have no right to conduct themselves in this manner. Their conduct could not be justified in any court in the land. This illegal, unjustified picketing must cease."

Because of their youth—most of the defendants were under 23—and because they were first offenders and the court believed they were misguided, Judge Murphy was lenient, but he warned that a repetition would bring a sentence "that would mean a good deal." Their attorney said all were members of the American League Against War and Fascism.

Picketing Grows in New Orleans

A decision of the Recorder's court in New Orleans, prohibiting picketing of theatres in protest against certain films, has been reversed by Judge Arthur Charbonnet in the Criminal District court. The lower court had convicted a group of Socialists, Communists, anti-Fascists and liberals who had picketed the Crescent theatre, distributing handbills protesting the exhibition of "Man of Courage," a documentary film of Mussolini. The radicals called it Fascist propaganda." Judge Charbonnet ordered the defendants released from a charge of disturbing the peace.

The defense attorney charged that Victor Meyers, manager of the theatre, came out and seized Shakel and locked him in the janitor's room before calling the police. The defendants were picketing as members of the local affiliate of the American League Against War and Fascism. Judge E. K. Skinner remarked, "It looks as though they were trying to ruin the business of a $2,000,000 theatre. They're against war, against Fascism, against everything." The youths are free on bond pending a final hearing of the case.

The Hearst newspapers' campaign against radicalism in colleges and their demand that faculty members be required to take the oath of allegiance, have resulted in reprisals against theatres showing Hearst Metrotone News in Eastern college towns, where student patronage is a major factor. The American Legion is reported as actively interested in the agitation. Where the radicals organize their youth leagues, the Legion and other patriotic groups unite in forming youth organizations of their own to counter-act the Red movement.

VAUDEVILLE SINKS TO LOWEST EBB AS 'BACK TO FILM' MOVEMENT GROWS

Broadway Agents Confess to Pessimism Over the Outlook; Decrease in Competition As a Result of Poolings Is Reason

Vaudeville is following the descending star of the legitimate drama as the new theatre season opens, a checkup of large circuits indicating that stage shows in film theatres will strike their lowest ebb, numerically, in history. The situation may change materially by November, say New York booking agents, but they confess to pessimism over the outlook at the moment.

One of the severest blows dealt the cause of vaudeville in recent years lies in the record of the exclusively films policy of Loew's Capitol on Broadway where "China Seas" has just completed three successful weeks, commencing August 9th when stage shows were eliminated for the first time since the theatre was opened in 1919.

The Loew circuit and others believe that with a large percentage of meritorious films being released there will be no need for bolstering stage shows even on Broadway, while the booking agents blame the increased trend to theatre poolings and the accompanying decrease in competition, as well as the labor situation, for accelerating the "back to films" movement.

Considered highly indicative of the general trend is that whereas Loew's five years ago scheduled stage shows in 36 of its theatres as a regular policy and last year, with fluctuations, in 12, this year only three theatres will play vaudeville regularly—Loew's State, New York; the Century, Baltimore, and the Fox, Washington, all week stands.

The Capitol's experience with its new policy is being repeated at Loew's Journal Square in Jersey City and the State, Newark, where stage shows were taken out recently.

On the other hand a stage show with Lou Holtz, Belle Baker and Block and Sully as the principals has just broken a 14-year record at the State on Broadway, it is reported, which means, say Loew executives, that an attraction—whether film or vaudeville—will do business if it is outstanding.

"Name" personalities and well balanced presentations are the essentials for successful stage shows today, more than ever before because vaudeville must compete with expertly produced films and with radio attractions of the calibre of such artists as Eddie Cantor, according to circuit heads, who add that the cost of meeting those requirements is not always justified by the gross.

Double features have taken the place of vaudeville-film policies in numerous theatres and will also be adopted at four Loew houses in New York City when stage shows are discarded, bringing the total of Loew theatres to 39 that are on a dual bill policy.

The Valencia, Jamaica, Paradise, Bronx, and the Orpheum, New York, are scheduled to go films only on September 6, while the Boulevard, Bronx, drops a split week combination policy a week or two later.

SEES VAUDEVILLE ON THE WAY OUT

That vaudeville is on the way out is the prediction of Mike Special, Cleveland, veteran booking agent.

"Between the radio demand for high-class entertainment and the night club needs, there is not much left for the theatre," he told reporters. "The radio people pay salaries far in advance of what the theatre can afford. Due to the large number of night clubs, entertainers can get quicker and better bookings. They like this form of work better, I have found, than upon the stage of a theatre."

Not many years ago there were 15 or more film theatres playing vaudeville the length of New York's Broadway. Today, besides the State, there are only the RKO Palace and the Roxy, while the Music Hall stages its elaborate spectacles in Radio City.

The Paramount, large Broadway theatre, which went to straight films a few months ago, may resume stage shows shortly, according to reports.

RKO is expected to be the largest user of stage talent this season, although the situation there will not be crystallized for some weeks, it was said. Stage shows may be reinstated at the RKO Albee in Brooklyn, where they have been missing for 10 weeks, and also in RKO theatres in Detroit and Schenectady. The circuit now maintains stage bills as a regular policy in its theatres in Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Dayton, Rochester and Boston and spots occasional "name" attractions in Omaha, Denver, Kansas City and a few other cities.

The vaudeville situation at Warners is "questionable" right now and will not be defined for another month. Presently in the stage show ranks are the circuit's Earle in Washington; Stanley, Pittsburgh; Earle, Philadelphia, and houses in Cleveland and Reading, Pa., with the Ritz in Elizabeth, N. J., on a now-and-then basis. Other Warner towns may be opened to unit shows and spot bookings.

The only Paramount theatres being booked direct on a weekly basis are the Michigan, Detroit; Metropolitan, Boston, and the Chicago, Chicago. In addition, the Paramount vaudeville department supplies attractions to various affiliates, such as Balaban & Katz in Chicago, for the Oriental, Marbro, Uptown and others.

The time-honored routine of five acts of straight vaudeville no longer receives public support, but audiences do flock to tab shows with "names" and unusual entertainment values, said Sam Weisbord of the William Morris Agency, one of the largest talent representatives in New York.

He asserted the entire vaudeville industry is watching Loew's experiment in dropping stage shows because of an anticipated series of major films, and agents are predicting that stage shows will be back in Loew theatres in November.

No Need Bolstering Programs With Acts Because of Large Number of Good Pictures, Circuits Say, Dropping Shows

The situation last year was exactly reversed, Mr. Weisbord recalled. "Everyone thought the season would open big, and it did," he said, "and then it dropped."

In Mr. Weisbord's opinion, the largest deterrent to variety entertainment are the demands of stagehands' and musicians' unions.

Considerable pooling in the last year has eliminated theatre competition in a number of cities and hence has removed vaudeville, Mr. Weisford finds.

The William Morris office has lined up talent to repeat the one-night stands which proved popular last season. Sally Rand, Amos and Andy, Thurston, the magician, and others will soon be barnstorming the cities and hamlets with their shows. Miss Rand last year played 50 towns in 75 days with a well rounded unit which included William and Joe Mandell, a line of 12 girls and others, on an arrangement of 50 to 60 per cent of the gross and no guarantee, which netted the company an average of $5,500 to $6,000 a week. Out of this came traveling expenses. The company was routed on a circuit of from 75 to 100-mile jumps. In Milwaukee it stayed a week.

An Amos and Andy unit last year appeared in 21 towns on as many nights. All were independent bookings, as the duo had played the circuits.

An increase in stage show popularity in eastern Canada has been noted in recent months. A special stage production policy was instituted at Shea's, Toronto, and has been running uninterruptedly. The same policy is being inaugurated at Loew's Montreal, and the National, Louisville.

Lucas and Jenkins Theatres in Georgia have inaugurated a four-week vaudeville route including the Capitol, Atlanta; Royal, Columbus; Modjeska, Augusta; Bijou, Savannah; Ritz, Macon; Palace, Athens; Lyric, Waycross; Ritz, Brunswick; Moultrie, Moultrie; Royal, Gainesville, and a number of smaller affiliated towns. This is reported as the greatest comeback stage shows have staged in that section in a number of years. Bookings are handled through Georgia Theatres Service Corporation, a Lucas and Jenkins wholly owned subsidiary, with A. C. Cowles in charge.

Appeal to MPPDA Krimsky's Are Told

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America this week informed the Krimsky Brothers that their appeal against the action of the MPPDA's Hollywood office in banning their "Maedchen in Uniform" must be filed directly with the Hays office in New York.

In the event the appeal is ignored because of the Krimsky's non-membership in the organization, action will be taken through a producer member, it was said.

The biggest "Bank Night" in the world!

That is what Riverview Park, Chicago's largest amusement park is offering its patrons—a prize of $2,500 in cash this week—as the summer's climax to the severest giveaway competition ever fought in the Midwest, with some 115 first and subsequent run affiliated circuit and independent theatres participating, as "Bank Night" users, and 200 employing "Screeno."

The Chicago giveaway situation is daily becoming more acute in the struggle, now extended to outdoor amusements, to stimulate box offices. Besides the Bank Night awards, the 200 houses using "Screeno," give away approximately $25,000 weekly in cash.

The person who wins the Riverview Park prize will be one of 260,000 eligible. Therefore the odds are only 260,000 to 1. This giant "Bank Night" has grown from a $250 weekly deposit to its present size. Last week, with the award at $2,250, more than 37,000 persons attended the drawing. This was the largest crowd to ever attend the park, Fourth of July crowds not excluded. Estimates for the gathering this week are set for 45,000 persons each of whom has one chance to win.

May Divide Money

In the event the money is not given away by the time the Park closes for the season, which will be two weeks hence, the $3,000 jackpot will probably be divided among a number of persons present. If on the first drawing the person does not claim the $3,000 during the allotted ten minutes, 100 names will be drawn and the "pot" pro-rated among the persons present whose names are called. If not one of the 100 persons whose names are called is present, 100 more names will be drawn and so on until someone or a number of persons win the money.

Drawings at Riverview are held every Saturday night at midnight. A screaming siren calls the crowd from all over the vast park to the bandstand where the drawing is held. It is put on in a showmanlike manner. A huge treasure chest with one side made of glass is turned over and over. Some well known celebrity draws the lucky number and the name is called aloud over speakers. After a ten-minute wait the contest is closed providing the money is not claimed and all present are invited to return the next week.

Riverview Park is operated by Henry and Fred Merle, who also are interested in Chicago's Essaness theatre circuit. It was this theatre connection which gave them the idea to run "Bank Night" outdoors.

Although the amusement park has the biggest giveaway and can handle more paying customers some of Chicago's deluxe neighborhood theatres are running it a close second in the war. The Balaban & Katz class "A" houses, the Southtown, Uptown, Marbro and Tivoli give away $150 every "Bank Night." This week the Southtown sets the pace with a record-breaking award of $1,200. The Uptown, sixth largest film theatre in the world, with 5,100 seats, has an award of $1,050 to give away. The other houses have smaller amounts but several have reached the $900 mark.

One would think that these huge awards which attract crowds of anywhere from 10,000 to 25,000 persons to the theatre would be very fine. They have, however, become a veritable "Frankenstein." The theatre has to have from 25 to 150 police on duty to handle traffic. Street cars and other traffic must be rerouted and it is rapidly reaching the point where those staging the affairs feel they are getting too big to handle properly.

OTHER GIVEAWAY DEVELOPMENTS

Cash giveaways, subject of a city-wide competitive conflict in Chicago, are nearing court tests along several fronts. Meanwhile, Supreme Court Judge McLaughlin, in New York, issued, in the first case of its kind, a mandamus order against Commissioner of Licenses Moss, New York, compelling him to issue a license to the Third Avenue Peerless theatre in Brooklyn, which license the Commissioner had denied because the Peerless operated chance games. Judge McLaughlin ruled that the Commissioner acted outside of his jurisdiction, and granted the argument advanced on behalf of the Peerless by Bernard S. Barr, New York attorney.

Mr. Barr also won a victory for the Glenwood, Brooklyn, when Magistrate Eilpern declared "Lucky" to be legal. Lucky is used by 135 New York theatres.

The lower magistrates court in New York refused to act on the city's "Bank Night" complaint against independent owners, passing the case on to special sessions for adjudication. The owners of the copyrights and of the theatres employing the stunts were determined on appellate court fight, if necessary. Dozens of exhibitors had been arrested after warnings by police. "Bank Night," "Screeno," "Movie Sweepstakes," "Prosperity Night" and the like were mentioned specifically in the city's drive.

Judge Polk in Lincoln, Neb., ordered briefs filed both by exhibitor "Bank Night" users and the county attorney in a Nebraska test case.

September 11 was set as the date for a hearing of a lottery charge against Louis Orlove, of Fox's Riviera, in the Milwaukee giveaway situation.

The court of appeals in Cleveland postponed until September 10 the test in that territory. Common Pleas Judge Walther denied a petition for a "Bank Night" injunction against the Haltnorth theatre.

This early "break" helps take care of many of the standees but hundreds never get in and use the tickets—if they buy them—at a later date.

In the B. & K. theatres a special trailer is used in staging the drawing which takes about five minutes. Three minutes of this is spent in waiting for the person whose name is drawn to claim the money. When the number is drawn—a local business man usually does the drawing—the name is found in the files and at a given signal the trailer is shot on the screen. It opens with a loud blast from a siren. Then a title reads, "Here is the Winner!" The name of the lucky person is then broadcast over the public address system and after being repeated three times a clock appears on the screen and the audience can hear the ticking of each second.

Used Once Each Week

While the clock ticks on, the name of the person is written on a huge blackboard. At the end of the time limit the amount for the following week, if the prize is unclaimed, is announced. The person whose name is drawn is sent a telegram of condolence and that concludes the performance until the following week.

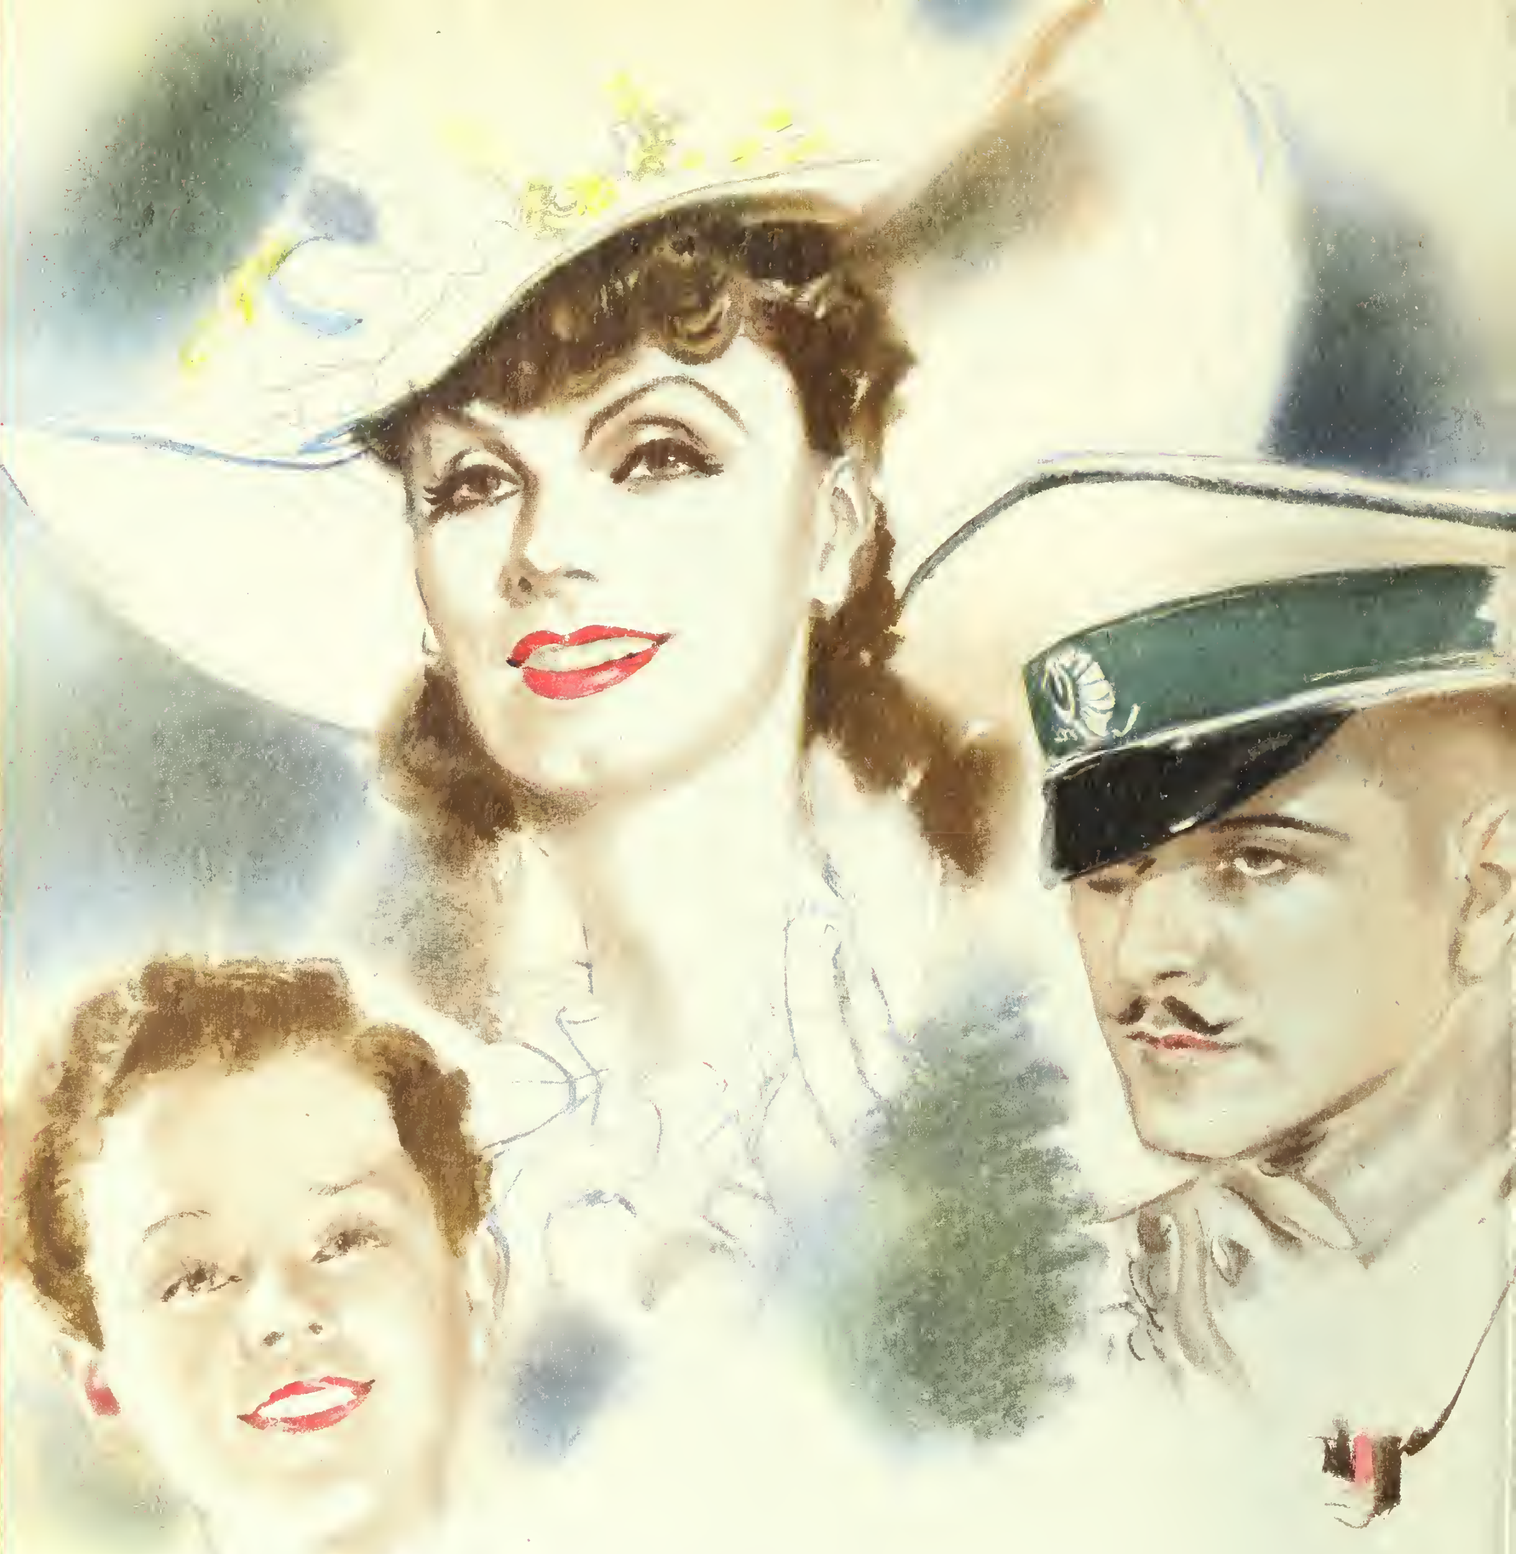
In Chicago there are 115 theatres using "Bank Night." Unlike "Screeno" they use the stunt only once a week.

"Bank Night" has been operating in Chicago since March. At first theatres took to it slowly but as soon as a few had reached a sizable jackpot the others started. At present the rentals for the Chicago territory are larger than anywhere else despite the fact that some territories have more houses enrolled. The rates for weekly rental there run from a minimum of $15 per week to $50 for the class "A" houses.

Chicago exchange managers, like those elsewhere, are much against "Bank Night" and similar ideas. A picture playing on percentage if booked on a bank night presents a problem when it comes to determining the gross. Do all tickets sold comprise the gross for the evening or do just those presented at the door? Usually there are many who attend at a later date, using the tickets they purchased on bank night. Which picture should get the credit?

"Screeno" is Chicago's second most popular giveaway plan. At present about 200 local theatres use it and about 300 in the territory. Houses both large and small present it as part of the program from one to five times a week. In most cases cash awards are given but in some instances merchandise is presented.

All the major circuits use the plan and dozens of the independent houses. Chinaware nights and cooking utensil nights have fallen into the discard as the cash awards are most popular. In some of the smaller houses where competition is very keen they have a giveaway every night. One night it's "Bank Night," another night chinaware, then perhaps three nights of Screeno and then a cooking utensil or glassware night or possibly a country store night.



GARBO'S greatest box-office role. In "ANNA KARENINA" the screen finds its most soul-stirring romance. Greta Garbo and Fredric March entwined in love's destiny. Freddie Bartholomew as Anna's young son gives a performance as gripping as his "David Copperfield." The production is sumptuous, magnificent, truly in the M-G-M manner. Clarence Brown's direction is masterful. Produced by David O. Selznick and presented with pride in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's mightiest year 1935-36.

ANNA KARENINA

The heart of a man called to the listening heart of a woman. "We love", it said, "and love is all." Heart answered heart. With eyes open to what she was leaving forever behind her, she went where love called... to dark despair —or unimaginable bliss. "Anna Karenina" is an absorbing drama of deeply fundamental human emotions, of man and woman gripped by circumstance, moved by forces bigger than they—a great drama, portrayed by players of genius and produced with all the fidelity, insight and skill which made "David Copperfield" an unforgettable experience.

FEDERAL FILM LEGISLATION HALTED BY CLOSING OF 74TH CONGRESS

Representatives Culkin, Celler, Pettengill and Sirovich Were Principal Industry Antagonists; Bills May Be Brought Up Again

Wide Range of Film Measures Were Introduced, Including Block Booking Ban and the Plan for a Federal Board

Adjournment sine die on Monday midnight of the first session of the 74th Congress left hanging in midair, as was expected, the attacks made against motion pictures in the halls of both Senate and the House by a few anti-film legislators, principally Representatives Culkin, Celler, Pettingill and Sirovich.

A wide range of subjects was covered by the measures directed at the motion picture industry during the session, most of which had been laid before Congress in previous years. Included in this group were proposals to end compulsory blind and block booking, establish a federal motion picture commission and such. The usual bills to repeal the interstate ban on the transportion of fight films, and a bill by Congressman Sirovich for the creation of a Department of Science, Art and Literature in the federal establishment, were also brought up.

This session also was one of the most active insofar as Senate investigations were concerned, starting investigations of corporate reorganizations by the Sabath committee, by the McAdoo committee inquiring into receiverships and bankruptcies, and by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Congressional exploration of the ramifications of American Telephone and Telegraph Company and its interest in the film industry, with special attention to its subsidiary, Electrical Research Products, was another move emanating from the Senate this session.

Only Two Near Enactment

It was the longest session held in recent years with a record of having appropriated something like a billion dollars for each of the eight months it was in Washington.

Although many measures affecting the film industry were introduced during the session, only two even approached enactment—the State Department's written copyright bill passed by the Senate and the Sirovich resolution for an exhaustive investigation of every phase of the industry, which might have been adopted had its author been able to bring it up before the House of Representatives.

While the session has ended, the Congress has not, so that any bills now in the machinery may be brought up for consideration next January.

Although it escaped direct legislation, the industry will be affected by at least two of the New Deal measures which Congress passed, the 1935 "tax-the-rich" revenue act and the social security act. Under the former, corporations in the industry will be taxed upon income at rates ranging from 12½ to 15 per cent, instead of the present flat 13¾ per cent; individuals who have incomes of more than $50,000 will pay heavy surtaxes; the capital stock tax is increased from $1.00 to $1.40 per $1,000 of declared value, and excess profits taxes are imposed at the rate of six per cent on profits between 10 and 15 per cent of declared valuation and 12 per cent on higher profits; and surtaxes ranging from 20 to 60 per cent are imposed upon personal holding companies.

Under the social security act, employers in the industry—producers, distributors and exhibitors—will pay payroll taxes to finance old-age and unemployment insurance for wage earners. The rate of tax will start at one per cent next year for unemployment insurance, reaching three per cent two years later; beginning in 1937 there will be a one per cent tax for old-age pensions, increasing every three years by one-half of one per cent until it reaches three per cent in 1949. Employes also will pay taxes on their earnings for old-age insurance, at the same rate as employers, and the latter will be made responsible for the former's contributions. In addition, employers will be subject to any taxes for similar purposes which may be imposed by state enacting complementary legislation.

A high-light of the session was the invalidation of the recovery codes by the supreme court and the futile effort of Congress to devise legislation to continue government control of industry. Another feature was the "blank check" appropriation of $4,800,000,000 for public works and relief, from which the War Department will receive money for the construction of theatres at Army posts and New York City will get funds for the formation of troupes of vaudeville, dramatic and circus performers to give free shows to the public.

The impossibility of securing any action on copyright or film industry investigation legislation was admitted at the last minute by Representative Sirovich of New York. No effort was made to secure last-minute action on either measure.

Congressman Sirovich declared he has received some 1,500 communications on the copyright bill, and that a great deal of opposition has been expressed to the measure as passed by the Senate. Other members also have heard from constituents interested in the bill, and it was indicated that if any effort had been made to get a vote it would have precipitated a wrangle which might have delayed adjournment.

CEA STATES A POLICY

A statement of policy on the part of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association of Great Britain with relation to the publication of details of the "mechanical tricks" used by studios is embodied in the following letter, received by John Otterson, president of Paramount, from W. R. Fuller, general secretary of the CEA. Mr. Fuller wrote:

There is a general feeling amongst exhibitors that the publication to the public of details of the various mechanical tricks employed in the studio only destroys the successful illusion of the completed film. In consequence, the entertainment value of the film is lessened, to your detriment and ours.

This matter has been discussed on numerous occasions in our Branches and by our General Council. At the last meeting the General Council instructed me to write to the various studios to bring this point of view before them and to ask in future whether they would cooperate by not allowing any publication to the public of the various means by which they secure illusion within the studio. Such cooperation will be very much appreciated by the exhibitors of this country and the increased success of the film will more than compensate for the loss of a little publicity of what we consider an undesirable kind.

Lina Sues Principal To Recover Film Assets

Joseph Briskman, president of the Lina Pictures Corporation, has filed an application in New York supreme court for an examination before trial of Benjamin W. Solomon, assistant secretary of Principal Distributing Corporation, in connection with a suit for an accounting brought by the complainant.

Mr. Briskman contends that in April, 1932, Talking Picture Epics, Inc., was about to give up business as distributor of educational and travel subjects, and engaged Principal to take over all of its assets, and continue distribution of the pictures. Mr. Briskman claims Principal has withheld some of the proceeds which it collected for the Epics films, and that the Epics-Principal contract has now terminated and that he is entitled to a return of all its property. The allegations were denied, and decision was reserved.

SUPREME COURT SQUASHES THIRD ATTEMPT TO PREVENT FOX MERGER

Legal Stay Would Cause Serious Loss, Says the Decision Denying Temporary Injunction to Mrs. William Fox

Clear Path to Completion of Consolidation Virtually Assured as Mrs. Fox's Attorneys Consider New Steps

With all legal obstacles removed to the Twentieth Century-Fox Film merger and reorganization, officials on Wednesday proceeded to wind up final steps in the consolidation after Justice Edward Lazansky in the appellate division of the New York supreme court in Brooklyn handed Mrs. William Fox and her All-Continent Corporation their third defeat.

Denying the application for a stay to prevent consummation of the merger—which had already been completed—Justice Lazansky upheld Justice Alonzo G. McLaughlin who had refused to issue a stay last Thursday.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs immediately went into conference and were considering possible avenues of further legal action. Prior to her applications in the courts Mrs. Fox unsuccessfully attempted to have the General Theatres Equipment receiver vote against the merger.

Mrs. Fox's attorneys said that while they would not appeal the decision, they were considering court action to prevent execution of some of the merger provisions.

During the week there were these other developments:

1. Fox Film will pay Winfield Sheehan $375,000 in settlement of his contract, it was disclosed in documents filed in court, the last payment to be made in 1937.
2. Contracts under which Mr. Kent, Mr. Schenck and Mr. Zanuck will receive a total of substantially more than $4,000,000 compensation in seven years were disclosed.
3. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation common and preferred stock have been admitted to the list of the New York Stock Exchange, and Fox Film Class A common will be suspended from dealings on September 4.

Justice Lazansky said "it would not have been an improvident exercise of discretion" to have granted a temporary injunction in view of the plaintiff's contention, which he said was not satisfactorily answered, that the price paid by Fox Film for Twentieth Century's assets was "recklessly exorbitant." At the same time he observed that the merger had already been fully completed and "to disturb the status quo until the validity of the transaction may be determined at a trial might cause serious loss to all interested and be of little benefit to plaintiff."

The decision called attention to the fact that "the corporate plaintiff is really represented by the receiver of another corporation (General Theatres Equipment) appointed in Delaware, the court of which state has directed that receiver to vote for the plan.

Justice Lazansky last Thursday granted a stay against consummation of the merger to permit any interested parties to file notice of contempt proceedings when Murray Becker, attorney for Mrs. Fox, insisted that the merger had been completed before Justice McLaughlin dissolved his stay order the same day. Another action by Alexander Gilbert, a small stockholder, was also dismissed.

The exact time of the meeting Thursday afternoon when officers of Fox Film met and technically effected the merger could not be agreed upon by counsel for the plaintiffs and Ralph S. Harris, representing the merger interests. The court was informed by Mr. Harris that the companies had no knowledge of the show-cause order, signed by Justice Lazansky Thursday afternoon, until after the merger had been consummated.

Justice Lazansky indicated he intended to give some thought to the question of salaries before deciding whether to issue an order staying the merger. However, he pointed out the peculiar legal situation, that arguments were being heard to prevent an action already performed.

Could Enjoin Stock Transfer

Mr. Becker replied the court could enjoin the transfer stock or payment of salaries to the three executives, or any other action necessary to the fulfillment of the conditions of the merger.

Mr. Harris argued at length against a stay, saying that "to do so would cause the temperamental movie stars of the companies to become jittery and would also cause a reaction in the stock which would cause heavy losses."

Justice Lazansky commented that "on the whole the merger proposals are a very good piece of business."

At Monday's hearing Mr. Harris told the court that while the litigation was not embarrassing the merger, it was injuring the interests of 17,000 stockholders in the new company who found themselves in possession of newly issued certificates of stock which could not be traded in on the open market.

Denying the application of Mrs. Fox and the All-Continent Corporation for a temporary injunction to prevent the merger and Fox Film reorganization, Supreme Court Justice McLaughlin in Brooklyn last Thursday ruled the merger would be for the best interests of Fox stockholders and there was no merit in the charges of irregularity made against the companies and the Chase National Bank. Counsel for Mrs. Fox took an immediate appeal, with the result that the matter was brought before Justice Lazansky.

Cannot Review Business Judgment

On the general issues, Justice McLaughlin, in his decision, said in part:

"Whether the merger upon the terms and conditions outlined is desirable and whether the benefits and advantages to be gained outweigh the burdens, if any, assumed, involves a question of business judgment as to which reasonable men may differ. Upon the directors and stockholders devolves the duty of exercising that judgment.

"This court cannot review the business judgment or wisdom of the directors or stockholders so long as they act honestly and in good faith."

Salary Terms Disclosed

Salary terms in the executives' employment contracts were disclosed in the merged company's application for registration on the New York Stock Exchange. Annual compensation for Mr. Kent, as president, would be $215,400, including expenses for entertaining and a guaranty of his salary as president of National Theatres Corporation; Mr. Zanuck, as head of production, would receive $260,000 a year plus traveling expenses; Mr. Schenck, as executive head of production, would receive $130,000 a year plus expenses and be permitted to serve other companies. Mr. Kent's contract also provides for special payments and a stock option. Mr. Schenck is permitted to devote a reasonable portion of his time to the management of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., and United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.

Listing of the new stock is one of the final phases of the merger and reorganization. Fox Film last week paid the secretary of state at Albany $89,167.50 for the privilege of filing a certificate increasing the number of shares of its capital stock from 2,816,650 to 4,600,000 shares.

Information submitted to the court by Fox Film in defending Mrs. Fox's action to halt the merger disclosed that for a release from the contract under which Winfield Sheehan received $400,000 a year, the company will pay its former production head $75,000 during the current year, $150,000 during 1936, and $150,000 during 1937.

The papers also revealed that Chase National Bank's Fox stockholdings are 1,750,000 shares of Class A common, or approximately 70 per cent of the issue. General Theatres Equipment Corporation owns 14,000 shares of the Fox Class B stock, or about 86 per cent of the issue, and 195,000 shares, or about eight per cent of the A stock.

Coincident with the announcement of a 50 per cent increase in the budget for British production at the Fox Wembly studio, it was announced that R. Sutton Dawes, formerly with Fox Film for 17 years, has returned to his old post as sales manager for Fox in England. Quota "quickies" will be abandoned in favor of box-office product, it was said.

Mr. Kent sails next month on plans for the Fox production unit at Denham studios, and Robert T. Kane, new head of English producing activities, sails Wednesday.

Fox Inter-Mountain Managers Hold Annual Convention

Fox West Coast managers of the Inter-Mountain division from New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Montana and Western Nebraska held their annual convention and "pep" meeting at the Broadmoor Hotel, Colorado Springs, this week. Present were some 30 managers and the Denver office staff; Rick Ricketson, division manager, in charge. Governor Edward C. Johnson on the opening day addressed the meeting.

Albert J. Gould, company attorney, discussed public relations. Fred Speers, Denver Post critic, spoke on theatre publicity while Duke Dunbar, former Denver code secretary, explained the workings of the Hays organization. On Wednesday, theatre operations and roundtables were held on 1935 showmanship advertising. Managers reported business on the up grade.

SELZNICK WARNS THAT HE WILL "RAID" TALENT

"I'll Get Whom I Want and Be a Gentleman Afterwards," Says Producer on Arrival in East

David O. Selznick, who is to produce five or six features for distribution through United Artists, declared himself as a talent "raider," in a press interview on his arrival in New York the other day. "I do not intend," he said, "to permit any old line company agreement to keep me out of the business."

His financing having been completed, Mr. Selznick came east last week on a search for acting and directing talent and story material, and to confer with United Artists on the handling of his films.

Among other United Artists corporate and production developments of the week were the arrival of Alexander Korda, production head of London Films, for conferences relative to the future position of the British affiliate in United Artists and announcement of studio expansion plans on the coast.

Asserting flatly that he considers all talent whose contracts were about to expire as "the property of the field" and therefore legitimate subjects of "raiding," Mr. Selznick left no doubt that he intended to build up his production organization, at least partially, in this manner.

Regarding the "gentlemen's agreement" whereby studios refrain from negotiating for the services of talent under contract to a competitor until such time as the employing studio signifies that the contract will not be renewed, Mr. Selznick said:

Says, "Now It's My Turn"

"That agreement has been in existence for years. It probably originated when Warner took Ruth Chatterton, Kay Francis and William Powell from Paramount, and promised not to do it again. Darryl Zanuck was the next to do it, when he left Warner to form Twentieth Century, and then he agreed to stop it. Now it's my turn. I'll get whom I want and be a gentleman afterwards."

Mr. Selznick emphasized that his "star raiding" campaign would be conducted only whenever necessary and that he would not countenance contract breaking. "Stars that walk out on their contracts deserve to take a licking," he commented.

The producer attempted to justify his intended policy with the declaration that there is an extreme scarcity of big name talent. "There are not more than 15 real stars in the business today," he said, "and there isn't enough talent to make 60 good pictures a year."

Mr. Selznick said borrowing was an unreliable method of augmenting a production roster because "you can't borrow unless you have something to loan." He added that he would be willing to loan or exchange talent but he would not be "any more philanthropic than the others" in this respect.

Mr. Selznick said he had observed an inclination among the top-notch stars to limit the number of pictures they make in the course of a year because they realize "it is smart not to be seen too often" and because of considerations of leisure and the fact that extra income is taken by the government for income tax.

The producer asserted he aimed to develop his own roster of personalities.

To Produce on U. A. Lot

He said he probably would do all of his producing on the United Artists lot, beginning with "Little Lord Fauntleroy," with Freddie Bartholomew, which is scheduled to start about October 15. He said whether he would make one or two pictures in England would depend on the stories and casts required.

Mr. Selznick said he did not contemplate the production of road show or $2 admission films. "No picture is too big to play at 60 or 70 cents, or whatever the average is," he commented. He said his organization may finance plays later in the season.

After completing arrangements for worldwide distribution and after a series of conferences toward the establishment of a permanent producing organization, Mr. Selznick planned to leave for the Coast next week.

Additional facilities for the increased number of companies working on United Artists' $18,000,000 Hollywood production schedule for this season will be provided in a program of expansion costing $300,000. The first step is the immediate construction of a sound stage, to be one of the largest in Hollywood.

On his first visit to America in five years, Mr. Korda, who arrived Tueday, is conferring with United Artists executives in New York and was to leave Friday for Hollywood with Al Lichtman, United Artists' president, for conferences with Samuel Goldwyn, Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford, owner-producers of United Artists.

Report Korda Seeks New Deal

It is reported Mr. Korda is dissatisfied with his present arrangement with the company and his trip is for the purpose of becoming a part owner in United Artists. Reports also have it that he wants a more favorable distribution arrangement.

On Mr. Korda's arrival it was said he came over to readjust his contract with United Artists, and while Mr. Korda denied numerous reports he said "anything may develop" with regard to a partnership in United Artists.

London Films' quota for United Artists distribution will be six pictures this year, said Mr. Korda. While on the Coast he will inspect new production equipment for the benefit of his new Denham studio. He predicted that in three years color would be as common as black-and-white, and British films would rival Hollywood's in earning power.

Mr. Silverstone said United Artists has signed a new four-year deal with British & Dominions for production of at least five features annually.

Mr. Korda was accompanied here by Murray Silverstone, chairman of the European company of United Artists, Ltd.; Sir Connop Guthrie, a member of the board of London Films, and Stephen Pallos, London Films general manager.

Mr. Korda announced he had signed Walter Hudd, of the London and New York stage, for the part of Colonel Lawrence in "Revolt in the Desert," said to be the most highly prized role British films have offered in a long time.

The exhibitors and distributors of the Denver territory will hold their second annual outing September 10 at the Lakewood Country Club.

Mack Swain, Film Comedian, Is Dead

Mack Swain, noted comedian of the stage and screen, a veteran of the motion picture, died this week at Tacoma, Wash. In Tacoma, en route from Chicago to Hollywood, Mr. Swain suffered an internal hemorrhage. He was 59.

Born in Salt Lake City, on February 16, 1876, Mr. Swain attended the public schools of his native city and then went on the stage. For 22 years he played in vaudeville, minstrel, comedy-drama and musical comedy, but his outstanding popular success came in the early Keystone comedies in support of Charlie Chaplin.

His stage plays included "Around the World in 80 Days," "Human Hearts" and "Brown's in Town." He was with Mack Sennett for many years and appeared with Chaplin in "The Gold Rush," among others. Other pictures in which he appeared in more recent years included "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," "The Cohens and Kellys," "Marianne," "The Cohens and Kellys in Atlantic City" and "The Last Warning."

When informed of the death of Mr. Swain, Mr. Chaplin said: "He was the most amiable and friendly of characters, and I feel real pain at his death."

As Mr. Ambrose, Mr. Swain was one of the screen's most colorful figures, a featured player before the films had "stars." In his films more than two decades ago appeared such as Mabel Normand and Wallace Beery.

More than six feet in height, Mr. Swain weighed approximately 300 pounds. He is survived by his widow and three brothers.

ASCAP Denied Federal Receiver

Superior Court Judge D. F. Wright in Seattle has denied a motion to transfer the temporary receivership for the Washington State branch of ASCAP to the federal courts. The receivership was continued indefinitely in Washington by the court on the ground that ASCAP was operating in violation of state laws on monopolies, price fixing and conspiracy in restraint of trade. The court also sanctioned the continuance of Tracy Griffin as receiver, but refused to make the receivership permanent.

The decision of the court means that ASCAP will be restrained indefinitely from conducting business or entering into any future agreements in the state without court approval. Cross complaints from eight radio stations, co-defendants in the state's suit were served upon Mr. Griffin.

The complaints were withdrawn following presentation of ASCAP's petition for federal jurisdiction, as a strategic move to avoid possible grounds for a federal trial, since cases involving diversity of citizenship and more than $3,000 are subject to federal jurisdiction.

ALLIED DELEGATES FIND DISTRIBUTORS ARE 61 FILMS SHORT ON '34-'35 LISTS

National Officers and Regional Directors, Meeting With New Jersey Unit, Decry Policy of Not Fulfilling Commitments

Delegates and national officers attending Allied's New Jersey convention at Atlantic City late last week matched notes on their contractual arrangements with distributors and calculated that some 61 feature motion pictures promised by the large companies for 1934-35 will not be delivered, committments made at the beginning of last season that will not be met standing as follows:

Metro-Goldwyn, 16.
Paramount, 11.
Warners, 11.
Fox, 9.
RKO, 7.
Universal, 5.
United Artists, 2.

However, there are possibilities, although no assurance, that the companies may yet come through with some of these. RKO may cut its non-deliveries from 7 to 4, and MGM and Universal may lower theirs.

The Allied delegates were warned that regular releasing schedules end July 31st and exhibitors must notify exchanges by August 31st that they will accept late deliveries. Notices to Warners, however, may be forwarded up to September 15.

The convention keynote in this connection was struck by Sidney Samuelson, national Allied president, when he decried the shortages.

Analyzing the sales situation for this season, Mr. Samuelson expressed the opinion that while "the lion took a tumble from his throne last year, the lineup for this season does not look as bad. In the local territory four features are being sold at 35 per cent, eight at high allocations and eight others at low allocations," he added.

"In other territories four are being offered at 35 per cent, four at 30 and the rest flat rentals. This company also had adopted the weekly payment plan for shorts.

"Fox's policy is flexible," continued Mr. Samuelson. "The product can be bought on a flat arrangement or six on percentage, which is an increase of two over last year. In other territories as many as 10 are being sold percentage. This company also has the short subject weekly payment plan."

Paramount's policy brought to light that "The Crusades" is being marketed at 40 per cent of the gross. This company is selling 10 on percentage, including "The Crusades," four at 35 per cent, four at 30 per cent and one picture left open. Regular payments for shorts obtain.

No definite commitment from RKO has been made locally, but the Allied delegates said percentages would be demanded on 16. One exhibitor held three features would be sold at 40 per cent and on the rest 20 per cent increases over last year will be sought.

Policy of United Artists is flexible and product can be bought flat or percentage. Of all the companies, this is the only distributor not selling shorts on the weekly payment system, it was declared.

Universal can be bought on a fair basis, it was said. This company is willing to make deals under similar arrangements of past years, the delegates heard.

In addition to "Anthony Adverse" at 50 per cent, Warners is offering 13 on percentage. "Anthony Adverse" was sold last year and is being resold because the company withdrew it from the releasing schedule. Seven features are available at 30 per cent, two at 35 per cent, and four at 25 per cent.

Little could be learned about Columbia's status, it was said, because the delegates participating in the sales discussion reported they had been unable to obtain any definite policy from Columbia's salesmen in the field, and before adjournment Lou Rodner, operating the Broadway theatre, at Camden, led the convention in a spirited attack on the company's policies and sales procedure.

He declared on the floor that the basic reason for the development of a Philadelphia buying and booking combine by independent owners is to break down Columbia's demands on percentages in southern New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Abram F. Myers, national Allied board chairman, told the convention that independent owners as represented by his organization were delighted to be rid of the NRA and its codes, were pleased with the campaign waged by the Legion of Decency and were now working to eliminate compulsory block booking.

The regional directors discussed the prospects of passage of the Pettengill anti-compulsory block booking bill and later heard Representative Samuel B. Pettengill, Democrat, of Indiana, express the hope that his proposal in Congress would help win him goodwill for the industry should it be passed. Mr. Pettengill asserted he wanted to see the industry "succeed as a legitimate enterprise and build for the future and make money." He declared he was not "a long-faced dour Puritan," adding the bill was not a censorship move, although a lot had happened in the industry in the last 15 years which in his opinion ought to be curbed by Federal action. The congressman attacked racketeering and gangster films.

Because of diverse opinions received on the proposed bill, Mr. Pettengill asked for the views of those present.

Mr. Myers, as a member of the committee which drafted the bill, recited alleged evils of compulsory buying and booking. About 100 exhibitors attending raised their hands in the negative when asked if they had the right of selection in buying.

Representative Pettengill Tells Delegates That He Hopes His Anti-Block Booking Bill Will Bring Goodwill for Industry

Mr. Myers asserted that, while propaganda held block booking to be a good thing, meritorious pictures were delayed beyond the season and then taken off contracts and resold later. He maintained compulsory buying means getting rid of mediocre films and tends to place the business in the hands of a few. To prove his point he asked Mr. Samuelson how many companies existed 15 years ago as compared with the present. The answer was 20 then against eight now.

Mr. Myers informed the convention that Allied is getting out a book answering attacks on the Pettengill bill and intends to give it extensive circulation among exhibitors, civic and religious groups endorsing the bill.

He said that a move by distributors is on to concentrate on a theatre invasion. He asserted the way to combat the move is to organize proper buying combines to encourage new production and engage in production.

Efforts of the nominating committee to have Mr. Samuelson accept re-election as president of Allied of New Jersey failed when he declined on the ground he cannot do justice to the post in view of his obligation to national Allied. He pointed out conflict of duties between the local and national groups made it impossible for him to continue as head of the Jersey organization.

With Julius Charnow having declined the post, three prospective candidates for the presidency were understood being considered by the nominating committee, which postponed action for two months.

Convention Commends Quigley

The convention passed a resolution congratulating Martin Quigley on his 20th anniversary as a motion picture publisher and extended to him its wishes for his continued success.

Although opinion was divided, the majority of those at the convention expressed their favor of a voluntary arbitration plan. It was agreed to let exhibitors decide for themselves on cases.

A motion was passed by the convention declaring eligible for membership theatres independently owned but in booking and buying pools with major circuits. There are about 10 such in New Jersey.

Court Approves Sale Of Foreclosed Theatres

Judge Franklin T. Hammond in superior court, Boston, last week formally approved the foreclosure sale in Springfield on July 30 of 12 theatres and real estate owned by G. B. Theatres Corporation, and operated by M. and P. Publix to Wallace V. Camp and others constituting a bondholders' committee, who were the only bidders. The price was $287,050 and the purchasers have two months to pay.

The mortgage was foreclosed by the National Rockland Bank of Boston and Harold Storke, the trustees. Included in the property sold are 12 theatres.

LONDON FILMS LAUNCHES NATIONAL AD DRIVE TO LEARN PUBLIC TASTES

Campaign, Developed by Kord Asks 17 Questions; Offers Prizes for Best Answers to Queries on Motion Picture

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

The biggest nationwide advertising campaign ever launched by a British film company, in fact the first plan of this type really to deserve the epithet "national," has been undertaken by London Film Productions with the object of investigating British film tastes and of obtaining information likely to be of value in its future productions.

The campaign began with page spaces in the London dailies, and was followed by similar space in the national Sundays and in leading provincial papers on Monday.

Copy was headed "National Film Investigation, conducted by London Film Productions Ltd." and in bold spread, following quotations illustrating the growth of the industry from 1923 until 1935, appeared a statement emphasizing this progress and stating "To achieve an importance equal to its great American counterpart the industry needs to make further efforts—and to receive further help from the British public.

"For this help, London Film Productions are coming to you," continues the statement.

"We want your opinion on our past work and your help in planning our future policy."

Ask Seventeen Questions

Seventeen questions follow, with space provided for answers. These ask an expression of opinion as to the progress of British films in the last year; the placing in order of preference of 20 British films of all makers; opinions on love interest and "serious" plot motives; the imaginative film of the H. G. Wells type.

The final question is: "What book, play, imaginative or historical subject should you most like to see filmed?"

For the best forty-word answer to this question prizes are offered at £500 (2,500), £250 ($1,2503, £100 ($500) and 250 of £1 ($5) each. The closing date is September 16.

The immediate response to those advertisement has been enormous and a special department has been organized to deal with it at the London headquarters at Denham; total entries are expected to run well into six figures.

The campaign, a personal conception of Alexander Korda, has made a big impression here, in general advertising and journalistic circles as well as in the film industry. It is recognized that London will get an enormous publicity dividend on its space expenditure—an incomparably greater one than could have resulted from a bald statement of its achievements and plans

Woolf Heads B. & D.

The news of C. M. Woolf's plans in the industry came last week not from him, but as part of the report from the directors of British & Dominions Film Corporation to their shareholders, which had been promised when no half-yearly dividend was declared. The report announced the appointment of Mr. Woolf as B. & D.'s managing director. That B. & D. was considering erecting a further sound stage and that all three existing stages would be occupied continuously either by the company or by good tenants, were other points of interest in the statement.

Official news has thus at last substantially justified gossip rife in Wardour street when Mr. Woolf resigned from Gaumont-British, and his name was commonly linked with that of British & Dominions.

Situation Uncertain

The situation now created is still full of uncertainties. Mr. Woolf is an experienced organizer of production; it is history that his cooperation with Mickey Balcom made Gainsborough Pictures and definitely helped the move in British production which resulted in the Films Act, and the flotation of Gaumont-British. He was also closely associated with B. & D.'s earliest efforts, giving them a release through G. B. and valuable help in a time of commercial crisis. General Distributors, which he recently floated, is not, however, a production but a distribution company, which has already announced affiliations with several independent producers. B. & D. meanwhile has a release through United Artists.

Given a production company with a managing director of vast experience in the distributing fields and in control of a distributing company, it does not seem difficult to prophesy the channel through which the product will ultimately reach the exhibitor.

New Theatre Approved

By far the most important ruling yet laid down in connection with the overbuilding controversy is contained in a statement from the Ministry of Health of the reasons which have led it to override a decision of the Liverpool City Council rejecting the plans of a new theatre on the grounds that district needs were supplied by existing theatres.

The proposed theatre, says the Ministry, is well planned and would comply in every way with the Council's demands, while "none of the existing halls could be reconstructed to comply with existing requirements." It therefore accepts the case for the erection of the new theatre as made out "even when full weight is given to the shortage of land for housing purposes."

The principle thus enunciated will find little favor with the more zealous supporters of the C. E. A.'s "redundancy" campaign. In effect, it demands proof of modernity, or the possibility of modernization, in the case of any theatre which is asserted to make a new building superfluous.

Distributors Exceed Quota

Although the 20 per cent British film quota has only recently become obligatory on distributors, official figures issued by the Board of Trade show that in the 12 months ended March 31, the percentage of British films carried by distributors exceeded this figure, amounting to 24.7 per cent against a statutory obligation of 17 per cent. The percentage for features alone was 27.56 per cent. The detailed figures are:

	Features	Footage	Shorts	Footage
British.....	190	1,185,724	123	128,094
Imported...	477	3,115,516	699	890,730

An interesting feature about these figures, not visible on the surface, is that they represent a surplus of British footage in the hands of British distributors who either need no cover for imported films or have handled British films much in excess of such cover. American firms, with the solitary exception of United Artists, carry the statutory British footage and no more.

Woolf Is Named Managing Director of B. & D.; British Distributors Exceed Quota; Manager Organization Fails

Managers' Union Fails

An attempt to form an organization of cinema managers has failed, as several such attempts have failed before—though the original Managers' Union of 1920 or thereabouts distinctly had a kick about it. Of the latest body, the Cinema Managers' Association of Great Britain and Ireland, it is said, in a circular announcing dissolution, that the existence terminated after six months "simply through lack of support," although the cooperation of the National Federation of Professional Workers seemed to imply a respectability reassuring to the type of front of the house man whose ears go all red at the mere whisper of "trade unionism."

Sub-Standard Standards

After protracted controversy among manufacturers of sub-standard apparatus, in which at one stage the British Kinematograph Society was involved, the task of establishing uniformity of system has been remitted to impartial arbitration with a prospect that at last something like real standardization may be reached in the British small gauge field.

The umpire called in by the Sub-Standard Cinematograph Manufacturers' Association is the British Standards Institution, and the terms of reference ask that it shall make recommendations to the International Standards Association with a view to international conformity.

Fox Enlarges British Plans

A 50 per cent increase in the amount allotted by Fox for production at the' Fox British studio at Wembly is announced by Walter J. Hutchinson, setting at rest stories that British production by Fox on its own account would cease when the Schenck plans for big feature production here for Twentieth Century-Fox were shaped. Establishing the unit system, the company will make Ernest Gartside, Leslie Landau and John Barrow each responsible for three pictures.

Official Television to Begin 1936

Major G. V. Tryon, Postmaster General, in an official statement, announces that the government television station at Alexandra Palace in North London will begin test transmissions in six months and that a regular public service will follow "as soon as practicable." The equipment will be supplied by Baird and E.M.I. jointly. Specifications will be published enabling all manufacturers to make standardized receivers.

The statement is important as putting an end to doubts which were beginning to be expressed as to the practicability of the government's plan.

GB Takes Three Houses

Gaumont British has purchased three of the London houses of H. & G. Kinemas, Ltd., headed by the Hyams Brothers and Major Gale. The houses will be operated by Gaumont British Super Cinemas & Cinemas, Ltd., a new company. The ban of the Kinematograph Renters' Society on Gaumont theatre expansion apparently has been defeated by formation of the new company.

Music as a Narrative Element of "The Crusades"

A variety of tonal media is called upon to enrich the story told in DeMille's spectacle

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

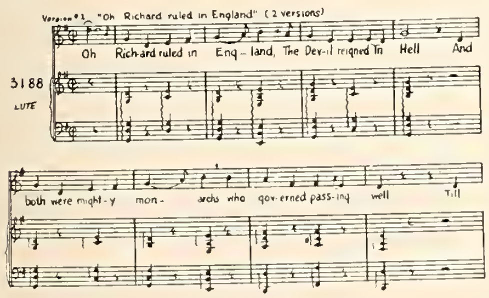
Cecil De Mille paints on huge canvases with a Michelangelan film brush of epic sweep. Action—color—motion—always motion. Sound and fury, signifying something important in the way of screen entertainment. Whatever captious critics may find to cavil at in the formula of the producer of "The Crusades," it has always been evident that the first showman has a keen evaluation of the scope of the screen.

Perhaps no producer has recognized more clearly the true function of music in pictures. In his silent epics, notably "The Ten Commandments" and "The King of Kings," the musical scores were classics of tonal synchronization.

In "The Crusades," a more realistic because a more direct and eclectic screen transcription, Mr. De Mille has commandeered the resources of the tonal media—the quaint minstrelsy of the Medieval troubadour; the martial trumpetry resounding from parapet and battlement in clarion reveille; the battle song of marching Crusaders; the furioso of embattled legions at beleagured city walls and in bloody plains—the siege of Acre and before Jerusalem; the inspiring hymn of rejoicing when the Holy City is thrown open by the Islam conqueror, Saladin, to Christians and Moslems alike.

It is from such musical sources that the producer of "The Crusades" has drawn in merging tone and action and dialogue to make a screen spectacle.

Of such an integral part of the dramatic and spectacular texture of the production is the music, that the casual observer will carry away no isolated impression of the music per se. He will recall that Blondel, troubadour-jester, "kidded" the great Richard of the Lion Heart, and was chased by the swashbuckling monarch at the point of a lance, nearly paying with his life for his flippancy. That this same Blondel had a penchant for "ribbing" Richard in ribald chansons, viz.:



Version #1 "Oh Richard ruled in England" (2 versions)
Oh Rich-ard ruled in Eng-land, The Dev-il reigned in Hell And 3188
LUTE
both were might-y mon-archs who gov-erned pass-ing well Till

BLONDEL'S VERSES NO. 2

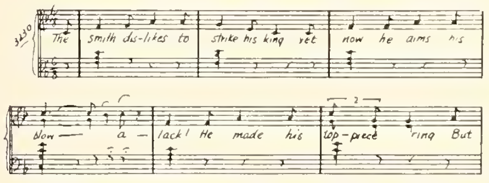
"Oh, Richard ruled in England,
The Devil reigned in Hell,
And both mere mighty monarchs
Who governed passing well.

"Till Richard hied to Hades,
The Devil a visit to pay—
When with his fire and brimstone,
Poor Satan ran away."

And Blondel gets even more fresh in this lyrical gibe:

"The Knights about are falling last and lying dead like mummies,
But Richard is a mighty King when he is fighting dummies."

Then there is the scene where Richard engages in a one-blow contest with the mighty smith, and the irreverent Blondel vocalizes in this ditty:



The smith dis-likes to strike his king yet now he aims his blow — a — lack! He made his top-piece ring But

Copyright 1935 by Paramount Productions

BLONDEL'S VERSES NO. 4

"The smith dislikes to strike his King, yet now he aims his blow;
Alack! He made his top-piece ring, but could not lay him low.
The King prepares to smite the smith. Oh, let the welkin ring!
The stars he sees are not a myth; here comes the Royal Swing!"

But the casual observer will not associate these jocose ditties with the idea that it is a musical exhibit, interpolated to show off some actor's voice (and Alan Hale as Blondel has a splendid voice).

And so, too, in the dramatic spectacular and battle scenes. The "March of the Crusades" is effective and inspiring because it is so natural and fitting. It is a part of the picture. Marching soldiers sing, and marching Crusaders, inflamed with a holy zeal, sing in full-throated harmony:

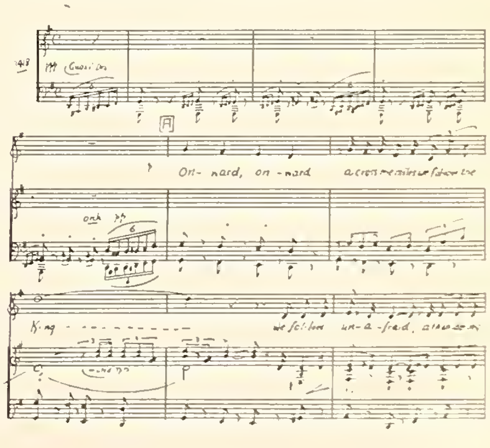
"Onward, onward across the miles we follow the King.
We follow unafraid a thundering cavalcade upon a high Crusade."

In the siege of Acre—a battle spectacle that reveals the producer at his realistic peak, above the din of raging conflict, with flaming arrows, torches and fireballs lighting up the maelstrom of carnage, with boiling oil pouring from vats upon the Christians scaling the walls, the allegro furioso of the music shrills like a veritable bedlam of demons above the cries of the combatants—a paean of devilish incantation over the unbridled blood-lust of humans wreaking their own destruction.

In plain fact, Mr. De Mille has followed and amplified the best traditions of the stage and the old silent screen in the music of "The Crusades." He has, seemingly, said in effect: Let us have action and drama and spectacle—full-panoplied and cast in epic proportions, but always moving. Let us reinforce this spectacle with the sound and fury and tonal accoutrements that are fitting to such an epic drama. Let the music point the narrative where there is point to the musical narrative. Let it amplify and interpret the action and drama and spectacle—and in so doing, sublimate into a more inspiring vehicle this epic of Medieval times. But, never let the music obtrude upon or halt the action. Let it give wing to visual and audial media. The play's the thing! The conflict of human beliefs, of human ambitions, of human passions. Let it be revealed with all the resources of the sound screen—unfettered and unlimited. Let us have full-bodied motion picture drama spectacle.

In this enterprise, Mr. De Mille has achieved a powerful and moving and entertaining screen production, in which music plays an integral and important function.

The original music is accredited to Rudolph Kopp, with lyrics by Harold Lamb. The "Song of the Crusades" is by Messrs. Whiting, Robin and Kopp, with special choral lyrics by Jeanie MacPherson. The orchestra was under the direction of Irving Talbot.



On-ward, on-ward a-cross the miles we fol-low the King — we fol-low un-a-fraid, a thun-der-ing

AUSTRALIAN EXHIBITORS AGITATING FOR CONTRACT LIKE NEW ZEALAND'S

Move Started in New South Wales with Plea for 25 Per Cent Rejection Right; Buying Status Rapidly Changing

by CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

Australian exhibitors have taken the cue from their New Zealand contemporaries and are agitating for adoption of a uniform contract similar to that which shortly will come into operation in the Dominion.

The move started in New South Wales, where the exhibitors' association advised exhibitor organizations in other States to urge their local governments to legislate for a standard agreement incorporating a 25 per cent rejection right. In New Zealand, the consensus among exhibitors is that the new contract gives the distributor some legal obligation under his agreement, whereas the old form tied down exhibitors almost on every count and gave the distributor practically complete freedom to do whatever suited him.

Though it may take time, Australian exhibitors stand a fair chance of obtaining a uniform agreement, especially if it achieves the desired effect in New Zealand—namely, to bring about amicable trading relationships between the exhibition and distribution factions, and to overcome the disadvantages the exhibition may suffer arising out of block booking.

Buying Situation Changing

The buying situation will take on a slightly changed aspect in this market when the selling season opens later in the year. General Theatres Corporation, which had a buying arrangement with Fullers Theatres, has given the formal six months notice to terminate the contract. Unless it is renewed in the meantime, it will terminate on December 31. Under the terms of the contract, the Corporation bought pictures for all Fullers Theatres, and Fullers shared in the pooled profits of certain theatres in Melbourne and West Australia. Either side was at liberty to bring the arrangement to an end by giving six months notice of its intention to do so. Both parties to the agreement say that the association has been of a harmonious nature, and A. Ben Fuller for Fullers Theatres said that negotiations were proceeding for a fresh agreement.

MPDA Contact Men

To further the goodwill and general welfare of the industry, Percy Hunter has been appointed "contact man" by the Motion Picture Distributors Association, although he has had no previous film experience. Mr. Hunter's ability as an organizer is well known. Several years ago he organized the NSW Tourist Bureau for the State Government, and in 1933 he was sent to London to organize the NSW Immigration Department. The announcement of his appointment was made by Sir Victor Wilson, whose contract as president of the MPDA expires in June next year.

Giveaways Strong

Despite representative conferences and a considerable amount of palaver, the Exhibitors' Association here seems powerless to stem the giveaway epidemic and it continues as strongly as ever. On behalf of Hoyts, Charles E. Munro has told independents quite plainly that Hoyts will stop the practice if competitive theatres do the same; but at the moment independents say box-office returns are increased and they don't feel disposed to risk a fall-off when the giveaways disappear.

Seek Building Restriction

Independents in New South Wales are making a bold bid for introduction of licensing laws similar to those in force in New Zealand, where the wholesale building of theatres in overseated areas is politically controlled. The executive committee of the association has gone surety for a preliminary contribution to a fighting fund of £1,000 and the trustees of the fund will undertake a tour of the state.

Bona fide independents have been actively campaigning for some time against the machinations of the go-getters who, it is alleged, are threatening to find backing for new theatre ventures in opposition to established exhibitors unless the exhibitors singled out for the allegedly intimidatory tactics are prepared to sign contracts at the go-getters' terms. Unfair selling methods of this description were exposed at the film inquiry last year and several exhibitors alleged that they have been renewed in recent months.

Cite Property Devaluation

Crystallizing their arguments for theatre licensing laws, exhibitors show by statistics that Australia is already one of the most heavily seated countries in the world and that immediately an established suburban or country exhibitor is faced with opposition the value of his theatre is automatically reduced by half. In other words, the goodwill he has built up over a number of years is practically wrecked, it is asserted.

Officials of the association declare that it is not their intention to set up monopolies or crowd out opposition; that they merely seek to prevent the erection of new theatres in territories where a new house would make the profitable trading of either business an impossibility.

Cancels Film After Cuts

George Kraska, manager of the Fine Arts theatre, Boston, has canceled the film, "The Girl in the Case," which was scheduled for his theatre. The picture suffered more cuts by the censor of the Department of Public Safety than any film in recent months.

Chesterfield and Invincible Set 12

Chesterfield and Invincible will produce 12 features for the new season, instead of 18, as last season, with distribution continuing through First Division for another year, the company announced last week.

George R. Batcheller, president of Chesterfield, and Maury M. Cohen, head of Invincible, each will produce six for the new schedule, working together as in the past. The companies have indicated that their budgets will be "materially increased," and the aim of the companies will be fewer and better pictures.

Under the arrangement completed between Pathe Film Corporation and First Division, First Division will handle New England distribution for Chesterfield and Invincible, in addition to New York, Albany, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Washington, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Louisville, Charlotte, New Orleans, Atlanta and Pittsburgh. Mr. Batcheller and Mr. Cohen, while in New York last week, closed deals for stage plays and stories for the new season. Their final 1934-35 picture will go into work shortly.

Local 306 Scale Negotiations Deadlocked

Negotiations on a new scale for Local 306 operators were deadlocked Wednesday when the union rejected the circuits' offer of $1.60 an hour top for booth men now receiving $2.12½, and the union made a counter demand for a $2 an hour minimum.

The operators also turned down the circuits' request for a 10-year contract instead of the two-year deal favored by the union. The proposals were unanimously rejected by the local's executive board, which was to have submitted them to the 1,800 members of Local 306 at a meeting at midnight Wednesday.

Circuit representatives were to meet again with the union on Thursday, but the situation was subject to change.

Harry Brandt, president of the ITOA, filed suits seeking an aggregate of $500,000 in damages from Local 306. Mr. Brandt's theatres in the Times Square district have been the center of disturbances involving Local 306 and Allied men.

Distributors Study Planned Italian Tax

Heads of foreign departments in New York are studying the proposed new levies on foreign trade which are being considered by officials of the Italian government. It is understood the new tax would impose a levy of 10 per cent on gross sales in Italy by foreign concerns, with a minimum tax of 15,000 lira, which would replace the present flat 25,000 lira tax on remittances to foreign companies by their Italian agents.

No Price Drops In Kansas Area

Admissions in the western Missouri and Kansas territory have not been raised, according to definite reports from exchange managers, exhibitors and circuit operators. They indicate further that there is little possibility at the present time that admission prices in the Kansas City area will be raised in the near future. There has been little change in the past eight months, in Kansas City or in the surrounding territory, although the increased use of premiums and drawing methods may be taken as indicating somewhat lower prices.

First-run managers have had no word of increased admissions for this fall, though this has been considered a possible development. Protection and the use of giveaways by suburbans this fall will probably determine such a move.

Key cities like Kansas City, Wichita and Topeka get 40 cents top for outstanding pictures. Semi-key cities get 35 cents, while smaller towns are content with a 25-cent top, 15 cents, and 10 cents for family nights. This is the observation of Gus Diamond, office manager for Warner Brothers.

Clarence A. Schultz, Commonwealth Theatre Enterprises, Inc., which operates 21 theatres in Missouri, Kansas and Iowa, asserts there are none of his situations in which prices have been raised, and he knows of no others in the area where this is true.

W. I. Humston, Consolidated Film Distributors, said: "There aren't any increases in admission prices in the territory so far as I know. With premiums and so on actually admissions can be said to have decreased."

Musicians' Union Restrained

A temporary injunction was issued this week in chancery court, Paterson, N. J., restraining the American Federation of Musicians from revoking the charter of the Paterson local, No. 248. The local was allegedly dropped by the union recently for cutting the pay of Alfred Troyano, secretary, from $2,600 to $350 per year.

"HONOR SYSTEM" SHOWS SPREADING IN MIDWEST

88 Per Cent of Patrons Respond to Method Whereby They Pay Only If They Like Films

by MARTIN J. CHICOINE
Omaha Correspondent

Eighty-eight per cent of the theatregoing public proved honest in an experiment conducted by Omaha theatres whereby patrons were admitted free and placed on their honor to pay the regular admission on a pay-as-you-leave-if-you-like-the-picture arrangement.

The stunt was really intended as an exploitation twist and its uniqueness in theatre merchandising resulted in considerable word-of-mouth advertising and no little attention in the press.

Evert R. Cummings, district manager for Tri-States theatres at Omaha, called in his staff for a conference. It was to be a concentrated huddle on a plan to sell Fox's "Ginger." Charles Schlaifer, advertising manager for the Omaha houses, and Bill Miskell, manager of the Orpheum where "Ginger" was slated to appear in a week, had sat in the screening room with Mr. Cummings and studied the picture.

It was a good show, they decided, but how to sell it was the question. A preview on a hot summer night was rather a long shot considering the terrific night competition offered amusement patrons in these parts, what with palatial outdoor night clubs, midget auto races and other attractive distractions. But to get interest aroused in the picture with that unbeatable advertising medium—word-of-mouth—it would have to be a preview, but an unusual preview.

And it was thus the conference fumbled for ideas until Mr. Cummings hit upon the "honor system" preview. And it was Mr. Schlaifer who hit upon the ad to sell the "honor system." It remained for Mr. Miskell to put it into operation at the theatre.

A Darkened Box Office

The "honor system" preview is simply a midnight performance at which the patrons walk in past a darkened box office window, cheerfully greeted by the doorman, and are cordially led to their seats by ushers.

The patrons on leaving the theatre find the usual liberal number of exits roped off. In fact, there is only one lane that seems to lead toward an exit. Not only does this lone roped-off lane lead to the exit, but it leads the patrons in closest proximity possible to a now fully lighted box office cage. Inside sits a cashier waiting to take the patrons' money—just as in the cash-and-carry store. A sign generously states that the patron does not have to pay if he did not enjoy the show. But if he liked it, won't he show his appreciation by buying his ticket before he leaves the theatre?

Just beyond the cashier's cage, he sees a photographer ducking beneath his dark cloth behind the camera. The thing is pointed right at him as he is abreast the cashier. What is there left to do but admit the show was great by laying the ticket money within reach of the fingers of the cashier?

Mr. Schlaifer attracted the attention of jaded summer customers to the pay-as-you-leave preview with a series of clever ads. They featured the catch-line, "Merry Christmas," and had a cut of Santa Claus, who (in the copy) explained it wasn't the heat but just enthusiasm for "Ginger." Then pay-as-you-leave was explained.

Great Majority Paid

Exactly 814 patrons filed past the doorman for the midnight performance. The lobby was filled with "Merry Christmas" greetings. At about 1:45 in the morning the crowd began to come by the box office, as they left the auditorium. A few of the first to leave evidently forgot the rules and walked out without seeing the sign or cashier's window. But only a few. The rest began paying. The psychological effect of those ahead paying soon had those waiting digging for change or pulling out wallets. As at most previews, a large part of the crowd is made up of young couples.

The sum total of the 814 who paid was 765, or about seven-eighths of the audience. Admission was 40 cents or a total gross of $306 for one performance which was given originally for advertising purposes with no thought of profit. In this case, both were achieved—"Ginger" did a fine business the next week.

Mr. Cummings said he will apply the same scheme to other pictures he considers difficult to sell.

Idea Catches On

The idea caught on with other theatres of the Tri-States circuit. Don Allen, manager of the Des Moines at Des Moines; Lloyd Davidson of the Capitol at Sioux City; Eddie Forrester of the Capitol at Grand Island, Neb.; Don Fuller of the Rivoli at Hastings, Neb.; Joe Kinsky, manager of the Tri-Cities group (Davenport, Moline and Rock Island), all used the "Merry Christmas" ad and the pay-as-you-leave plan with success.

It swept on to other midwest circuits, notably the Central States theatres, the Minnesota Amusement company, and others.

A highlight of the stunt was the reaction in newspapers, it being good for space in newspapers in every city where it was tried.

The cameraman in the lobby with the lens aimed at the box office window was an accidental thought. He had been engaged for only a couple of shots of the stunt, but when the eyes of the exiting customers watched him expectantly, it was decided to leave him poised there supposedly clicking the shutter.

GROSSES INDICATE THAT PUBLIC ACCEPTS COLOR

"Becky Sharp," first full length feature in the new three-color-component Technicolor, grossed consistently higher than the average for nine weeks in 17 of the key theatres it was exhibited first-run, a checkup of "Theatre Receipts" reports, Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of key city grosses, shows.

Therein, partially at least, lies the answer to the question of the public's reaction to the new color medium. At the height of expectancy just prior to the film's release, the consensus of the industry was "as 'Becky Sharp' goes, so goes color." Despite the fact that the Pioneer-Radio picture was pre-released in a number of important centers during the hot weather, it drew larger grosses in those situations than did any other picture exhibited in from six to eight weeks previously.

Extraordinary interest in the industry and on the part of the public was aroused in the picture and in the color process prior to "Becky Sharp's" premiere at the Radio City Music Hall in New York June 13. A carefully devised campaign pre-sold the film to the theatregoing public.

Two Weeks at Music Hall

The picture played two successful weeks at the Music Hall. Within a week or so after its New York opening, it opened at the larger key city situations. It played three weeks at the Palace theatre, Chicago, and two weeks at the following: Memorial, Boston; Fox, Detroit; Orpheum, New Orleans; Golden Gate, San Francisco; Hippodrome, Baltimore; Keith's, Washington; RKO Hillstreet, Los Angeles, and Hollywood, Hollywood. A two-week run in Cleveland was divided between the Hippodrome and the Allen.

The grosses reported by Motion Picture Herald's correspondents for 17 key city runs did not exceed the record one-week totals of the theatres for the period from January, 1934, to date, but none of the other pictures shown in the nine-week period from which the average was struck approximated that record. In more than one-third of the theatres studied, "Becky Sharp" drew a larger figure than did any other picture exhibited at the theatre in those nine weeks, the period in each instance including from six to eight weeks previous to the Technicolor production's appearance at the house.

Following is a comparison of the "Becky Sharp" one-week or first-week gross with the nine weeks average, as well as the maximum intake, in representative theatres in key cities:

Boston: Keith's Memorial: "Becky Sharp," $20,000; nine weeks average, $12,055; high, $30,000.

Buffalo: Buffalo: $16,400; nine weeks average, $13,080; high, $26,000.

Chicago: Palace: $26.000; nine weeks average, $17,400; high, $30,000.

Cleveland: Allen: $4,100; nine weeks average, $3,820; high, $7,200.

Cleveland: Hippodrome: $10,300; nine weeks average, $10,066; high, $23,000.

Denver:: Orpheum: $7,000; nine weeks average, $6,300; high, $19.500.

Hollywood: Warner Bros.' Hollywood: $12,250; nine weeks average, $10,305; high, $25,000.

Indianapolis: Circle: $7,500; nine weeks average, $4,755; high, $8,500.

Kansas City: Mainstreet: $9,000; nine weeks average, $9,233; high, $23,000.

Los Angeles: RKO Hillstreet: $12,000; nine weeks average, $10,533; high, $16,000.

Minneapolis: RKO Orpheum: $7,000; nine weeks average, $6,266; high, $7,000.

New York: Music Hall: $95,000; nine weeks average, $68,630; high, $110,000.

New York: Palace: $8,000; nine weeks average, $8,944; high, $16,200.

Oklahoma City: Criterion: $5,000; nine weeks average, $4,700; high, $9,000.

Omaha: Brandeis: $5,000; nine weeks average, $4,838; high, $9,100.

Philadelphia: Boyd: $12,000; nine weeks average, $10,722; high, $30,000.

San Francisco: Golden Gate: $16,500; nine weeks average, $13,400; high, $23,000.

At the Palace, Chicago, the second week's total was $19,000, below the first seven days by $7,000, and the third week grossed $14,000. At New York's Music Hall, the second week returned $67,750, against the first week's $95,000. At the Golden Gate in San Francisco, the three-color feature proved its drawing power with a gross of $11,500 in a second week, following a $16,500 first week. In Boston, however, the second week of the run at Keith's Memorial, after an initial $20,000, dropped to $8,500.

The most recent big-city opening of "Becky Sharp" took place at the Stanley, Pittsburgh, where the house record was broken, according to RKO.

Reports furnished by RKO show how "Becky Sharp" performed in smaller situations at the peak of the summer heat. A digest of reports from RKO exchanges in the field follows:

Reports from the Field

"Charlestown, W. Va., reports midwinter business. San Bernardino, Calif., where the manager says the temperature seldom falls below 100 at this season, reports 'excellent' returns. The picture went into the Orpheum. Portland, Ore., for an indefinite run. At the Newport, Norfolk, Va., and the Byrd, Richmond, Va., 'Becky Sharp' successfully fought both the heat and threats of closing because of the spread of infantile paralysis.

"The Fox theatre at Oakland, Calif., did 'the best summer week in its history' with 'Becky Sharp.' Spokane, Wash., Battle Creek, Mich., and Terre Haute, Ind., are other cities where the film successfully withstood the raging thermometer."

The introduction of the perfected Technicolor process drew widespread editorial comment throughout the country. Of 133 reviews in leading newspapers in 41 key cities, not a single reviewer voiced opposition to color on the screen, according to a survey of the newspaper reviews completed by Pioneer Pictures, Inc., which reports: "One hundred and seventeen went on record as predicting color as the next step in motion picture development, the remainder preferring to await further efforts before committing themselves."

All key city runs of the picture were accompanied by augmented publicity, exploitation and advertising campaigns.

Kenneth MacGowan, the producer who was borrowed from RKO to make "Becky Sharp" for Pioneer, believes the time is not far off when colors will predominate on the screen.

"Color, today, seems the logical salvation," he said recently. "I believe that after 'Becky Sharp' no picture can ever again stand out as an important vehicle unless it is made entirely in color. By this I do not mean to imply that color films will entirely supplant black-and-white pictures. There will always be a certain number of these, just as there will always be a certain number of black-and-white illustrations by comparison with color illustrations. There is definitely a place for both, because, first, black-and-white will always retain a certain beauty of its own. The second reason is that a certain number of program pictures will of necessity be made without color. Ultimately, however, these will be far in the minority."

Returning recently from London, Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, head of Technicolor, reported: "The immediate success of 'Becky Sharp' has further stimulated the acceptance of color by the English film industry and the public." He said the film was "most enthusiastically" received at its London premiere at the new Gallery theatre.

Joseph M. Schenck Heads Reorganized Fox Metropolitan

Reorganization of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses was being completed this week, subject to final confirmation by Judge Julian W. Mack in federal court upon his return from Europe next month. The officers of the new company, to be known as Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., are slated as: Joseph M. Schenck, president and chairman of the board; William P. Philips, vice-president and treasurer; Milton C. Weisman, vice-president and secretary.

Representing the bondholders' committee on the nine-member board of the new company are Morton C. Bogue, counsel for the committee; Charlton B. Hibbard, a former vice-president of the Guaranty Trust Company, and L. B. Soper, an attorney associated with Mr. Bogue's firm. The latter's election is regarded as temporary pending the selection of a permanent member.

Other directors are Mr. Schenck, Mr. Philips, Herbert Bayard Swope, Mr. Weisman, William Rhinelander Stewart and Samuel S. Allan.

The reorganization plan permits Mr. Schenck to exercise an option for 50 per cent of the stock in event Fox Theatres Corporation fails to purchase the stock. A protective committee of Fox Theatres stockholders is soliciting powers of attorney from stockholders to exercise the company's prior option. RKO, which is represented on the board through Mr. Swope, is permitted to acquire a 20 per cent stock interest, in event Fox Theatres creditors do not authorize purchase.

The order of Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey, who is acting in the absence of Judge Mack, authorizing the transfer of assets to Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., virtually completes the reorganization of the company, which entered receivership four years ago. The new parent company has 84 theatres under operation by Randforce and Skouras Theatres in New York.

Under the terms of reorganization, Louis Frisch and Sam Rinzler of Randforce and George Skouras get 10-year contracts.

The directors were to meet on Thursday to elect the slate of officers. This action and any others to be taken by the new directors is conditioned on approval by Judge Mack. Judge Caffey allowed $60,000 expenses to the bondholders' committee, which is guaranteed by the new company in a $500,000 administration expense fund.

Leases on the National, Tremont and Brooklyn theatres, all in New York, have been relinquished by Fox Met to the owners. The Lynbrook and Tuxedo theatres have consented to a reduction in rent.

Githens Takes Charge Of Newsreel Theatres

W. French Githens, managing editor of Pathe News, this week was given a leave of absence to take active charge of promotion and expansion of the Newsreel Theatres, Inc., operators of the Embassy Newsreel theatre on Broadway and the Newark Newsreel theatre in Newark.

PROTESTS WIN CENSOR MODERATION IN CHINA

American Companies Gain Point as Ruling on Old Censored Film Material Is Rescinded

by J. E. KOEHLER
Shanghai Correspondent

The protests of the American distributors in China against the 100 per cent increase in censor fees and retroactive legislation have had one favorable effect. The rule requiring all old censored matter to carry the license certificate on film has been rescinded with respect to material censored before the date of the rule, December 7, 1934. In this the principle of retroactive legislation was at stake and it is an important victory in a country where rules are often made without consideration of the practical application.

There was some talk of not censoring films at all in Nanking, since legally, in the International Settlement and French Concessions no license by the Chinese government is needed when films are shown in purely foreign owned theatres which are under extra-territorial law. In practice, however, it was not considered advisable to ignore the Chinese National censorship, since reprisals can take place that might prove embarrassing to both sides in the end.

Since no Chinese owned publication of any kind is permitted to print advertising of films not passed by the Nanking censors, and foreign papers carrying such advertising matter might be barred from the mails, besides a host of other annoying restrictions, the mere matter of the legality of fines placed on distributors or theatres is beside the question of goodwill. Further, extreme pressure can be brought to bear upon a Chinese audience which would brave the anger of the government and attend a foreign owned theatre showing uncensored films.

Fees Out of Proportion

Censorship fees for films are all out of proportion to the censorship fees levied on books and the like, and in fact all out of proportion to income derived from showings, when compared with other countries.

There are only about 165 theatres in China, Hongkong and Macao that are served by American distributors and it is safe to say that not over 40 per cent of these are so located that films are not delayed in transportation over 50 per cent of the time. This includes the British colony of Hongkong and the Portuguese colony of Macao, as Manchuria is almost entirely served by Japanese offices.

Little Chance of Reduction

While the censorship fees question and the matter of fines which heretofore have been levied on the American distributor for violations is still under consideration, it is believed that little can be done in the matter of fee reduction. As to fines, it has been the practice of the Central Censorship Committee at Nanking to fine an American distributor for violations committed by a Chinese owned theatre under the idea that by forcing the distributor to pay the fine with the threat to cease passing his films at Nanking, such fines were easily collectable. It is believed that this practice has been stopped, and that hereafter American distributors will not be subject to such coercive methods.

The entire struggle for better censorship conditions has been made by the American film distributors in China, but moral cooperation has been had from other distributors who come under the extraterritorial law. The now strongly organized Film Board of Trade (China) has been active in striving for a satisfactory solution of the problem and has been in constant communication with the home offices.

Among the hot weather pictures that have made good is Warner's "G-Men" and in the big air-conditioned Grand in Shanghai, made a record week run with a recall. RKO Radio's "Roberta" made a fine 11-day run in warm weather at the air-conditioned Nanking theatre. Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers draw a Chinese crowd. "Public Hero No. 1" (MGM) has just opened at the Nanking to full houses.

Good action serials are in demand, and though they are not acceptable by the large first run theatres in foreign settlements, in the long run they get more bookings in the smaller strictly Chinese theatres.

Open Air Theatre

There is a large crop of open air lawn cinemas this year. It is hard to understand after the disastrous failures of the past four years in that line. None of them is first run, as the big distributors are disinclined to injure the big first run houses, with heavy investments in cooling plants.

The Nanking, Metropol and Rialto theatres of Shanghai are now in one group and American ownership. The new company is the Shanghai Amusements Company Fed. Inc., U. S. A., with N. Allman as president and T. J. Holt as general manager. Mr. Allman is an American legal light in Shanghai and Mr. Holt is one of China's best known and experienced theatre operators.

Building conditions in Peiping and Tientsin are somewhat delayed owing to the recent uncertainty of the Japanese activity in those parts. The new Capitol is still under construction at Peiping, but the house projected for Tientsin is still on paper. Money is tight here in Shanghai and a new Chinese owned house which was to open in the fall is now looking for an operator to handle it.

Distributors are balking against the proposed reduction in first-run admission prices in Hongkong. Practice seems to point that there is nothing to be gained by reductions.

Refuse to Pay Fees

Distributors in Canton are refusing to pay the censorship fee which is being levied by the Cantonese local government, under the plea that Canton is China and the Nanking license is sufficient. Nanking so far refuses to comment, since Canton, though geographically China, is politically another question, and as yet the Cantonese authorities have not officially taken notice of any Nanking Censorship License.

The new government-subsidized studio at Nanking opened with considerable ceremony. Since it is mainly intended for propaganda films for Chinese consumption competition from this source is still not worrisome. However, if it is proposed to make the theatres show such films together with any foreign film and force the theatre to pay a tax for the use of the propaganda film, the theatre is likely to deduct such tax from the top and then there will be trouble.

AUSTRIA'S PRESIDENT SAYS FILMS MUST EXCEL AS ART

In other lands the motion picture is considerably more on the official and governmetal mind than it is in the United States, where it is governmentally more appreciated as a source of tax revenues. Russia, France, Germany and Great Britain, for instance, all give frequent evidence in various fashions of their awareness of the screen.

Special interest attaches to a carefully considered, and broader, viewpoint in a recent official utterance from Wilhelm Miklas, president of Austria, who in discussing the screen said:

When in the summer of 1934 an international assembly on motion picture matters was held in the capital Vienna, in my capacity as President of Austria I addressed the guests, who attended this assembly in great numbers, among them especially Americans, industrialists and merchants, artists and scientists, engineers and film actors, on the artistic and ethic significance of the modern motion picture, and my speech was warmly received. Among other things I said the following:

"The invention of the motion picture, and its recent development to the sound motion picture, has been of the greatest importance for the whole world. In certain respects it has brought about a spiritual transformation that can only be compared to the effects of the greatest inventions of bygone centuries. A prominent Austrian lately even stated that celluloid has been victorious over the printer's ink. Thus, according to him, the effects of the motion picture and of the sound motion picture rank higher than the invention of printing.

"This immense importance of the entire motion picture system, the film technique and film production, its scientific, artistic, educational and commercial exploitation, commands a high sense of responsibility of all those who participate in the creation of the motion picture. I do not want to go into the comparatively small number of film productions which exclusively are destined for scientific research work, nor do I speak of the motion picture as mere conveyance of general news to the public. I am referring to the subjects of such motion pictures as are destined to instruct and educate the public at large. It all depends on what is being shown to the audience in the motion picture. Each of these exhibitions is to be judged from the point of view of the enlightenment of the population according to the strict rulings of genuine work in the way of education of the masses.

"Consequently, even though the pictures that are to be displayed before the masses be perfect in technical respect, they must not violate conceptions sacred to mankind, but shall be dedicated to the truth, to the good and the beautiful, and must avoid all sordidness and trash; they shall be without objection from a scientific and artistic, but also from the human and ethical point of view.

"The motion picture is the mediator of knowledge and is at the same time an art of a special kind. The moving picture is nothing less than performed art, displayed on the screen, often combined with the melody of human language and with music.

"Art, however, should always be noble and free, that is, ethically unobjectionable. She shall not root up the depth of mankind, nor stir up the impure and vulgar, ignominy and crime. The art is destined to bring joy into the life of the human being, after the day's toil, and to liberate, uplift and ennoble him. This also applies to the motion picture. If all film producers and creators will set to work, bearing all this in mind, they are sure to render a valuable service to mankind."

It was a great satisfaction for me to learn that my words not only have met with approval in Austria, but also especially in the United States of America, the very territory which harbors the biggest and most extensive film production of the world. This to me is a renewed confirmation of the significant cultural relations, that connect this very center of Europe, this country of Austria with its old culture, with the great and noble people of America. May this mutual understanding, this intellectual pact between Austria and America prove beneficial to the whole world and further the peaceful prosperity.

National Screen Library Started

With the passage of Public Law No. 432 at Washington, there has actually and officially come into being a portion of the National Archives of the United States, located in the capital, which will be devoted exclusively to the collection and maintenance for use by students and the like of representative motion picture material.

Section seven of the act, which makes possible the film library, reads as follows: "The National Archives also may accept, store and preserve motion picture films and sound recordings pertaining to and illustrative of historical activities of the United States, and in connection therewith maintain a projecting room for showing such films and reproducing such sound recordings for historical purposes and study."

The projection room is a small theatre, seating 225, which is equipped in the most modern fashion. It will not be open to the public, but is designed for the use of accredited students. The archives section is believed to be the most extensive effort by any country to provide for the central collection and storing of historical materials through the medium of the motion picture.

Captain John G. Bradley is in charge of the library. Under his supervision elaborate preparations have been made for the preservation of film.

Aylesworth to Attend Radio Studio Opening

Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of National Broadcasting Company leaves for the coast next month to attend the opening of the new broadcasting studio which is being built by Herbert J. Yates in Hollywood. The studio will be built along the same lines as the Radio City setup with two theatres, one seating 600 and the other 400. With the completion of the Coast studio Aylesworth feels that radio and motion picture forces will be brought to a closer understanding.

RCA is spending $1,000,000 for experimental purposes in television during the next year, Mr. Aylesworth said. "I believe television will help the film industry. This entertainment is designed for the home and will not keep people away from the theatre any more than radio."

181 Features Approved On Coast Since May 8

The Hollywood branch of the Production Code Administration, which is headed by Joseph I. Breen, issued certificates of approval on 181 features and 140 short subjects from May 8 to August 20. Since the establishment of the stronger supervision on July 15, 1934, the administration has approved 608 features and 499 short subjects.

Italy Sponsors "Columbus"

The Italian Government has given a subsidy of $500,000 for a film, "Columbus" to be directed by Carmine Gallone in French, English and German. United Artists will distribute the picture, which it is said will cost more than $1,000,000.

As Maxwell Sees Production Code

Clarifying his position with reference to the American Production Code and the New York office facilities for the examination of scripts and pictures, requested by the Film Producers Group of the Federation of British Industry, John Maxwell, chairman of Associated British Pictures Corp., Ltd., has supplied to MOTION PICTURE HERALD the following summary of prior assertions of his views:

"1. I did not know what other British producers would do, but my own company had never submitted scripts to the British film censor, although invited to do so. As a matter of principle we did not regard it as a wise thing to do. We considered it extremely difficult for a censor to visualize a finished picture from a script—so much depends on the director's treatment. A scene may read offensively in a script, yet turn out quite innocuous in the finished picture, and conversely a scene that appears innocent enough in the script may turn out highly offensive in the finished picture, all according to the way such scenes are translated to the screen.

"2. The proper course was for a censorial authority to lay down its rules and regulations fully, clearly and explicitly, and it was then the producer's job to produce his picture to conform to these rules, having in view that he would have to pay the penalty if he did not conform.

"3. The exigencies of production rarely allowed enough time for the delay involved in submitting scripts in advance of production and getting them approved.

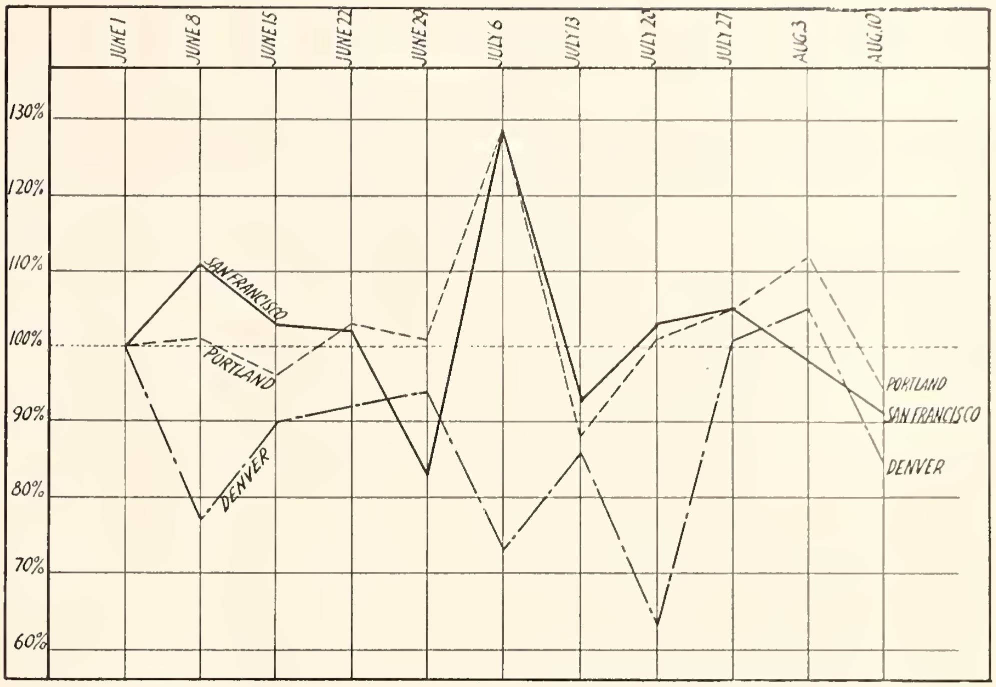
"4. That the fundamental basis of our production policy was to make our pictures so that they would pass the British Film Censor—the most narrow-minded and rigidly Puritanical in the world. That I had never any fear that when our picture had passed the British censor, it would fail to pass any other censor anywhere on grounds of morality. Any American distributor in London will bear this out—pictures that have passed in America have been in some cases completely rejected, and in others cut to be almost unrecognizable by the British censor.

"In making these remarks I had in mind a recent actual experience. 'A' company submitted a script to the British censor, who said he could not pass it. 'A' company thereupon dropped the script, which was subsequently acquired by 'B' company, who made it without reference to the censor. When finished the picture was passed by the censor, practically without a cut. 'A' company complained bitterly that the censor's advance ruling had deprived them of a valuable piece of property—which, as it happened, it was."

While visiting in New York last June Mr. Maxwell was quoted as saying that British producers would not use the facilities for the examination of scripts and pictures which had been set up in the New York office of the MPPDA in accordance with the request of the British producers' association.

Edith Roberts Dies

Edith Roberts, 36, film actress of the silent screen, died at Hollywood Hospital last week after giving birth to a son.



The above chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, indicates the trend in each of three Western cities during the eleven weeks period from June 1 to August 10, 1935. In each the gross for the first week of this period is taken as 100%.

Standards Ignored In Code Survey

Statistics compiled by the NRA revealed that approximately 70 examples of abandonments of former code standards in amusement industries occurred during the month of July. The statistics were compiled in order to show the effect of invalidation of the code system on American business.

The Administration disclosed that superficial investigation showed minorities in the film and other amusement lines were forcing the level of competition downward during July. Departures from code practices was noted in 17 states. Congress is expected to conduct studies of possible legislation before reassembling in January.

The compilation listed 21 separate instances of "price cutting" in the amusement field, revealing the rapid spread of bank night. Nebraska was charged with 17 of this number. There were 17 reports of increased hours, eight of wage cuts and 11 of combined hour increases and pay reductions.

The survey revealed, however, that the amusement industry group had the smallest number of departures from code standards during July.

Vacates Order Barring Pathe Reorganization

Reorganization of Pathe again got underway this week with the vacating of the stay which had been granted a stockholder pending hearings on the constitutionality of the law under which the reorganization plans had been approved. Lifting of the ban, which had been obtained by Ben Hilbert, was ordered by Judge Martin of the appellate division of the New York supreme court. The appeal on the constitutionality issue will be heard October 4 in the appellate division.

Thomas Edison Jr., Dead at Age of 59

Thomas A. Edison, Jr., son of the late inventor, died late last week at the Hotel Kimball, Springfield, Mass. He was 59 years old, eldest son of the inventor, and in charge of the research engineering department of Thomas A. Edison, Inc.

Mr. Edison, accompanied by William Hildebrand, vice-president of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., was motoring back to East Orange, N. J., from the summer home of Mr. Edison's half-brother, Charles Edison, at Lake Sunapee, N. H. He was stricken at Springfield, and died of heart disease.

Mr. Edison was born in Menlo Park, N. J., while Mr. Edison was experimenting on the telegraph. He was generally regarded as the inventor's favorite child. After graduation from school, Mr. Edison joined his father in experimental work at the laboratory. For several years he had his own laboratories in Burlington, N. J., centering his experiments for some time on the internal combustion engine. Patents for several improvements on this type of engine are in his name. In 1918 he returned to his father's laboratory, where he became head of the research engineering department.

STATE AID BEING URGED FOR MEXICO INDUSTRY

National Economy Ministry in Report After Study Advises Cinematographic Institute

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

The red meat of substantial state aid of which the Mexican film industry has long dreamed, is soon to be served. After a long and exhaustive examination of all phases of the industry in this country, including imports and exhibition of foreign pictures, that it made under orders of the federal government, the ministry of national economy has recommended that the time has arrived for the state to come to the rescue of the struggling national cinematographic industry. Owing to economic conditions, the production of Mexican pictures is not what it should be because of inadequate financing, the ministry ascertained.

Recommendation has been made to the ministry of finance that no time should be lost in establishing the National Institute of the Cinematographic Industry if Mexico intends to remain on the world film map. This Institute is to be provided with a fund of 2,000,000 pesos (approximately $560,000, U. S.) and it is to be an autonomous federal government department, functioning on its own. Its officers and board of directors are to be representatives of all national government departments and employers and employees of the Mexican industry. The Institute will assure a steady production of better pictures, which will be to Mexico's advantage, the economy ministry contends.

The Institute will have exclusive charge of orientating, stimulating and controlling the national motion picture industry in all its phases, from production to exhibition. Exhibition of worthwhile home made pictures is to be as profuse as possible not only for cash benefits but to further the culture of the working classes. Exports of native pictures are to be stimulated and efforts will be made to bring about the wider exhibition of Mexican pictures in foreign lands. The organization of Mexican cinematographic companies will be encouraged and assisted. The Institute will have charge of regulating imports of foreign pictures and inspecting and revising such productions.

Suggests Tax Reduction

The economy ministry's report recommends that all made in Mexico pictures that the Institute considers to be up to its quality standards shall receive a 50 per cent reduction in federal taxes that are now in effect.

Foreign interests make a lot of money with films in Mexico, the ministry announces. It reports certain illuminating facts were brought to light when it investigated the alien phases of the business in its examination of the entire cinematographic situation.

Mexico has nine enterprises that are devoted exclusively to the distribution of foreign made pictures, of which eight deal mostly in American productions, and German Camus & Company, which handles mostly European products, chiefly German, French aind Russian. The combined capital of these firms is 469,440 pesos (the prevailing foreign exchange rate is 3.60 pesos per American dollar). From 1929 to 1933, these distributors imported films and discs that had a total value of 3,032,455 pesos. During that period, these enterprises spent in Mexico 522,697 pesos for salaries, of which executives received 40 per cent; white collar help 33 per cent and workers 27 per cent—and around 200,000 pesos for publicity and exploitation.

From 1929 to 1933, these companies presented their home offices with 7,901,940 pesos, of which 5,690,773 pesos was subject to income tax, which left these distributors net profits of about 3,061,000 pesos.

Union Employees Complain

Unionized employees of American distributors in Mexico have complained to the federal board of conciliation and arbitration that these distributors are organizing "white guards"—a reserve unit of employees that is ready at a moment's notice to carry on when their organized workers strike or cause other trouble.

New House for Mexico City

Cinemas in Mexico City are soon to number 65. A de luxe first run house, which is to have facilities for stage entertainments, is to go into construction this month in the heart of the downtown Mexico City district. Antonio and Pablo Prida, Mexican capitalists, are backing the project.

In order to increase exhibitions of made in Mexico pictures, the Mexican Screen Authors Syndicate, a branch of the Mexican Actors Union, has asked the Mexico City municipal government to enact a law which will make it obligatory for every cinema in the national capital to stage an all-Mexican program at least once a month. No fewer than two domestically made productions can be shown on these programs.

Poli Married 50 Years

Sylvester Z. Poli and his wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary last week at their summer home at Woodmont, Conn. Many film people were among the 500 guests. Mr. Poli is the founder of the Poli New England circuit of theatres, at present owned by Loew.

Takes "Wandering Jew"

Sam Handlesman of Chicago will distribute the film, "The Wandering Jew," starring Conrad Veidt, in Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin.

Theatres Shifting in New England

The New England theatre map has been as changeable of late as the weather. In an expansion move that may be continued further, Peter Latchis, unaffiliated circuit operator, has added the Plymouth and the Rialto theatres in Leominister, Mass., to his holdings. This action further reduces the M. A. Shea theatre circuit.

Boston houses are changing hands again after seasonal stagnation. The downtown Loew's Orpheum has gone off a long established vaudeville-single feature policy by which MGM, United Artists, and other releases were generally screened two weeks after their Hub premieres at the Loew's State in the Back Bay. The new move takes the Orpheum off vaudeville and gives these distributors two day-and-date first-run situations here.

The dropping of stage shows at Loew's Orpheum momentarily leaves the M. and P.—Publix Metropolitan, New England's largest house, with only stage show policy in town. The RKO Boston, however, drops its summer double feature policy of the summer on August 29 in favor of first-run single features and stage shows. The Folies Bergeres will open the new presentation season, to be followed by Vincent Lopez, Sophie Tucker, Phil Cook and other names. This scrapping of double features by the Boston is a severe blow to independent distributors which have been enjoying many local premieres here.

The Casino Theatre, off Scollay Square in the lower downtown Hub, is being redecorated and modernized for an early opening with films and stage shows. The nearby Howard Atheneum will be put into lights soon by the Lothrop theatre Corporation with motion pictures and stage shows.

The Powers theatre in Caribou, Maine, has added Sunday to its operating days, as had the M. and P—Publix Paramount in Fort Fairfield, Maine. The Opera House in Hillsboro, N. H., has been closed. The Empire theatre in Salem is being remodeled after having been on the inactive list.

United Productions Formed in England

Patterned after the United Artists producing organization, with individual producers, United Productions, Ltd., has been organized in London and will release through General Distributors, it was cabled from England on Wednesday. The principals are Leslie Howard, Eugene Frenke, Dr. Kasas and Rudolph Forster. It was announced about $500,000 will be spent on each production. Pictures scheduled are "Bonnie Prince Charlie," "Lady Hamilton," with Anna Sten, and "A Woman Alone," with Miss Sten and Henry Wilcoxon.

"Page Miss Glory" Has Premieres

The first Marion Davies Cosmopolitan production released by Warner opened at the New York Strand theatre on Wednesday night. Simultaneously with the New York showing the picture had sixteen pre-release engagements in key cities throughout the country. General release date is set for September 7.

Annapolis Farewell

(Paramount)

Comedy Drama

Filmed at, centered entirely about and highly praising the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, this production offers much of drama and much of comedy, at the same time having somewhat less of fast-paced action and spectacle effects. The result is interesting and good entertainment, the type of entertainment that the whole family may see, and the younger generation probably with some profit. It points something of a moral, but not too obviously, indicating to youth the necessity of living for and serving others, rather than oneself only.

There is a note of high drama, almost tragedy in the climax, which may be considered too strong, yet which serves its purpose well. The conclusion is tear-provoking. There is little or no romance in the picture, except in an incidental fashion, serving merely to brighten the scene with a feminine touch, and to offer an opportunity for sequences of complication and conflict between two of the major characters.

The theme is the virtual reformation of a boy, who comes to the Academy with a chip on his shoulder, ready to serve himself first, last and all the time. Through the high feeling of loyalty to a country and a service, displayed by an old man, a retired naval officer, the boy finds himself, through comedy, drama and tragedy. The theme and the setting should open the way to interest-attracting selling on the part of the exhibitor. An effort should be made to attract the feminine portion of the patronage, in view of the minor romantic interest. There should be no difficulty in attracting the attention of community groups, such as women's clubs, and patriotic organizations. The younger generation should need little urging. The work of Sir Guy Standing, in virtually the leading role, is outstanding, while in chief support are Tom Brown, Richard Cromwell and John Howard.

To the Academy as plebes comes Cromwell and Brown, who become roommates. Cromwell is quiet, sincere, while Brown, younger brother of Howard, an upperclassman, is arrogant, boastful of his football prowess and has thoughts only of himself. Hanging about the Academy grounds continuously, living near by, and considered something of a doddering old pest, is Standing, retired naval officer, who lives in the past, when he commanded the ship Congress at Manila Bay, and whose loyalty to the Navy means more than anything else to him.

The clever and ingratiating Brown sees to it that he becomes more than friendly, playing upon the old man's pride in his former command, to trick Cromwell into missing the arrival of his sweetheart, Rosalind Keith, when she arrives for the graduation day exercises. Brown hopes, and expects, that his brother, upon graduation, will follow his school success in football, with a cleanup as a professional. He is hurt and unable to understand when Howard refuses, denies the report, and tries to indicate to Brown that he has learned something beside his own personal gain, but his talking is of little use.

Standing is almost overcome with joy when his old ship, the Congress, comes into the harbor, as, he thinks, a historical memento. It is Brown, in the midst of angry words with Howard, who reveals the ship is designed as a target in gunnery practice. The old man is driven distracted, as all his efforts to have the target order rescinded fail. At night he boards the ship, awakens next day as firing is in full action. Only when the gun handled by Brown makes a direct hit on the bridge does the control room learn from Annapolis that Standing has boarded the ship. Brown feels himself responsible. An effecting conclusion finds the commandant delivering a stirring eulogy, as Brown realizes what serving others means.—Aaronson, New York.

The Return of Peter Grimm

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Adapted from the wellknown play by the late David Belasco, this production offers something of novelty in drama especially for those who have an interest in the supernatural and the theory of life after death, and something of entertainment, chiefly centering about an excellent major characterization, for others. The work of Lionel Barrymore as Peter Gimm, the lovable but tyrannical ruler of his household and his nurseries, should be in itself a selling factor of importance.

In chief support are Helen Mack, George Breakston and Edward Ellis, indicating the necessity of concentration by the exhibitor on the story itself, its theme, with which may be tied the title suggestion, and the name of Barrymore. It may be possible for the exhibitor to arrange some sort of tieups with local community groups who are apt to have some interest in the supernatural thematic material. There is comparatively little of action in the story, most of it being confined to an exposition of the theme, via dialogue.

It may be said to be in large measure a "one-man" picture, in that the work of Barrymore, who is almost constantly before the camera, is all-important. Romance and its complications play a vital part in the story, as old Peter, who had arranged a marriage to his own satisfaction without consulting the wishes of the one chiefly concerned before he died, "returns" to attempt to right the terrible wrong he has done, as the girl proceeds to carry out his final wish and keeps her promise, although it means a lifetime of unhappiness. There is a hint of tragedy in the conclusion, when the small boy goes with him into the beyond, but it is done in a manner which leaves but little sting, since the passing of the child appears rather a happy conclusion for him.

Peter rules his house, loves his ward, Miss Mack, and is fond of another ward, Breakston and his secretary, James Bush, who is in love with Miss Mack, and she with him. Continuously quarreling about the supernatural are Barrymore and his doctor and best friend, Ellis, who believes in the communication of the dead with the living, if the proper atmosphere and sympathy is present. Moving slowly at first, the story has Barrymore sending for his nephew, Allen Vincent, who has been abroad, and who is to marry Miss Mack, according to Barrymore's fondest dream. Ellis tries to dissuade him, but Barrymore is set in his intention.

He forces Miss Mack to promise, then dies. As plans move forward for the wedding, Barrymore "returns" and tries to right the wrong. He is unable to communicate with the living, despite all his efforts. Interesting photography has been achieved in the picturization of the shadow of Barrymore among the living. He is about to give up in despair, broken-hearted by Miss Mack's apparent unhappiness, when he visits young Breakston, who is seriously ill. Through him he is able to establish communication, and with the help of Ellis points out Vincent as the boy's father, who had in the past betrayed his mother, then left her to die a suicide. Thus is the marriage of Vincent and Miss Mack halted and that of Bush and Miss Mack made possible. In the family bible Barrymore, before he died, had written that his worldly goods shall go to Miss Mack "and her husband."

Breakston, finally able to "see" the shade of Barrymore, goes with him to a final happiness. —Aaronson, New York.

Here's to Romance

(20th-Fox)

Comedy-Romance

Dominating the several other commercial qualities provided by this picture, is Nino Martini's singing. It permits an appeal, directed not only at the class of patrons who understand and appreciate the entertainment worth of good music, but also to the rank and file who like it as an embellishing asset in a modern, fast paced comedy romance.

Basically the story follows a "sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander" theme. Kathleen Gerard, a patron of the arts, but not adverse to flirtatious adventures, becomes interested in and quite definitely infatuated with Nino Donelli. She finances his musical education in Paris. Her husband, Emery, desirous of preserving Kathleen's affection, conceives the idea of playing the same game and himself becomes interested in a young dancer, Lydia Lubov. The situation is complicated when it is revealed that Nino and Lydia are in love. In the end, matters are straightened out, after the budding operatic star's career is almost blighted and he is reduced to the virtual status of a five and ten cent store song plugger, as the real lovers are brought together and the married pair decide to act as married folks are supposed to.

In his screen debut, Martini is presented singing several songs, two of which are modern, the theme song "Here's to Romance" and "Midnight in Paris," and arias from "La Tosca" and "Manon" in addition to "Vesta La Jubba." Madam Schuman-Heink also is featured in operatic solos and the theme of the story is further highlighted by dance numbers featuring Maria Gambarelli and Vicente Escuredo.

The selling should aim to intrigue the interest of music lovers, but not become so dignified that it might create the impression among the everyday patrons that the picture is a class attraction. There is comedy to sell in drawing attention to the picture's light romantic motivation. Likewise, supporting production values are novel and colorful.

The title having an intriguing significance, the film lends itself to commercial tieups, particularly with music stores.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Musical Romance

Based on the life of Stephen Collins Foster, the great American composer, whose compositions of plantation life in the old South have earned him a permanent place in America's musical hall of fame, this production finely portrays the career, the auspicious beginning and the tragic ending of this character in American life, whose songs have been loved for years, but whose life is popularly known but little.

Produced and directed with intelligence and understanding, portrayed with skill by the entire cast and enlivened by the excellence of photography and appeal of the locale, the picture should have wide appeal. For exhibitors, the name of Stephen Foster and his melodies, the most noted of which, "My Old Kentucky Home," "Oh! Susanna," "Old Black Joe," "Weep No More My Lady," "Swanee River" and others, are featured in the picture, present readymade exploitation assets. Coupled with the name of Foster, tieups with musical publishing firms, glee clubs and the like may aid the exhibitor in exploiting the picture. The title use should be accompanied by a clear indication of the nature of the story. The cast, headed by Douglass Montgomery, whose performance as Foster is noteworthy, includes Evelyn Venable, Adrienne Ames, Joseph Cawthorn, Cora Sue Collins and William Frawley, who as Christy gives one of the best characterizations in the picture.

Born of an energetic family, who frowned on the musical inclinations that he evidenced early, Stephen Foster, after an unsuccessful attempt to build a business career, devotes his life to the composing of music. At the time of his business venture, Foster was engaged to Susan Pentland (Evelyn Venable), for whom he wrote the first of his more widely known melodies, "Oh! Susanna." In Stephen's absence, Susan unexpectedly marries and he, bewildered, seeks solace in the company of Jane McDowell (Adrienne Ames), whom he soon marries.

Dissatisfied as a member of the Foster household, Jane chides Stephen on his inability to provide them with a home of their own. To obtain money, he sells his newest song for $500 to Christy, head man of a traveling minstrel show, with the understanding that Christy will be credited as the composer. Persuaded by Christy to sing the song from the stage Stephen does so and Jane, who is in the audience, is humiliated. Her previous dislike for Christy is accentuated. The minstrel man and the composer become close friends.

Years later Stephen and Jane separate, when Stephen, finding Christy in a saloon, brings him home inebriated. In the intervening years Foster, now with his own home and a daughter Marion (Cora Sue Collins), labors on his melodies, the proceeds of which support his family. After his separation from Jane and Marion, Stephen goes to New York, where with the aid of his former music teacher, Kleber (Joseph Cawthorn), Foster finds employment grinding out songs in a music publishing firm.

Successful in the begining Stephen falls gradually into a rut, becomes a heavy drinker and loses his job. In the twilight of his career, Stephen confounds his friends by composing one of his more beautiful melodies. It's his last gesture. When Foster fails to appear at a benefit Kleber seeks him out, and finds the composer dying.—Mooney, New York.

Melodrama

Sprinkled throughout with action and climaxed by a bang-up fight, this melodrama tells of the gunman hired to protect a threatened cafe owner, his reformation by a settlement worker he had known in earlier years, his romance with the girl of the man who had hired him, and his fight with his former employer, refereed by the settlement worker, his winning of the girl and reconciliation with his former adversary.

In addition to the wellknown cast names, the exhibitor has the value of the action material. In the cast are Lew Ayres as Eddie Howard, the gunman; Mae Clarke as Laura Grant, storm center for Howard and Martin; and Paul Kelly as Tim Martin, cafe owner. Included also are Ralf Harolde, William Harrigan, as Brother Joe, the settlement worker; John Qualen, Warren Hymer and Vince Barnett.

In the story Tim Martin, reformed gangster and now a prosperous cafe owner, is in love with Laura Grant, school teacher and an ardent supporter of Brother Joe and his settlement activities. Intimidated by Lefty Phillips, who seeks to form a partnership with him and to install illegitimate gambling devices in his cafe, Martin throws Phillips out. Phillips is about to shoot Martin when he is stopped by Eddie Howard, who arrives to assume his position as Martin's bodyguard.

In Martin's office is Brother Joe, whom Howard recognizes as an old friend and counselor. Brother Joe invites Howard to the settlement house, where he becomes popular with the boys through display of his athletic ability. Brother Joe convinces Howard of his mistaken path and names him athletic instructor for the settlement house. Receiving an urgent call, Brother Joe hurries out, leaving Howard in the office. He returns to find him and Laura in the office. With Brother Joe is a three-year-old youngster, who, he says, is the motherless son of Martin. He proposes to care for the boy, but Laura insists on looking after him with the hope that Martin will eventually come to love the lad and claim him.

Martin is indifferent to the boy, not knowing that the youngster is his son, but resents the intrusion of Howard into Laura's life. Martin withdraws his promise to furnish funds for Brother Joe's settlement camp, breaks off with the girl and prepares to install gambling devices in his cafe. The events leading up to the fight between Howard and Martin, the subsequent winning of the girl by Howard and the change of heart by Martin are full of lively action material.—Mooney, New York.

Comedy Drama

Primarily of the race track but tempered throughout with appealing drama, this picture describes the troubles of the mathematically inclined horse dopester who picks the right horses, but never wins, until with everything at stake, his horse comes under the wire, first.

For exhibitors the comedy element of the picture, ably carried by the two leading names in the cast, James Gleason and Zasu Pitts, and the exciting horse races are the things to sell. Included in the cast are Margaret Callahan, Russell Gleason, J. M. Kerrigan and Arthur Stone.

Gleason, married to Miss Pitts and the father of Miss Callahan, is the proprietor of a small-town lunch counter, the means of supporting his family, Gleason's chief interest in life is the race track. Through painstaking application to detail he traces the history of each horse through the racing forms and stud books, but is prevented from betting by his wife, who holds tightly to the purse strings. Promises of a better life finally break down her convictions and Gleason prevails upon her to bet their savings.

Leading all the way, the horse stumbles a short distance from the finish and falls and with the fall goes Gleason's peace for the next three years, as Zasu will never allow him to forget the race. Gleason, who hasn't seen a race in three years, finds fate intervening in the person of his prospective son-in-law. Russell Gleason and Miss Callahan are in love and want to get married, but Zasu will not give her consent until Russell has raised enough money to buy the auto washing shop where he works. He needs $2,000 and he has only $200. Gleason persuades Russell that the only hope he has of getting married is to bet the money on a horse race. Russell asks Gleason to place the bet.

Locking himself in his room, Gleason stays up all night scanning the racing forms and, satisfied he has picked a winner, prepares to bet the money the next day. Shaken in his belief in the horse he had chosen, he places the money on another. The horse he had originally picked wins and Gleason loses Russell's money.

Believing they had won the money, the young couple plan on marrying immediately and Gleason, who hides the truth, prepares to raise money to repair the damage. How he raises the money, becomes involved in family disputes and is almost prevented from racing the horse in which he has acquired a half interest, leads to the fast climax, an exciting horse race and a happy ending. It is a picture for the family.—Mooney, New York.

Powder Smoke Range

(Radio)

Western

No matter by what more dignified appelation Hollywood choses to term it, "Powder Smoke Range" is a western. The six outstanding western stars it features and the whole host of supporting players whose careers have been indelibly bound up with the "horse opera" character of entertainment wouldn't permit anything else. As everything that these players represent and all that the character of amusement calls for is included, its only shortcoming is the rather noticeable omission of a spectacular wild riding chase.

While it's nothing that will excite the sophisticates it is something that should stir youngster enthusiasm to a marked degree. With the names Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson, Bob Steele, Tom Tyler, Guinn Williams, Art Mix, Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Buddy Roosevelt providing the ammunition to arouse juvenile curiosity, the showmanship trend is quickly established. One line sets it up—a congress of western stars in a western melodrama.

In the yarn Carey, Gibson and Williams are three cowboy musketeers with the former being the hero and the latter two supplying the comedy. Interrupting a stage coach holdup, Carey learns that Bob Steele, regenerated desperado, has come into control of a ranch and has cut them in for a share. In town, they run into the familiar situation. Sam Hardy and his minions, a bunch of crooked rustlers, are conniving to do Steele and his sweetheart, Boots Mallory, out of the ranch. Everything is as villanous and heroic as expected. Hardy determines to bluff his way; Carey is the hero who knows how to call his bluff. Hardy hires Tom Tyler, professional gun man, quickest draw in the Southwest, to kill Carey. Carey is game and also a bit of a humanitarian hero. He loads his gun with something like B-B shot with which to hit his foe in the battle in the deserted street.

Then, winning Tyler over to his side, comes Carey and his cohorts to stage the gun battle among the mountain rocks. Only the slightest vestige of a chase precedes, but the roaring, zinging gun battle makes up for it. Naturally the forces of law and order are victorious. Hardy, who of course was safe at home while his men were dying, is thrown out of his position of power and influence. The business of raising cattle can go on in peace and there's a suggestion of a romantic finale to bring Steele and the only girl in the film, Boots Mallory, together.

. For young audiences and for the weekend position, the film is something that can be ballyhooed to the skies.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Sunny Youth

(Amkino)

Comedy Drama

Something more of the type of entertainment to be found in the regular run of American films, is in this latest importation from the state-owned motion picture industry of Russia. Having as its basis in story the elementary conflict of two young men for the hand of a girl, and engaging in athletic competition to prove the worth of each, the picture has rather less of propaganda than does the usual run of pictures which have come to this country from Russia.

The language element is singularly simplified for American audience consumption in this instance, since the Russian dialogue has been entirely eliminated, and an accompanying musical score dubbed in, plus regular subtitles as in the pre-talking days of the motion picture.

Although there is more acceptable material for the regular run of American audiences in this than in many other Russian films, its story is actually an old theme. The film contains nothing particularly outstanding, by reason of which the exhibitor could sell it as an unusual importation from abroad.

In a particular workers' group are two friends, one a star athlete, the other studious, not athletically inclined. The great rival of the athlete is the villain of the piece, an egotistical winner who has consistently beaten the star on the track. Meeting a girl, the studious boy falls in love, but finds the girl chiefly interested in athletic prowess. Enlisting the aid of the sweetheart of his friend, he goes into training in secret, and their frequent meetings lead to misunderstandings, and jealousy. Finally it is explained to everyone but the girl, until the day of the big race which is to decide locally the man who is to be sent to Moscow for the final racing. The star, through the trickery of the unscrupulous rival, is injured and at the last moment the roommate is pressed into the race. He wins in an action climax and a reconciliation is affected.—Aaronson, New York.

O'Mahoney-George Bout

(Pat Garyn)

Action

There is real action and plenty of it in this actual picturization of the recent wrestling championship bout between O'Mahoney, the sensational arrival from Ireland, and George of the United States. The film was produced by Ambuder Company of Boston and distributed by Pat Garyn. As the two giants grapple, employing all sorts of punishing holds, and their results are graphically registered, there is something for the sporting fans to see. Then as the climax, first George throws the Irish champion out of the ring, and then O'Mahoney turns the tables, and this time George is unable to climb back in time. The film ends with a roughhouse battle all over the ring among the handlers of the two wrestlers, Referee James Braddock and the police. Action, but not for the fainthearted.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Then the fur flies, the game is all over and Popeye wins back his girl. An amusing cartoon.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Entertaining

Mr. Wanger has signed Gene Towne and Graham Baker to long term writing contracts. Others planned by the producer are "Big Brown Eyes," with Joan Bennett, and "The Moon Is Our Home," by Faith Baldwin.

THE BIG BROADCAST OF 1936

(Paramount)

Lump together the commercial value of many of Paramount's biggest star names, add to them the worth of a whole host of radio specialists and back all up with a farce comedy story, brimful of fun and music, and the potential showmanship of this production is evident. The story revolves itself around Jack Oakie, Lyda Roberti, Burns and Allen, Henry Wadsworth and Wendy Barrie. Oakie and Wadsworth own a one-lung radio station. 'Burns is the inventor of the teleradio, a combination television-radio apparatus. The trio try to get Lyda Roberti, a foreign princess, to finance it. She takes them to her country. There, while entertaining her with the art of famous personalities, they become involved in an international brawl that requires the full force of the U. S. Navy to rescue them. That the winning of a $100,000 prize for the best radio program climaxes the hilarity, is typical of the farcical tune to which it moves.

In addition to the screen names mentioned it also will present C. Henry Gordon, Benny Baker, Samuel S. Hinds, Akim Tamiroff and Arthur Aylesworth. From the outside entertainment fields it has taken Amos 'n' Andy, Jessica Dragonette, Ray Nobel and his band, dancing Bill Robertson, Ruth Slenczynski, pianist; Willy, West and McGinty, comedy sketch; Richard Tauber, Carlos Gardel, the Vienna Choir Boys, Harold and Fayard Nichols, noted dancers of the stage, and Ina Ray Huttan and band, together with Betty Jane Cooper.

Sketches will present Ethel Merman, Mary Boland and Charles Ruggles, Virginia Weidler, David Holt, Guy Standing, Gail Patrick and Lillian Harmer and Bing Crosby and William Burress.

Original screen play is by Walter DeLeon, Francis Martin and Ralph Spence. Music is by Ralph Rainger and Richard Whiting with lyrics by Leo Robin and Dorothy Parker. Norman Taurog is directing.

FRISCO-KID

(Warner)

With James Cagney in the title role and the picture being directed by Lloyd Bacon, who handled him in three of his biggest previous hits, "Here Comes the Navy," "Devil Dogs" and "Irish in Us," this story is an action-packed dramatic romance localed in San Francisco's colorful legendary Barbary Coast.

The action being that which is associated with the place and time as it is recorded in fact and fiction, and a romantic love interest being woven in, Cagney, after killing a villain who had tried to shanghai him, embarks on a career that establishes him as the gambling king of the Coast. As the forces of law and order are endeavoring to bring some semblance of respectability to the growing city a series of brutal murders bring out the famous old vigilantes again. Cagney, reformed by love, but unable to live down his prior evil reputation, is saved from the gallows by the heroine as fire reduces the first Barbary Coast to ashes.

Story, an original screen play by Warren Duff and Seton I. Miller, is based on a series of authentic incidents and portrays actual characters.

The cast supporting Cagney, while composed mainly of names often seen in Warner pictures, also marks the return to screen work of Estelle Taylor. Margaret Lindsay is featured as the heroine and the various other characters are interpreted by George E. Stone, Ricardo Cortez, Donald Woods, Joseph King, Robert McWade, Barton MacLane, Robert Strange, Joseph Crehan, John Wray and Fred Kohler.

With another similarly localed and atmosphered picture, Goldwyn's "Barbary Coast," coming along so that releases will undoubtedly be close together, there is bound to be a creation of popular interest in the theme and setting, that smart showmanship may turn to advantage.

ANNIE OAKLEY

(Radio)

This is the dramatic, romantic story of colorful Annie Oakley, legendary world's champion markswoman—the shooting star of a couple of generations ago. Based on an original by Joseph A. Field, the screen play is by Joel Sayre and John Twist. Direction is by George Stevens, maker of the current "Alice Adams" and recently credited with "Nit Wits."

It stars Barbara Stanwyck in a role much different in character than any in which she has recently appeared. She is supported by a cast of more than ordinary name value as Preston Foster, Ray Mayer, Andy Clyde, Moroni Olsen, Melvyn Douglas, Pert Kelton and Margaret Armstrong will be seen in featured roles and minor parts assumed by Jack Mulhall, Dick Elliott, Eddie Borden, Otto Hoffman, Brooks Benedict and George Lollier.

As a bet-settling match brings champion shot Foster and Miss Stanwyck into competition that shortly takes on a romantic love interest, the film moves into the aura of the famous Buffalo Bill Wild West Show. With the pair as the stellar attractions, the show sensationally tours the country, bringing to the fore in addition to Colonel Cody such characters as Sitting Bull and Rain in the Face, Indian chiefs who participated in the Custer massacre. In Europe it brings in the then Prince of Wales and Crown Prince, later Kaiser, Wilhelm. The romance between Foster and Miss Stanwyck goes on the rocks through complications with Melvyn Douglas when Foster is accidentally shot in a match. While Annie rides on to glory, Foster disappears only to be found years later running a shooting gallery and Miss Stanwyck is reunited with the only man she ever loved.

CHARLIE CHAN IN SHANGHAI

(20th-Fox)

In this, the ninth of the "Chan" series, Charlie Chan takes himself into the colorful, mysterious, menacing and never understood land of his screen ancestors. For the first time in his screen career the celebrated Chinese detective solves a Chinese mystery that is more baffling and consequently as intriguing and entertaining as the most unsolvable Chinese puzzle. Essentially a bewildering adventure in Chinese crime, it also has its unique comedy contrast, principally in Warner Oland's singing of a Chinese song.

The trend and atmosphere of all Chan stories being generally well understood and appreciated as entertainment and showmanship features this has to do with Chan's secret mission in breaking up and apprehending the culprits running a sinister opium trading business. A murder is committed, there are no clues, but Chan solves the crime in his own inimitable manner.

With Oland again in his familiar role as the dominating showmanship factor, substantiating the appeal of story worth, another exploitation feature is the appearance of Keye Luke, again appearing as Chan's son, a character he first had in "Chan in Paris." Other players are Irene Hervey, recently seen in "Hardrock Harrigan," who carries the romantic angle with Charles Locher, making his first important appearance. Other players are Halliwell Hobbes and Russell Hicks, as well as a number of Chinese character actors in atmospheric parts.

I LIVE FOR LOVE

Warner

A romantic triangle comedy romance in context, this story is told against the backgrounds of the theatre and radio broadcasting. The original story and screen play are by Jerry Walk, Julius Epstein and Robert Andrews. Lyrics and music are by Mort Dixon and Al Wrubel, who have functioned similarly in several recent Warner productions. Direction is by Busby Berkeley, maker of the current Joe E. Brown "Broadway Joe" and previously credited with the direction of "Gold Diggers of 1935," in addition to being noted for his handling of spectacular dance numbers in many pictures.

The cast is headed by Dolores Del Rio, last seen in "In Caliente," and Everett Marshall, noted operatic baritone, who, in making his initial screen appearance, has for a popular interest stimulating background a long list of successful appearances on the stage and radio. In the picture he will be heard singing five or six song numbers. The supporting cast includes Hobart Cavanaugh, Don Alvarado, Berton Churchill, Guy Kibbee, Allen Jenkins, Mary Treen and Robert Greig as the better known screen names, and also presents Shaw and Lee and Eddie Conrad of stage and airway fame.

THE VIRGINIA JUDGE

(Paramount)

During many years on the vaudeville stage, Walter C. Kelly made his Virginia Judge character familiar and loved by millions of theatregoers. His act, a monologue then, now becomes the substance for a potentially charming comedy character story. In collaboration with Octavus Roy Cohen, whose magazine stories dealing with southern characters and situations have been widely read, Kelly has prepared a story, which, similar to the Irvin Cobb theme in atmosphere, makes the "Judge" a living character, kindly, witty, sympathetic, who has only one sorrow: his inability to win the friendship of his antogonistic stepson. How he contrives to do this, in the meantime introducing a homely, down-to-earth romantic angle, endows the story with an emotional quality on a par with its humor.

Kelly, who made his feature screen debut in "McFadden's Flats," will be supported by Marsha Hunt, a promising newcomer, who with Johnny Downs shares the love interest. Localed in the old South, the picture will also present characters typical of that section in Stepin Fetchit, Robert Cummings, T. Roy Barnes, Dudley Dickinson, Erville Alderson and Sam McDaniels.

HOLLYWOOD WATCHING "CRUSADES" ROADSHOW
DUAL OPPONENTS CITE THE TEMPLE FILM GROSS
FISHING IS NOW THE COAST'S FAVORITE SPORT
GOLDWYN STARTS UNITED ARTISTS EXPANSION

PRODUCERS, writers and directors are watching with keen interest results of the road showing of "The Crusades." This is the first film to be roadshown since "Cavalcade" was given pre-release showing in 1933, and, according to some executives here it may also mark a tentative gesture toward the return of the single bill.

Hollywood is awaiting results also on one other picture announced for roadshow engagements this fall when Warner will release "A Midsummer Night's Dream" for two-a-day engagements before it has general release.

Nearly every studio has one or more films which may rate two-a-day showings, provided the public shows interest. RKO-Radio's "The Three Musketeers" and "The Last Days of Pompeii" promise to be offerings out of the ordinary. MGM has "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Romeo and Juliet" as definite candidates in this class with "The Great Ziegfeld" a possibility. Though Darryl Zanuck has increased budgets on a number of Twentieth Century-Fox pictures, at the present time none of the list looks like roadshow material with the possible exception of "Metropolitan" starring Lawrence Tibbett.

Universal expects "Show Boat," musical starring Irene Dunne, to be one of the bigger pictures of the year, and they claim that the talking version of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" will supersede the silent film in wide public appeal.

Paramount's "So Red the Rose" may reveal road show calibre in the preview, and so may "Rose of the Rancho" starring Gladys Swarthout.

May Signal Single Bill Return

The Technicolor feature, as yet unannounced, which Pioneer will produce this fall, probably will make a bid for special showings, and so will "Leonardo de Vinci," which Walter Wanger will make in London next spring.

Warner is giving special attention to "The Charge of the Light Brigade," "Anthony Adverse," "The Green Pastures" and "Captain Blood."

The general feeling in Hollywood is that if "The Crusades" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream" do handsomely in their first engagements, it will also signal the return of single bills, as it will definitely show the public has capacity to pay and is again becoming selective. Single bills may not come back all at once, but Hollywood is hopeful for a gradual trend to the single standard, and believes that it may gain momentum with the road-show showings of this handful of special attractions.

Single Feature Results

Box office results of the presentation of "Curly Top" at Loew's State and Grauman's Chinese theatres on a single bill, day and date policy, are serving as delectable ammunition for the anti-double bill adherents. "Curly Top's" combined gross of more than $30,000 at both houses not only stands as a recent double record-breaker, but is also the top business for both houses during a period of many months.

Compared with the last Shirley Temple picture, "Our Little Girl," admittedly one of her weaker features, the "Curly Top" gross is several thousand dollars more than double. Yet that picture, played on a similar day and date basis, was presented with another feature. In comparison with the last Temple picture, "The Little Colonel," presented in both houses as a single feature, the take on "Curly Top" was over $12,000 more.

In the case of the three pictures, Loew's State ran ahead of the Chinese in percentage ratio of approximately one and one-third to one. A peculiar circumstance surrounds the business done at both houses. At Loew's, a downtown theatre, the matinee business was high with a noticeable falling off in the evenings. The reverse is true at the Chinese where light matinee business was greatly increased by night trade.

Just previous to "Curly Top," both houses had played "The Call of the Wild" on a single bill day and date policy. In the case of that picture, the box offices grosses were only slightly under those established by the Temple feature.

Business While Fishing

Late last summer, Hollywood discovered it was easier and funnier to get a healthy looking suntan on a fishing barge than on the golf course. Since then, more and more film people have taken to the sea, until now, deep-sea fishing has supplanted golf almost entirely as Hollywood's favorite weekend sport. When a film executive now says "I got 87 over the weekend," he doesn't mean strokes on a golf course. He means baracuda, yellowtail, or swordfish, and the larger the number, the happier he is.

Peculiarly this interest in fishing is reacting to the benefit of productions. On a fishing barge with time to loll around, sit and think, business is transacted, talent trades are made, casting is indulged in and discussions take the form of story conferences. In favor of fishing, is sun, sea and air—no telephones, and isolation from people who intrude in public or private links.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 280 (one of a special group on sound)—(A) No matter how well equipment containing as many inter-related parts as are required for motion picture sound reproduction, is designed, trouble may develop when it is in operation. What is the best means for insuring trouble-free operation? (Because I would like to publish several answers to this one I will confine question 280 to just one section.)

Answer to Question No. 274

Bluebook School Question No. 274 was: (A) When should a photocell be replaced? (B) Why is it important not to disturb the position of the exciter lamp optical system after the focus has been correctly adjusted by the manufacturer's representative? (C) What general precautions should be observed when replacing tubes in an amplifier?

The engineers who prepared this question say:

"(A) After a photocell has been in use for a considerable space of time, say one or two years (according to the number of hours of operation per day) the electronic emission from the cathode will begin to diminish in much the same manner as emission in an ordinary radio tube drops off with age. This will, of course, be indicated by loss of volume from the particular soundhead in which it is used. The cell should be replaced with a new one, and the old one destroyed to prevent possibility of it getting mixed with the stock of spare cells. It has no further value.

"(B) The optical system is so designed that it will focus or concentrate the light from the exciter lamp in a very thin line at a fixed distance from the objective lens thereof. The distance at which the objective lens is placed from the film should be such that the focal point of the light is in the same plane as the emulsion side of the film. Should this condition not obtain, the quality of light production will suffer in proportion to the amount of error in placement. All frequencies in the upper ranges may be lost and all other frequencies will be somewhat distorted.

"(C) Do not replace tubes with the voltage on because the removal of one tube may put excessive voltage on the others in that amplifier, or the tubes may be damaged if the prongs are started in the wrong socket holes when replacing. When in operation power and rectifier tubes become so hot that they will burn the hand. Any sudden cooling of the bulb will set up strains that may crack the glass. Strains make the glass extremely fragile and subject to breakage at the slightest jar. Avoid placing hot tubes upon a metallic or damp surface."

Those making satisfactory answers were: S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; G. R. Doe; R. J. Arntson; T. Van Vaulkenburg; H. Edwards; J. Wentworth; B. De Vietti; D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; E. Boyer; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; J. E. Wyman; G. N. Guidotti and F. L. Saylor; W. W. Gilreath; F. H. and L. Klar; M. L. Daniels; J. Jurts, T. N. Onby and D. Howard; S. Spooner and B. H. Thaller; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; T. H. Barker and C. Glass; T. Turk and B. L. Ferman; M. and J. DeVoy; D. L. Sinklow; P. D. Otterman; P. Itt; D. L. Lode, B. H. Sanders, J. Jensen and K. Y. Spencer; E. Hodson and J. Johnson; L. L. Boll; R. Geddings and L. Grant; R. and K. Wells, D. Lally and F. Ferguson; S. N. Rudolph; R. D. Jackson and B. L. Korda; L. W. Hess, B. B. Bauer and R. Colman; T. Emmerson; H. D. Coleman and G. Bates; J. Stone; R. Carmody and P. L. Stone; E. Mantol and H. Hughes; L. N. Stone; S. T. and M. Gibson; P. and L. Felt; W. H. Allen; T. Yerts; H. K. Adams; G. Hancock, N. H. Porter and D. Livingstone; L. T. Tappey; H. Pitchkey and C. Mellinger; D. M. Patrick; G. McGuire.

Concerning Section A, Danielson says, "When a photocell shows signs of weakness, or when it becomes noisy, as compared with a cell that is known to be faultless. Naturally it should be replaced when any fault in the sound can be traced to it."

Wyman says, "Replace when excessive ionization takes place at ordinary B voltage, usually about 90 volts. This is evidenced by a pronounced blue glow at the anode. Replace when frequency response falls off. Replace when exciter lamp must be operated above normal level to match results from the other projector."

In reply to Section B G. E. Doe says, "Because such disturbance would alter the necessarily exact distance of the focal point from the lens, which must be precisely at the plane of the film track, or alter the necessarily very precise positioning of the light beam, which must be precisely in alignment with markings on the variable density sound track. Such disturbance would have highly injurious effect upon sound. Exact repositioning is almost impossible by anyone except an engineer equipped with special tools and instruments."

F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

P. and L. Felt reply thus: "The position of the light ray at the film surface is and must be very exact. This matter is measured in fractions of a thousandth of an inch and with such measurements the projectionist is not equipped to deal. If the objective lens be moved either ahead or back in any degree, the light ray will not be focused precisely at the film plane. In either case it will be too deep or 'thick' with resultant distortion of sound and losses in its higher ranges. If it be tilted sidewise it will not properly separate the various sound track impressions, merging one into the other to an extent commensurate with the amount of the fault."

Evans and Rau say, "(1) That the tube is of correct type, (2) that its prongs are clean, (3) that contact springs make good contact with prongs, (4) that tube is well down in socket, (5) that no voltage is on; if there is, the removal of one tube puts excessive voltage on the rest of them. Also, with voltage on, if tube prongs be started into the wrong holes, damage might result."

Boyer says, "The projectionist must be very careful in replacing amplifier tubes. It is very easy to get the 'right tube in the wrong socket.' The 50, 80, 81 and 40 type tube all fit into the same socket. Never insert a tube until very sure it is the right one for the socket it is going into."

H. Edwards says, "As with everything else in projection, a man must be certain he does things exactly right, as mistakes will either cost money through damaged equipment or wasted power, or will react against the excellence of the show, and thus cost the box office money. Before placing an amplifier tube in a socket one must be sure (1) it is clean as to its contacts, (2) that its contacts fit the socket, (3) that good electrical contact will be and is made, (4) that the tube is of correct type for the socket circuit and that the amplifier is electrically dead, (5) that the tube itself is in good condition. In short, that everything is as it should be."

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended August 24, 1935, from 99 theatres in 18 major cities of the country, reached $977,665, an increase of $154,585 over the total of the preceding week, ended August 17, 1935, when 91 theatres in 17 major cities aggregated $823,080.

SIX BOX-O

ON ITS WAY !

Republic Pictures made a promise at the beginning of the 1935-1936 Season. It announced 53 pictures for the new year and four serial chapter plays.

Republic is well on its way to keep this promise. Already six of the pictures scheduled have been produced. Four are already delivered and ready for screening. Two are in the cutting room where editing is being completed.

Six pictures finished a month ahead of the opening of the new amusement season. Republic stands by its promises.

The men back of Republic Pictures have been in the motion picture industry for many years. W. Ray Johnston, Trem Carr and Nat Levine have been consistent producers.

Dependable and painstaking, they have kept faith in the past. They are keeping faith today. Republic's six pictures now available are the proof.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Madison, Wisconsin

Dear Herald:

We found the Madison exhibitors a whole lot like some other exhibitor-managers we have tried to find, but couldn't. As a rule the managers in the cities are not so easily found. Some of them are usually away and others are gone, which generally leaves the janitor on the job to advise us that the manager won't be back until evening, and maybe not then. The most of these city boys, however, are pretty fine chaps, but we have found some who tried to impress us with their importance but whose early knowledge of the show business was gained pumping a handcar. We are glad to note that this type is largely in the minority.

Madison, capital of the state, has something like sixty thousand people, and she has a capitol building that is a dandy (if it is paid for like our capital at Lincoln), and it is a capitol building that any state might well feel proud of.

Up until now we have always considered that our capitol building at Lincoln housed the prize legislature of the universe, but we learn that these badgers over here have gone us one better. Nebraska had a legislator one time who introduced a bill to appropriate $5,000 to make rain. The bill passed and he tried it, but got no rain.

This legislator was a populist from Bazille township and, in an unguarded moment, we took our typewriter and dashed off a verse in order to express our joy in the prospect of having rain, something in the following manner—

And along in July
When the weather gets dry
And the drouth parches forest and plain
The Pops of Bazille
Will proceed to raise ——
Until Lincoln brings up a big rain.

And now comes the Wisconsin legislature and we are told that it passed a bill requiring every restaurant and cafe in the state to serve at least three-fourths of an ounce of cheese with each meal, and fixes a penalty for not doing it. We hope the Nebraska legislature don't hear about this or some hammerhead might introduce a bill making it a penitentiary offense for an airedale and a shepherd to both sniff the same telephone pole. For brilliancy we've got to hand it to our legislators, both here and abroad. When you are in Wisconsin at a cafe, if the girl don't serve you with some cheese, just point to the capitol building and ask her what magnificent structure that is out there. We hear a whole lot of talk about "class legislation" but there is no smell of limburger about this one. The man who introduced that "cheese bill" should receive an appointment on that "shelterbelt" commission.

A Few Asides to Louise Fazenda

Dear Mrs. Wallace:

Speaking of cheese reminds us of a picture we saw in La Crosse, Wisconsin, a few evenings ago wherein Dick Powell, Joan Blondell and yourself did the most of the chores. The picture was "Broadway Gondolier," and you were quite busy distributing samples of cheese to the customers on the boat, and, since the girls over here in Wisconsin have failed to serve us with cheese, as the law directs, we have been wondering if you would favor us with some of your samples in order that we might help the girls uphold the law. We know this cheese is wonderful or you wouldn't be handling it. We know also that the picture was a very good one or you wouldn't be in it, and we trust that you will be assured of our respect and best wishes always.

Shullsburg

As we remember it, we told you something about Shullsburg before, but we didn't tell you all of it. We drove over here to stay all night and to meet an Irishman from Posey county, Indiana, and to learn if he was still running loose. He is the Polander that operates the theatre and also runs a bakery and makes doughnuts with holes and salt in 'em.

The holes are full of wind, and so is the baker, and we came over here for the further reason that our expense check had not arrived and we came over here to borrow some expense money, and gee whiz, but that guy is easy. We drove down a one-way street and got called for it in a town that has but two streets to its name. We remember starting to drive up a one-way street in St. Joe, Missouri, once and a cop yelled "Hey there Rube, don't you know this is a one-way street?" and we replied, "Yes sir, but we are only going one way."

If you come over to Wisconsin and fail to go to Shullsburg and meet T. F. Lee who operates the Shullsburg playhouse, you might as well stay at home.

He Knows Talent

When T. F. Lee, and the sheriff, gave us clearance papers so we could leave town, we drove over to Platteville to see our old friend Bill Tracy. Bill, as you probably don't know, operates the finest theatre in southwest Wisconsin. Not only that but he is considered an authority on all lines of amusements and is usually delegated to secure and furnish talent for all of their public festivities. Last fourth of July he secured the same talent used by The Prairie Farmer at WLS, Chicago, and remembered by you as the "Barn Dance" program which was over the air.

Bill brought this talent, consisting of twenty people, to Platteville at a tremendous cost, and they played to something like eight thousand people in an open air performance.

Mr. Tracy is considered the town's most handy man because his knowledge of amusements is far in the lead of all others, and he is called upon to perform many public duties that have no financial attachments. When you call on Bill Tracy don't overlook calling on Mrs. Bill Tracy too, for you will find her to be an excellent lady and, should she cook you a dinner you will offer a prayer of praise to Wisconsin for having such a citizen.

We forgot to ask Bill if he was related to Mike Tracy who operates a theatre in Storm Lake, Iowa. If he is we want to congratulate Mike. And if he is related to Lee Tracy who plays on the screen in Hollywood, we don't see why Hollywood don't send out to Wisconsin and get him. As soon as Bill would let us leave we drove over across the Mississippi into Iowa and down to Anamosa to see Clifford Niles, who operates the Niles theatre. If you have never been in the Niles theatre and have never met Mr. Niles you have something to look forward to. The Niles is about as well equipped as any theatre in the eastern part of the state, and as well equipped as there is any need of being.

The Niles probably has the best cooling system there is in the state and is equipped with perfect sound and the people of Anamosa are to be congratulated for having such a theatre and such a manager as they now have. A visit with Mr. Niles is indeed a pleasure.

More Crooners!

We have been threshing around in this intense heat now for over six thousand miles in Iowa and Wisconsin, and as soon as we get home we have a conviction that we will jump off the bridge into the Elkhorn river and get our hide soaked up. We went into a restaurant the other day to get a lunch and—

We heard a crooner croon
In a restaurant at noon
And he started crooning love-songs on the air,
And we took a shot of moon
When the girls began to swoon
And when we heard the folks begin to swear.

We hope the boys up in Minnesota and the Dakotas will be watching for us (and that they left their shotguns at home).

Audio Does Ford Film

Audio Productions has completed a new industrial film for the Ford Motor Company, titled "The Honeymoon V-8," which is designed for use among the sales forces of the company. The film, running 17 minutes, was directed by Charles L. Glett and F. Lyle Goldman.

Morrison with Paramount

Ernest Morrison, former division manager for E. J. Sparks, is now general manager of Paramount Enterprises in Miami, operating nine theatres which were dropped by Sparks.

Designer Gets New Contract

Omar Kiam, head costume designer of the Goldwyn studios, has signed a new three year contract with Samuel Goldwyn. At present he is engaged on the costumes of the two forthcoming productions, "The Dark Angel" and "Barbary Coast."

SO THAT OUR POSITION MAY BE FULLY UNDERSTOOD

We have steadfastly refused to make announcements as to our policy on the Will Rogers pictures, old or new, until everything that human mortals could do for Will Rogers had been done. That time has now passed. We have been deluged with telegrams and letters from the public at large, and from exhibitors, urging us to release the Rogers pictures, to reissue the old ones and to make all the pictures available for theatres and other places that desire to run them. So that there will be no misunderstanding, our position is as follows:

We will continue to serve the Rogers pictures to those accounts of ours that have them under contract and to our regular customers in the regular way. This will apply to the releases that are now out, as well as to the two new pictures STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND and IN OLD KENTUCKY which are still to be released. The handling and releasing of these productions will be done on exactly the same basis as though Will Rogers were still alive and working, and there will be no variation from this. We have refused, and will refuse, to reissue any of the old pictures at this time or take care of the hundreds of demands for spot bookings of the older Rogers pictures. We believe that the orderly showing of these pictures, without making any attempt to cash in on the publicity by the reissuing of old pictures, is the only decent and proper way to handle it, and that will be our policy.

It is our opinion that Will Rogers will live in the memory of the people of the world for many, many years to come and that there will be a legitimate demand to see the work of this great character from time to time, but we refuse to make any attempt to cash in on that which would not have come to us except in the regular, orderly way. We believe that this would have been Will Rogers' wish if he were here today to express himself.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Much praise is due the lads who handled the campaign on the opening and subsequent advertising of the Will Rogers picture, "Steamboat 'Round the Bend," which is doing capacity business at the Roosevelt. In neither the publicity nor advertising on the picture was there any mention of the passing of the famous American. All ad copy was written in the same manner as it was for pictures shown before his death. The result is that everyone is commending those who put on the campaign and that goes for hundreds of patrons as well as those in the business. May other exhibitors profit by this.

It was in a loop house. The screen was darkened in respect to Will Rogers and Wiley Post. There was scarcely a sound—then all at once from out of the booth came the sounds of a heated verbal argument—and the moment of silent devotion was shattered. Next time we hope they darken the booth too—if that will help.

The recent annual golf outing of the Balaban and Katz Employees' Club was a huge success. Held at the Lincolnshire Country Club, the affair brought out all the stellar golfers from film row and the theatres. Among those noted were Allan Usher, S. Robinson, Henry Herbel, Roy Bruder, P. Dunas, C. Phillips, Clyde Eckhardt, John, Harry and Dave Balaban, L. R. Lipstone, Nate and Abe Platt, J. J. Rubens, M. Leonard and a host of others.

Winners in the tournament were: Low gross: J. Petrovic, first; Al Shutt, second; Sam Rosenthal, third; J. Scheiman, fourth; John Balaban, blind bogey. For low net: Allan Usher, first; S. Robinson, second; H. Lustgarten, third; E. O'Donnell, fourth. Sam Bramson won the Booby prize, but refused to open it in public.

Prizes included sets of golf clubs, golf balls, bags, sweaters, hospitality sets and many other valuable awards. The deepest hole was dug by Lipstone's foursome, including Nate and Abe Platt and S. Tomber.

Max Gumbiner, veteran Chicago showman, opened his new Nita theatre at 2915 Milwaukee avenue this week. Business men and civic organizations of Logan Square and Avondale joined in the celebration, which was preceded by a street dance, entertainment and a fireworks display. Mr. Gumbiner supplied free ice cream, smokes and souvenirs to those attending the opening.

The house, constructed by E. R. Austerlade, is modern in every detail. It seats 850 and is built with every thought for the patrons' enjoyment.

Herb Cohen, mathematical expert at the Paramount exchange here, is the proud daddy of a daughter, Lois Jean. Mother, daughter—and father—are doing nicely.

With the opening of the McVickers, a deluxe second-run house at popular prices, joins the loop's attractions. The house will be under the management of Johnny Jones and will have a 20 and 30 cent admission rate.

The B & K lads are getting a few kidding comments on the way they name their stage shows. Some of the boys along the row claim the B & K'ers are trying to be subtle.

Ben Judel, independent exchange manager, returns Labor Day from the coast. He will then announce his plans for producing serials, which his organization will distribute.

The pending deals for the Avon, Clifford and Elston theatres have been completed and the Essaness circuit takes over the management of the houses. They will be remodeled considerably before being reopened for the fall season.

Paramount plans to close the deal for the Erlanger theatre this week to show "The Crusales" on a long run, roadshow basis.

The Fred Allen amateur show comes to the State-Lake this week. Audience and critics were unanimous in their reception of this stage attraction.

Henry Ellman has left the curbs of the Wabash and is in the Empire City making arrangements for some new product to distribute here. He plans to be gone a week.

Johnson Promoted by Zanuck

Nunnally Johnson, fiction and screen writer, who recently completed the script of "Thanks A Million," for 20th Century-Fox, has been raised to the position of associate producer by Darryl F. Zanuck, production head. Mr. Johnson's first two assignments will be "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" and "Shark Island."

Monroy in Product Deal

Alberto Monroy has concluded arrangements with Trans-Oceanic Film Export Company, of which Arthur Sanchez is head, for world distribution of his entire product. Mr. George Kallman, formerly with MGM and United Artists, has joined Trans-Oceanic.

MGM Has New Device

MGM, at the Coast studio, is discarding "free heads" on all large cameras, replacing them with a new gear mechanism, invented by John Arnold, head of the electrical department. It is said to lessen the uneven movement of "free head" cameras due to the heavy equipment.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

First National

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—Old but good. Business good on all Joe E. Brown's.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

IN CALIENTE: Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien—I grossed exactly fifty cents over feature film rental and trailer on this one, which ought to show how popular Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien and the everlasting Leo Carrillo are with my patrons. The title is against this one and—well, it just didn't click. Running time, 84 minutes. Played August 1-2.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

G MEN: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—Believe one of the best of its kind. The cast was very good, and the story was crammed with thrills and chills. It satisfied. Played to average business. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 9-10.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart—One of the finest musicals presented on the screen this year. However, the picture was run six months after release date, the print was in excellent condition and the recording superb. The fans all went for this one in a big way; many are praising that gorgeous dance number including the dancers and the pianos. Played to average business. Running time, 95 minutes. Played August 6-8.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

Fox

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—This picture is 100 percent Shirley Temple and 100 per cent perfect entertainment. A good cast, good story, an extra good little bad girl, Jane Withers, makes this a good feature for any theatre, any dates. Young and old alike enjoy Shirley Temple pictures. Running time, 83 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Will Rogers is popular with most of my patrons and they liked this one, though many thought it not so good as "Judge Priest." A good story and good cast, in the time of thirty years ago. Pleased all who came. Running time, 78 minutes. Played August 7-8.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GINGER: Jane Withers, Jackie Searl—Very good acting by this young actress. Plot well developed. This picture packed a punch from start to finish, and "Ginger" created the greatest riot of belly-laughs since Shirley Temple first came to town. Played to above average business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 4-5.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GINGER: Jane Withers, Jackie Searl—"Ginger" is okay at the box office. Jane Withers, who tops the billing, registers strong. For sheer child magnetism, she leads the field of child prodigies. Certainly a creditable picture that you can offer to the whole family and the whole family will enjoy! Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 4-6.—Gail E. Lancaster, Huntington & Jefferson Theatres, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers, Rochelle Hudson—Typical small town picture. If they don't go for this picture there is something radically wrong. It built slowly its second night. The motion picture industry has lost one of its greatest assets, when Will Rogers met his death. We all know it, too.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

ORCHIDS TO YOU: John Boles, Jean Muir—This comedy drama rates as satisfactory entertainment even though a trifle slow in tempo. John Boles sings "Sylvia" in fine voice, and that seems to be plenty for the feminine trade. A good cast makes a mild story into a picture that entertains throughout. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 4-5.—Gail E. Lancaster, Huntington & Jefferson Theatres, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton, Karen Morley—A real comedy which played to a nice weekend business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

UNDER THE PAMPAS MOON: Warner Baxter—Got by O.K. I hope Fox casts Baxter again in an outdoor picture similar to this one.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

MGM

AGE OF INDISCRETION: May Robson, Madge Evans—Good story, well produced. Pleased 100 per cent. May Robson gives a wonderful performance. The only jarring note is Paul Lukas. He does not talk plain and does not fit into the part. All the others are very good. Give this one your best dates. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 27-28.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CALM YOURSELF: Madge Evans, Robert Young—Was surprised in this one for it is an excellent comedy, impossible perhaps, but funny. Good cast and kept them laughing from start to finish. The title is not so good but if you can get them in they will enjoy this one. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 10-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ESCAPADE: William Powell, Luise Rainer—This one starts off rather slow and uncertain as to where it is going but gets going after a couple of reels and is for the most part good entertainment. The little imported lady, Luise Rainer, really steals the show and should go far, so far as one can guess from her one performance. But our receipts do not indicate that this one is at all a small town picture. Running time, 90 minues. Played August 16-17.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

FLAME WITHIN, THE: Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall—This was a very disappointing feature, as Ann Harding is my favorite star, but one more like this and she is through. She talked so fast you could not understand her and most of the others in the cast talked too fast, so the only comments I heard on this one were unfavorable. Running time, 83 minutes. Played August 3-4.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MARK OF THE VAMPIRE: Lionel Barrymore, Bela Lugosi—This more or less horror picture is not entertainment, so far as I am personally concerned, but many seemed to approve of it and we did a very nice business with it. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 13-14.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

MURDER IN THE FLEET: Robert Taylor, Jean Parker—Very good. Lots of action, comedy and thrills. Here's a picture that should please everywhere. Did extra good business here especially when the hot weather we had to buck is taken into consideration. Played August 3.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—Wouldn't rave about this picture myself, or class it as a good program picture. Mills Brothers were its greatest asset. People seemed satisfied, but no extra business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

Paramount

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—Personally thought this one of the best Mae West pictures to date. Pleased the majority and did excellent business. Played August 10.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Cesar Romero—Good program picture that drew an average audience. Played July 31.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Betty Furness, Richard Cromwell—The same old Irish family in the tenements story. Half the cash customers could tell you the whole story after seeing the first scene. Just fair as a picture with no originality whatsoever. Just fair business on this one. Played August 7.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Andy Clyde, Richard Cromwell—No star value to this picture, but it really clicked. They laughed to the exhibitor's satisfaction, at box office also very gratifying. A real sincere family picture for weekends. Give more McFaddens.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields—One of the best Crosbys yet. Heard much praise on this. W. C. Fields is good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie—Outgrossed "Mississippi" and "Goin' to Town." It must be Raft that did it.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BREAK OF HEARTS: Katharine Hepburn, Charles Boyer—Pulled additional business on Bank Nights. But why all the rave about Boyer, who talks broken, when we got hundreds of better actors here in our own little U. S. A.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn—Fine production, people like Hepburn in this town. Built itself up, much bigger than "Copperfield."—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Pleased our slapstick fans and drew extra business for a satisfactory three-day run. The young sheiks liked Miss Grable and I agree with them. In fact, Betty, it will not be out of your road to stop off here the next time you are enroute to New York.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

NITWITS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey — Since Wheeler and Woolsey abandoned smut in their productions we have found business improved when we offer them in any feature. We had a very good and well satisfied audience. Played August 10.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Universal

ALIAS MARY DOW: Sally Eilers, Ray Milland—A program picture that satisfies with plenty of human interest and suspense. We liked Ray Milland in this and think that some producer would be smart to give him a really good role. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 13-14.—Gail E. Lancaster, Huntington & Jefferson Theatres, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall—We lost money on this attraction, but our patrons were decidedly pleased with the offering. Played August 7-8.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Louise Beavers, Warren William—We played this a little late, but backed it up with personal recommendations, with the result that we did better than normal business. Played August 14-15.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady—Very good program picture. Running time, seven reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

LADY TUBBS: Alice Brady—Don't let this one slip by you, for it is really funny. From fade-in to fade-out this one "clicks," supplying uninterrupted interest and plenty of laughs. Alice Brady turns in a grand performance. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 14-15.—Gail E. Lancaster, Huntington & Jefferson Theatres, Huntington, Ind. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

DINKY: Jackie Cooper, Mary Astor—Great entertainment for the entire family. Pleased everyone. Jackie is fine and the others all give a good performance. The name is the only weak spot in this one. Why such a name as "Dinky"? Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 24-25.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy—Old but very good. Played on Bargain Night to satisfied customers.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Short Features

Astor

POT LUCK PARDS: Bud 'n' Ben—These three-reel westerns are always very good. Jack Perrin who used to play Bud has quit the combination. Wish they would get Bob Custer to take his place. Custer used to be popular here. Running time, three reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Educational

BARBER'S DAUGHTER, THE: Andy Clyde, Thelma Hill—Another of the old reissues that went over fine. Good print from Goodrow in New Orleans, La. Running time, two reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL FROM PARADISE, THE: Musical Comedies—Started rather slow but proved real entertainment which we would highly recommend.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Fox

FOX NEWS: Play it on the first of the week. Think Fox News of late has improved. Like it the best of any news.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MGM

CALICO DRAGON: Happy Harmonies—These color cartoons are all so good it is difficult to say which is the best but this one is 100 per cent entertainment for young and old. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CAVE MAN: Willie Whopper—A perfectly awful cartoon. Didn't play it the second night.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

FOUR STAR BOARDER: Charley Chase—Not as good as the Chases usually are. Very few real laughs in this.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LITTLE PEOPLE, THE: Oddities—Poor. Average audience is not interested in this sort of stuff. Just a time killer.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

MEMORIES AND MELODIES: Musical Revues—Romance built on the Stephen Collins Foster songs, all in color and absolutely one of the best shorts ever filmed. The theme song is "My Old Kentucky Home," showing an old plantation, when it is summer and the darkies are gay, some excellent singing by a colored quartet and dancing. Beautiful costumes, good music. in fact, everything that it takes to make two reels of perfect entertainment. Advertise this one like a feature. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

POKER AT EIGHT: Charley Chase—I thought this the silliest of the always (to me) silly Chase comedies, but it got some laughs and the kids seemed to think it funny. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle. Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PRINCE, KING OF DOGS: Oddities—A very clever and entertaining novelty. Running time, on reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TIN MAN, THE: Todd-Kelly—A goofy plot featuring Thelma and Patsy, that got a lot of laughs. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CHOOSE YOUR "WEPPINS": Popeye the Sailor—All the Popeyes are class A entertainment.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

THIS BAD AGE: Headliner Series—One of the best musicals we played in some time. Every exhibitor should make it a point to play this one.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

STRANGER THAN FICTION: No. 2—Good one-reeler of this kind of short. They don't go so good in my town. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

UNIVERSAL NEWS: Prefer Fox News to Universal which we play end of the week.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BAREY RAPP AND HIS NEW ENGLANDERS: Melody Masters—Excellent. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

DIZZY AND DAFFY: Dizzy and Daffy Dean—To me this short was both "dizzy and daffy." Also a total loss as far as entertainment goes, but it pleased the men and boys. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FREDDY MARTIN AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—The Melody Masters are always good. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GUESS STARS: Radio Ramblers—Extra good one-reeler. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

WISHING STONE, THE: Dave Apollon—Clever plot and several excellent musical numbers. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Miscellaneous

MECHANICAL DOLL: Ko-Ko—Fairly good cartoon. Not as good as the other Ko-Ko that I played. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Serials

Mascot

LAW OF THE WILD: Rex, Rin Tin Tin, Jr., Ben Turpin, Bob Custer—Have just finished "Law of the Wild" and it held up unusually well. Rex and Rinty are the entire show but my patrons nearly all like animal pictures and this has action and suspense enough to satisfy most any audience. Pleased most of the adults as well as the children. Running time, two reels each episode.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Universal

TAILSPIN TOMMY: (Episode No. 10), Maurice Murphy, Noah Beery, Jr.—This is one of the best chapters of this serial so far. Hope the next two are as good. After this I play "Lost City." How about a report on it? Have any of you used it in the serial form?—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Combined German-Polish Film Production Planned

German motion picture interests are taking steps to improve their business with Poland, a report to the U. S. Chamber of Commerce from Commercial Attache Clayton Lane, Warsaw, indicates.

UFA in Germany is preparing to produce educational films on Polish life and customs, the Polish government assisting.

The company plans to produce several short films on Warsaw, the Wieliczka salt mines, the Tatra mountains and the life of the Hucul peasants.

Such a joint production program, it is pointed out, will presumably establish closer contact between the Polish and German film industries and will be reflected in Polish film imports.

Polish negotiations with the German industry also contemplate a contract for a film exchange. The price of German films in Poland has risen considerably during recent months. It is reported that exhibitors' receipts have improved since the introduction of German language films into Poland. Negotiations are being conducted to establish joint Polish-German film and sound production, with more sound system installations.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

NIGHTINGALES AND HUMMING BIRDS

How is it, sez you, that folks dead for thousands of years can continue to stay up on page one in books, in plays, in the classroom and even to some extent sway current styles?

It's all a question of the right kind of publicity skillfully applied, folks, and that's the answer to a lot of reasons why many front-page characters of history still influence modern trends and still serve as meal tickets to present day authors.

Undoubtedly, quite a few of these greats have actually made an indelible mark upon the course of civilization but a great many can thank their press agents or whatever they were called in those days for whatever fame lives after them.

In other words, the press boys of ancient times followed one infallible boxoffice rule:

"Never let your hero's feet touch the ground."

And that's why statues were born.

Did you ever read of a great queen of antiquity making a meal off anything besides humming birds' breasts or nightingales' tongues washed down with the rarest of wines worth about ten bucks a sip?

And did you ever hear tell that the fabulous figures of those days were ever bathed with anything but the most precious of ointments? Or wore anything but the ritziest of velvets and the most splendiferous of diamonds and pearls? And how about those storybook emperors still glamorous in the eyes of the world who couldn't let out one small sneeze without a thousand slaves hopping up to shut down the window?

Applesauce, sez you, and mebbe so, but not according to the historians who told about it. Perhaps those big timers preferred ham and eggs or washed with plain soap, but the rooters never knew and for that matter didn't care to know.

The fans in those days wanted their headliners to be glamorous, mysterious gods and goddesses so the press agents built 'em up to the clouds, had statues voted to them, kept on grinding out releases and feature stories many of which are still appearing in books, plays and even pictures that find a ready sale today.

Folks being what they are, the demand today for glamorous, mysterious figures is still heavy. Gods and goddesses are out of style and there isn't much of a bull market on statues, so millions turn to the screen and its stars.

And are told in so many words that these breathhalting screen shadows whom they would fain worship from afar, in real life eat bread three times a day, wash with ordinary soap, wear health shoes and rimless eyeglasses, take out ten cents a thousand insurance and make use of other earthly things available to even the most humble of their admirers.

Not only are the masses told these things but the stars themselves lend their names to such dubious endorsements and continue to do so deluded by the supposition that these advertisings will help keep their names and faces right smack over the world's box offices.

Producers and theatremen are guilty alike in aiding even unconsciously in this respect to remove the billion-dollar glamour and mystery that rightly should surround the stars and featured players who are on their way.

Let 'em eat corn beef and cabbage, wear carpet slippers to ease their bunions, or sleep in woolen nightgowns. But in the public prints, gentlemen, remember the virtues of the nightingale and the humming bird and the box office lesson handed down by the ancients, of keeping the stars' golden feet off the ground.

FRESH BLOOD AND IDEAS

A Round Tabler now doing a good job in an important spot is ambitious to cut loose from the theatre and carve himself a niche in production. Well educated, intensely interested in the drama, possessed of an excellent story sense, he has spent sufficient years as manager to obtain more than an inkling of what patrons want and do not want on the screen.

This member writes for advice on how to go about it and we wish we could tell him. Unfortunately, there is no certain way to enter the magic (?) gates of production. But there should be one for ambitious and qualified managers so inclined.

Large corporations for many years have selected groups of college graduates for training to fill executive posts and the plan is successful enough to warrant adaptation by studio chieftains who complain of lack of sources of fresh blood and fresh boxoffice ideas.

Managers who through long service have grounded themselves thoroughly in their profession should be well qualified to check costly production errors and add selling angles to pictures in the making that otherwise might not be discovered.

RALPH LAWLER

Here are posted the photos of the Quigley July Award winners, Manager Sig Solomon, of the Warner's Regent, Newark, N. J., and Ralph Lawler, of the Great States Orpheum, Springfield, Ill. Solomon, a second-time Quigley Award winner, was voted the Silver for his campaign on Paramount's "Goin' to Town," and Lawler, the Bronze on RKO Radio's "Becky Sharp."

Universal Publishes The "Gotham Bugle"

That's a very interesting four-page full size sheet gotten out by Universalite Joe Weil as an accessory on "Diamond Jim." Joe has named it the Gotham Bugle and to make it more in keeping with the history of the picture, dug up some old time display ads which are spotted throughout the pages. Plenty of other material to make the folks reach for it.

Another neat job is a three-way class folder carrying credits, cast and art photos of Arnold, Barnes and Arthur. Put out evidently for information of picture editors and should find a ready market.

MANAGERS GETTING SET FOR SCHOOL OPENING

School days are just around the corner and theatremen already are fixing again to publicize their houses through this dependable medium. Among the tie-ins are imprinted school book covers, free admission on Saturdays for children with high weekly ratings in deportment and attendance, picture study periods based on local showings, drawing and essay contests of various kinds and other good mediums.

Don't pass up your schools.

Round World Trips Offered On "China Seas" Contest

Topping the many exploitations in MGM's pressbook on "China Seas" is a steamship tieup arranged by Billy Ferguson with the Dollar Line whereby two first-class trips around the world and two first-class round trips to the Orient are offered.

Patrons who want to travel free are invited to write 50-word reasons on "Why I Want to Visit the Romantic China Seas" and tieups have been made in numerous spots for department stores to handle details in conjunction with local dates. Contest booklets are available free at MGM exchanges as is also a trailer.

For the West Coast engagements, 12-page tabloid from suggestion in pressbook was prepared on tieup with Los Angeles daily, enough ad space being sold to national advertisers to take up the cost. Same thing is suggested in big cities where theatres can duplicate these co-op national ads or others.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Many Tieups Listed On "Dark Angel"

From coiffure to pipes, from styles to autos range the tieups in United Artists' "Dark Angel" pressbook. Stockings get a break, as do furs, sport scarfs, flowers and other luxury items. Masculine tieups for the male stars are also offered and the brother-and-sister slant has possibilities.

Book is the first one put out entirely under the supervision of Monroe Grenthal, United Artists' ad chief.

Newspaper Features "Escapade" Contest

That was a pip of a seven-day newspaper tieup made by Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, on "Escapade," the stunt being a number of escapades arranged in the downtown district, paper inviting women readers to take part in the frolic and sign up for one of the three escapades enumerated in the daily stories.

Number one was girl directing traffic at semaphore in heart of city at noon rush hour, with uniformed theatre porter standing by with sandwich board announcing stunt, picture, theatre and playdate.

Number two was truck mounted with 24 sheet with one side blank on which seven high school girls water-colored surface previously lined out with pencil and when finished contained all copy of the regular 24 with theatre credits.

Number three was a tieup with hotel wherein luncheon was served on the sidewalk at postoffice corner (see photo) to young couple at noon time. Porter with theatre board was in attendance during the 30-minute period.

Another good hookup was a five-day driving contest sponsored by Ford dealer with masked girl locked to steering wheel of bannered new model sedan, stunt named "The Mystery Girl Escapade." Eight-foot timing dial was planted atop marquee with theatre designated as starting and finishing point, and at the finish girl rested in special bed in theatre foyer. Wally secured a co-op page on the stunt.

Also effective was an "Escapade" dance tieup with numbered lapel tickets containing theatre copy. These were pinned to the girls' dresses and men's coats. Copy read—"just as an escapade find the lady (man) with the duplicate of this number, then go with her (him) to the Valentine and receive free tickets to see, etc., etc."

Worthy of mention, too, was tiein with prominent store taking the form of a weighing scale backed by a large board about three sheet size. Reverse side of some of the weight tickets were printed with photos of the four principals and copy on board read—"if photo on back of your weight ticket corresponds to any of the members of the cast of 'Escapade,' it will be accepted as a guest ticket."

Theatre Booklets Aid Lincoln Houses

Members from the Lincoln Theatres Corp., of Lincoln, Neb., to judge from recent contributions hold in high regard the printed word in various forms. Prominent among these is a series of 16-page booklets, size about four by six, gotten out by Pat Patchen, Jerry Zigmond and John Echols for the Stuart and Lincoln Theatres.

The virtue of these advertisings is that the cost is undertaken by one single advertiser who is allowed a double spread and the back cover to plug his wares. The rest of the pages are given over to art layouts of mats from the exchanges, picture news and articles. One of the best of the booklets is entitled "Lincoln Theatres Digest" and following the "digest" style, has the contents on the front cover. For patron interest and "carry home" appeal there is nothing better, says Patchen.

Interesting pamphlets were also published on the occasion of the installation of a new cooling plant at the Lincoln, with descriptions of the workings of the system, picture and story of health superintendent pulling switch to start the machinery and other good reading. Also promoted on the cool opening was a special newspaper section, a first-time.

"Oldest Sweethearts" Party

Commendable was an "oldest sweethearts party put on by these showmen at the Stuart with full cooperation of the newspapers, over 130 couples who had passed their golden wedding anniversaries attending to see "Ginger." Front page stories and cuts of the guests were spotted for days ahead, and guests who desired transportation were taken to the theatre in special busses. Zigmond reports this as one of the biggest successes of the year.

Effective, too, was a headline stunt on "G Men" wherein old copies of newspapers were obtained and headlines printed in red sniped across the front pages. Boys passed these around town shouting "extra" (see photo) and the stunt went over well since street ballys of any kind are not allowed.

Flash---

Put down what you're doing, folks, and catch yourselves a large earload of the hottest news that's come down the pike in many a day.

The 1935 Quigley Grand Awards are to be presented in Hollywood.

Yes, sir, two of you showmen now reading these lines are slated to travel to Hollywood—to Studioland—for the time of your lives. Production will extend a hearty welcome to showmanship when the Grand Award winners journey to the Coast to receive their honors and partake of a week of that famed California hospitality.

And that ain't all! No, sir. For as an additional award, your Round Table is going to do a Santa Claus by providing the winning theatremen with round-trip transportation via plane — way up in the ether where you can see the country racing by from a luxurious, cloud-chasing, tri-motor air-pullman, highballin' to Hollywood.

Winners of 1935's monthly Silver and Bronze Quigley plaques are eligible for the Grand Awards and the Big Trip. And that means there is plenty of time in the five remaining months of the 1935 Competitions for showmen who haven't as yet clicked. Don't forget that the 1934 Grand Awards were voted on campaigns that won the December plaques, and that means the game isn't over until the last man is out.

The Vice-President of the United States, John Nance Garner, presented last year's Grand Awards in Washington to Managers Bill Hendricks, of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., and to Morris Rosenthal, of Loew's Poli, Bridgeport, Conn. 1935's Grand Award winners will also receive their honors in the Capital — the capital city of motion picture production.

Get goin', men. Six big days still remain until the deadline, Sept. 6, for the August Quigley Awards and four months additional before the gong rings to wind up the 1935 Competitions. The race is wide open.

Read next week's Round Table for further "news-from-home" on that million-dollar trip out to the Pacific where the big stars twinkle, "cumup 'n see me sometime".

Various Activities At Smalley Theatres

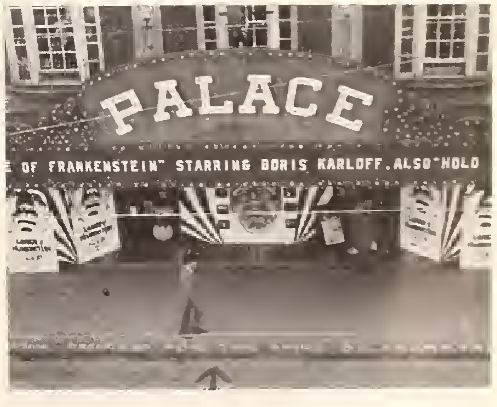
What has been done to buck the hot weather by the Smalley Theatres is recounted by W. C. Smalley, president and general manager of this aggressive circuit, among the recent accomplishments being the engagement for three days of Paul Whiteman and his band in person at the Smalley, Johnstown, N. Y. Tremendous advance campaign gave capacity business on the date.

Mr. Smalley also reports successful stage weddings in conjunction with dates on "Wedding Night" and a most amusing attraction has proven to be the milking contest put on usually in the summer resort towns and very popular with the visitors from the city.

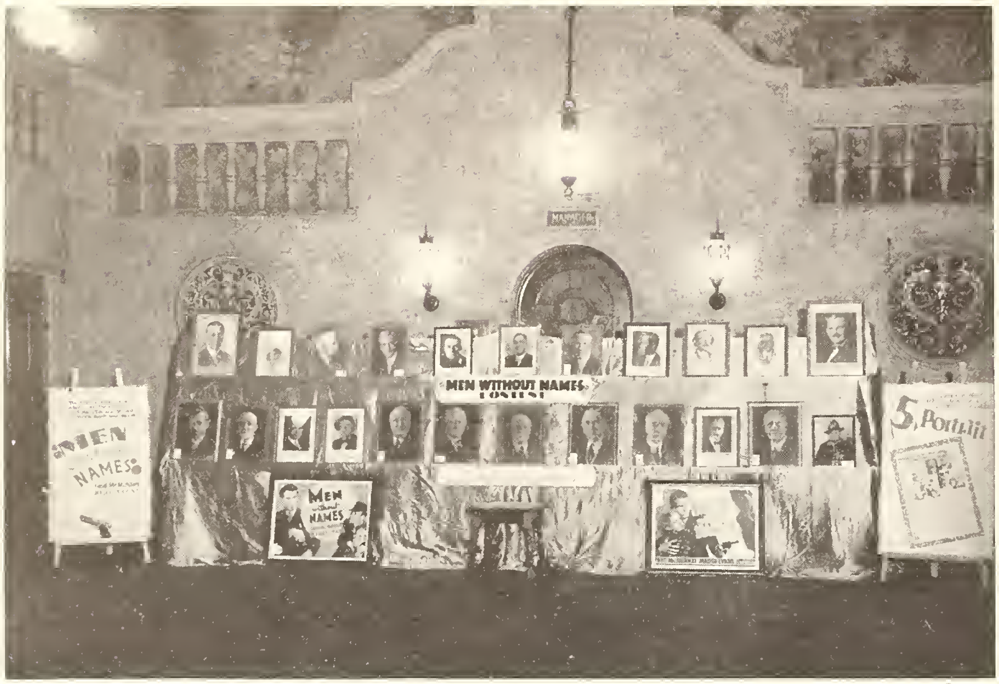
Radio audition nights are run in all the Smalley houses over WGY, which station plugs the circuit especially when winners of the auditions are broadcasting. Mr. Smalley says that these added attractions have proven helpful in keeping up the grosses in the face of the warm weather.

Egan's Black and White Front

The total absence of color in his "Bride of Frankenstein" front was a sure-fire attraction getter according to Pete Egan, Palace Theatre, Calgary. Whole thing was done effectively in blacks and whites and Pete calls attention to the "no parking" sign.



Egan's Attractive "Frankenstein" Front



There is a photographer in Cleveland who makes a hobby of taking pictures of great men, and his collection of those whose names are linked daily in national affairs, Manager J. G. Newkirk, of Loew's Granada, was able to borrow for a lobby contest on "Men Without Names." Names on 10 photos were blanked out, replaced with numbers, and first person sending in correct list on coupon furnished by theatre had his picture taken free by co-operating photographer.

Spradley's "Mouse" Matinee

Recently the Biltmore Theatre in Miami. Fla. celebrated its fifth Mickey Mouse Birthday Club with Gordon Spradley doing the honors. Refreshments were served and all "guests" received miniature Shirley Temple figurettes. Local children put on special show and boy scouts helped keep order.

Waltmon Stages Beauty Contest on "Caliente"

"Who'll be Miss Caliente?" asked Burgess Waltmon, Orpheum Theatre, Fulton, Ky., and the fun began. Newspapers, dodgers, heralds, etc., etc., carried the good word that one of Fulton's local girls would be selected to bear that title for the duration of the picture. Winner was presented with engraved silver loving cup and contest broke front pages.

Local auto dealer staged parade of cars bannered "tops in entertainment, tops in automobiles." Arrangements were made to have film brought from Memphis by plane, with attractive girl bringing it from airport to theatre, followed by school band and bannered trucks.

Another highlight of Waltmon's campaign was tieup with leading department store, who devoted one window to display of "lady in red" dresses and another for living models modeling "Caliente" hose. Wires were sent to the Tuesday and Thursday Night Bridge Club advising them that high score winners would be welcomed as guests of the theatre.

Personal Contact Is Important Duty

by DICK WRIGHT

District Manager, Warner Ohio Theatres

Your combined efforts of advertising, exploitation and promotional activity are designed to attract people to your theatre, but successful theatre management demands more of you than these accomplishments. In the course of your many activities in selling your attractions and consistently plugging to keep your theatre in the limelight, have you ever stopped long enough to give serious thought to the extent of your own personal contact with your patrons?

After you have succeeded in drawing them to your theatre, does it not seem logical that they should find a genial manager to greet them and to make them feel that you are not merely a job holder but that you have distinguished yourself as a cordial host?

Meet Your Patrons

Achieving this desirable effect requires that you must devote your attentions unceasingly toward making your patrons conscious of your presence and your contact with them. This you can do only by planning your work so that at the peak matinee hour and evening performances, as well as your intermission breaks, your time can be devoted to greeting your patrons and making your presence felt in the lobby, foyer, and in general on the floor of your theatre. It is only a natural human trait that your patrons like to feel that there is some definite personality present. It gives them a feeling of assurance that as manager you are on the job, looking out for their comfort and complete enjoyment of your program.

Personal contact should be one of your first duties as a manager. If you have sold your own personality consistently to your patrons, their reaction will instinctively be favorable and automatically you will have established a feeling of friendship and popularity toward your house. When you have accomplished this you have fortified yourself with one of the most important requisites of successful theatre operation.

Outside Contacts Valuable

Quite as valuable is your contact with the public outside of your theatre. Make yourself an integral part of your community and its activities. Associate yourself with local organizations, tie in with every civic affair, and watch for opportunities of rendering a service to your community. With each contact your name is linked with that of your theatre, and you are thereby indirectly making your theatre a part of the local community life. Eventually you will have established yourself and your theatre so firmly in the minds of every one about you that you will become an inseparable part of community activities, a distinction which is bound to help you succeed.

Concentrate on your contacts . . . don't permit a let down . . . every minute you devote to this type of activity today, is worth an hour tomorrow.

I'M PUZZLED!

On every hand I have heard the demand for "Better motion pictures."

I do everything in my power to get the producers to make "better" pictures. That's part of my job.

The producers are making "better" pictures . . . Yet when one of them comes along, the public has a perverse way of staying away from the theatre!

What I want to know is . . . Where are all these people who are always demanding that the movies get away from sex and crime and hokum and all the rest of what these self appointed critics of the movies criticize most?

Certainly none of them have been at the Huntington on Sunday to see Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" which is as fine a piece of screen entertainment as ever ran through a projection machine.

If they had been there . . . they would have gone out and sound the glad tidings in such loud and joyous tones that the theatre would have been backed to the doors.

But it hasn't been . . . and that's why I'm puzzled. If the public really wants better pictures, why doesn't it say so at the box office. That's the only way we have of knowing your desires.

If you read this and are one of those who demanded better pictures, you have two chances left to see one that answers your plea. "Les Miserables" showing Monday and Tuesday.

Lancaster Is Puzzled And Tells His Patrons So

Mississippian Speaks of Money And Time-Saving Ideas In This Article of Club Series on Art

by AUSTIN A. NORTHCUTT

Art Director,
Strand Amusement Co., Laurel, Miss.

AUSTIN A. NORTHCUTT

In our theatres, we try to take advantage of all available space. Many nooks and corners can be found that are ideal spots for standees, shadow boxes and one-sheets. We fill up the lobby, so to speak, but not to the extent that it is cluttered up and causes the patrons to wend their way among it with difficulty. Blank spaces, such as that over doorways, make ideal locations for flashy display and gives more color to the lobby. Enough display pieces to artistically "set off" a lobby is pleasing to the public eye, but too much throws them into confusion. A thing over-done loses its merit.

There are very few poster artists who are not rushed for time, or "overworked," as the artist himself elects to express it; and often this expression is not amiss. The following is a scheme that will save time and material in the long run:

Instead of painting three-sheets on each picture, an assortment of "stock" three-sheet sizes can be made up (or any other size, for that matter) on wallboard. The backgrounds can be painted to depict definite types of pictures, emotions, etc. The subjects are too numerous to mention. Or, different stars can be the subjects of the posters.

Poster Can Be Used Again

On these is a frame made of wallboard and covered with metallics or painted and nailed with pins. In these are fitted insert cards. These cards, of course, carry the name of the players and the picture title, and they serve excellently as a lettering panel ordinarily would. Where the stars' pictures are the subjects, the names can be painted and the titles changed from time to time.

When a picture is dead, the poster can be put away until the next time the star or, as in the case of the "type" poster, a picture of that type is again played. More time can be saved in using heads or figures of the stars, as they can be taken from lithographs and mounted. The best method is to take the pictures as they come and make these posters for them until enough have accumulated to complete a "cycle." It doesn't take very long.

It is best to have great enough a variety to let the public have time to forget a poster before bringing it into use again. Many artists do not like to use lithographed heads, as a posterization has striking effects that lithographs usually lack. This is optional, of course, and much can be said for both sides of the argument. It is also optional as to whether or not to use insert cards. The writer has found them ideal in this case. The same methods work nicely in making standees.

There are artists who use opaque water colors almost exclusively. However, the constant use of one medium day in and day out has a tendency to make the lobby become stale. A clever display man will employ variety in mediums as well as in color schemes. Pastel, oil, velour, airbrush, etc., should have as much place in the lobby as flat water colors. Even certain designs of wall paper have been used with amazing effects. A person with any artistic mind at all has judgment as to what medium to use on a definite type of picture or player. A delicate airbrush poster would not be in order on a "Frankenstein" or Wallace Beery picture.

Many shops, especially those in small theatres, are very poorly equipped and the artist is greatly handicapped. Yet, he is expected to turn out first class work. But, if he will make the best of the situation, the artist is usually able to improvise equipment that will "get him by." One artist had no air brush, but needed one with which to paint some modernistic backgrounds. He procured a substitute for only five cents!

Uses Insecticide Sprayer

An insecticide sprayer was taken (the kind that is blown with the mouth) and the opening reduced until it produced a very fine spray. After a bit of practice the lad had produced some wonderful results. The writer grabbed the idea and used it for quite a long time. Yes, it was a crude gadget, but nevertheless it served the purpose. Besides, it's good exercise for the lungs!

There are still some shops that have to carry on without the aid of a cutawl. It is the opinion of some that such things are impossible, but not so! A cutting machine can be made by rigging up a sewing machine head with a motor, and fastening them to a base made of Masonite wallboard or plate metal. It is a bit heavy, but where no better can be had, it can be used. Too, there is a knife on the market called the "Shorty" that is excellent for cutting straight lines. It is even preferred for this by some, as it is done quickly and smoothly, and it doesn't ruin the hands.

Much time is lost—or rather—spent in groping for "new" ideas. All of us have a tendency to "borrow" ideas from the other fellow, and one of the best sources for this is from a scrap book of photographic reproductions of the other fellow's work. The writer clips all the reproductions from the HERALD and pastes them in his scrap book in a classified manner. They are taken as they come, whether deemed excellent or poor, for often one can take the other person's bum idea and turn it into a good one.

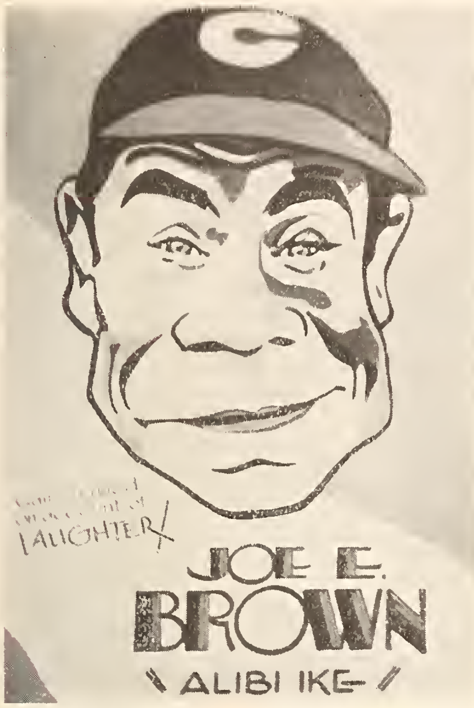
WHAT POSTER ARTISTS ARE DOING



LAUGHTER
JOE E.
BROWN ALIBI IKE

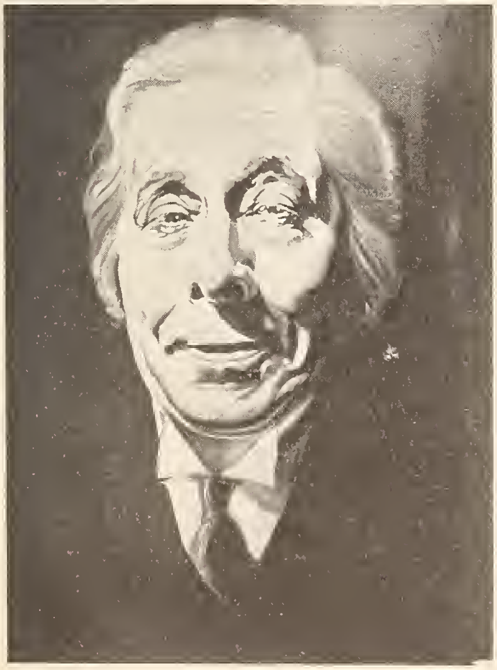
This attractive head of Joe E. Brown is the handiwork of Frestle Chenoweth, Rigney Theatre, Albany, Mo. Head was done in browns, red mouth, blue eyes, cap dark red, blue bill and white letter; background medium blue with yellow, and lettering black and red. Frestle has sent us some mighty interesting samples of his art work.

THE WALL OF HONOR. Above is a shot of one of the walls in the office of Warner Theatres Pittsburgh zone District Manager C. J. Latta, wherein is displayed and rather proudly the five First and Honorable Mentions won by his managers in the Quigley Awards competitions. The vacant space in the center, no doubt, is reserved for Chuck Shannon's June Bronze Plaque.



This head of Arliss was turned out by Sid Smith, artist at Loew's Grand, Atlanta, Ga. Head was done in oils on Upson board. Best part of this display is that it can be used repeatedly for other Arliss pictures. Sid has been turning in some very nice display photos on recent attractions, the above being an excellent example.

This 10-inch shadow box of "Public Hero No. 1" was constructed by Ralph Houpe of the Phoenix Amusement Company, Lexington, Ky., of which Anna Bell Ward is the assistant general manager. Flasher behind bars turned picture title on and off, sky was painted blue and red lights were reflected in windows of buildings. Display was used at the Ben Ali Theatre and reported eye-arresting to all those entering the lobby.

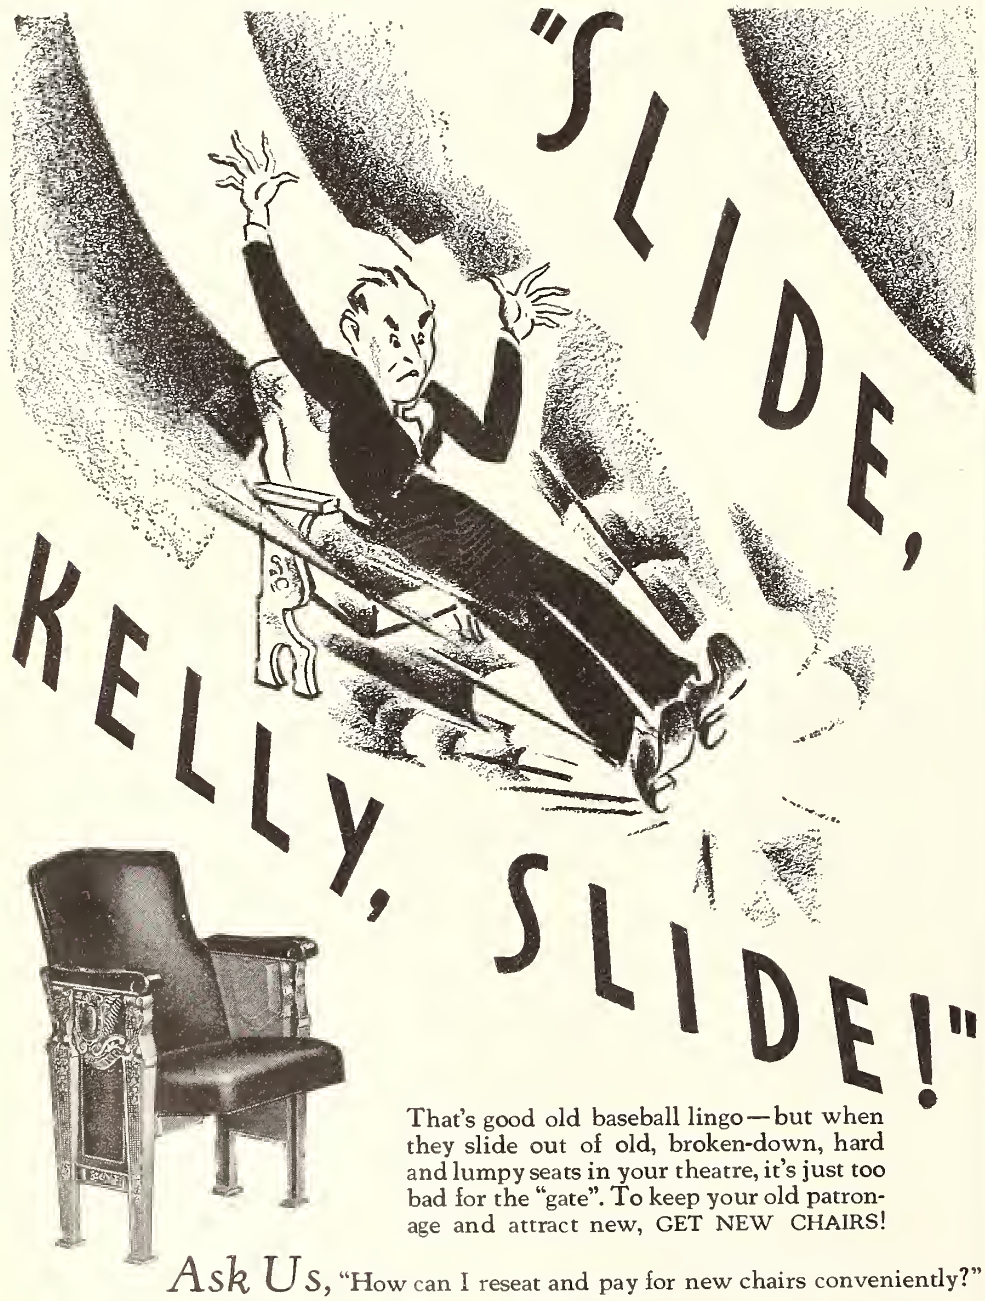
RCA Photophone Sales Force to Meet Sept. 4-5

Sales representatives of RCA Photophone, to the number of 45, will hold their annual convention at Camden, N. J., September 4-5, with E. M. Harley, manager of sales, presiding. A dinner is planned at the Tavistock Country Club. E. T. Cunningham, president of RCA Manufacturing Company, will be among the speakers, who will include Ted Wallerstein, John K. West, F. B. Osterman, Thomas F. Joyce, Max Batsel, W. L. Rothenberger and Richard T. Turner, each speaking on a different phase of company activities. Photophone plans to make Trans Lux rear projection equipment available to all, regardless of the make of installed equipment.

New York Independents Increasing House Totals

Independent circuits in the New York Metropolitan area are increasing their holdings. Several have added theatres during the past few weeks and new deals are in negotiation. Randforce has closed with Harry Shiffman, president of Isle Theatres, to take over the Oasis, Brooklyn. This will give Frisch and Rinzler a total of 48. Deals are in progress for two others in Brooklyn.

Peter and Sam Adams, who some time ago bought the Park Lane, Palisades Park, N. J., are about to assume operation of the Leonia, Leonia, N. J., now operated by Julius Charnow. Century is understood to have closed a pooling deal with Morris Kutinsky on Long Island.



That's good old baseball lingo—but when they slide out of old, broken-down, hard and lumpy seats in your theatre, it's just too bad for the "gate". To keep your old patronage and attract new, GET NEW CHAIRS!

SEES BANK NIGHT OF REAL VALUE

To the Editor of the Herald:

I note several articles written by exhibitors, also your editorials against Bank Nights but I want to, at the present, say in all sincerity that our Bank Nights have pulled us out with a black ink ledger, with our boot straps, so to speak.

Heretofore, in all small-town theatres in which I was connected and with acquaintance with dozens of small-town exhibitors those miserable mid-week were usually run at a loss. It is true that by spotting certain big pictures mid-week we might nose out, especially so, with putting plenty of dough into advertising—money that we had made on a previous Sunday show. With Bank Night they advertise themselves. Double features are not the answer in small towns, as much as the producers would try to so make us believe. You may call it a lottery or gamble or that One-Chance-in-a-Thousand-Shot but the fact remains that a customer hits now and then and walks out proudly with the pot. And, the other patrons come back for more the next mid-week which they would not do ordinarily, regardless of what the admissions were.

Furthermore, I am positive it keeps my patrons home more during mid-week—does not give them an opportunity to travel elsewhere, especially to larger cities, where they do hold Cash or Bank Nights or have the special shows ahead of us. They want to be in the theatre when the drawing is held, hence should they go out of town they might miss their opportunity.

From my point of view I can't see where this plan is so wrong. If betting on a horse or dog race or prize fight, if taking a chance on a punch board or a chance on the quilt at the Ladies Aid Society is wrong—then I'm wrong.

Anyway, when Old Gabriel blows his horn I don't believe he is going to ask me "where I got my money" but "have I got it."—E. C. Arehart, Manager, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa.

Mr. Arehart gets his say because he voices an honest opinion. However, we do not agree that race tracks, prize rings or even the quilt raffles of the Ladies Aid Society are to be taken as exemplars of the methods which obtain or should obtain in the conduct of motion picture theatres. The motion picture theatre to be a success must address itself to the entire community, not sporting minorities, and its season is the year around, not hit-and-run occasions. Concerning Mr. Arehart's reference to Gabriel, we are not so certain, but there has long been an impression abroad that after Gabriel sounds-off the cash balance will be considered irrelevant and immaterial.—T.R.

Lieber Signs With Warner

Fritz Lieber, Shakespearean actor, has signed a contract with Warner. Mr. Lieber's first role will be that of Dr. Charbonnet in "Enemy of Man," a picturization of the life of Dr. Louis Pasteur. Paul Muni will head the cast.

SENSATION

EASTMAN Super X Film was originally designed for rephotographing projected backgrounds. Yet because of its great speed it also won fame as the negative extraordinary for tough newsreel shots. And now it is being widely used for regular feature production, as well. Offering not only extra speed but generally improved photographic quality, Super X is unquestionably the sensation of the year in 35-millimeter raw film. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)
